Harmony

THE conductor of an orchestra, telling a story in music, never plays always loud, nor always soft, nor always in major or in minor. His baton guides his players through the varied effects that produce the enchanting harmony of a finished symphony. It is this variety, this ability to express moods in music, that is the conductor's mark of greatness.

IT IS this same versatility, the genius for expressing moods in film and using photographic effects to build up the theme of the photoplay, that brings success to makers of motion pictures. But just as an orchestra must follow the conductor's baton, so must a film laboratory follow the leadership of director and cinematographer in the presentation of their shadow symphony.

STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES are always watching the baton of the men making a motion picture. Having once determined what touches of light and shadow are best suited to the production, our organization follows faithfully their direction, retaining and strengthening all the photographic beauties caught by the camera. All their genius eventually is represented solely by photography, and this photography is best presented to the public through STANDARD PRINTS.

Mr. DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, You Ought to Know!

*In an interview in the Los Angeles Times,
Douglas Fairbanks said:*

"Have you seen GLORIA SWANSON in 'PRODIGAL DAUGHTERS'? Don't miss it. It is not only the best piece of acting Miss Swanson has ever done, but it is, I think, one of the most faithful film portrayals of contemporary social and family life that has been screened. It should be preserved under seal for showing fifty years from now to let our descendants know just what this Jazz Age really is.

"Mary and I run off films every night at home. Of late we have been seeing old news reels made about fifteen years ago. They are more interesting than plays.

"Gloria Swanson's new play, I firmly believe, will have a similar value fifteen or fifty years from now."

"Prodigal Daughters" is a Sam Wood Production.

Screen version by Monte M. Katterjohn.

From Joseph Hocking's novel.

Gentlemen:-

If exhibitors were forced to shop around from counter to counter to get their pictures, I think all of us would have to hire a lot of extra help or close up the house for a few days every month to see that we were going to get the right sort of material. Paramount's idea of giving us advance information for half a year solves the problem. We all know through past experience that Paramount lives up to its promises in regard to quality of productions. In fact, their goods have proved as staple as sugar and flour at the grocery store. We know in advance that we can depend on the program to give full satisfaction. We also have come to realize that a good percentage of the announced releases are something to be reckoned away out of the ordinary in entertainment value and potential box-office returns.

I want Paramount's new series of 39 pictures simply because I feel that they can be depended on to be just a little bit better than the goods I can buy elsewhere and my patrons instinctively have come to know the same thing.

Yours very truly,
PAUL J. SCHLOSSMAN COMPANY.

*Five Reels

A Laugh For Every Minute

Mack Sennett and Ben Turpin, fun-makers for the screen, never did a better job, never made a more uproariously funny picture than their latest burlesque, "The Shriek of Araby."

There isn't a dull moment in the whole five reels; there is a laugh for every minute; there is action that turns the laugh into a roar, and adventure that sends the roar into a shriek.

There are new laugh-producers, too — not just the same old gags worked over—but absolutely new stuff, and stuff as good as it is new; sure laugh-getters scattered all the way through.

MASTERS OF MEN—

from MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

“Vivid and vital and rich in its patriotic glow is ‘Masters of Men,’ which is sponsored by Vitagraph—a picture which this company may well feel proud of since it carries all the qualities which mark success. In the first place it is an adaptation of a vigorous story by Morgan Robertson and features a character study of a young American who found romance and adventure in his search for his soul. In fact the picture presents a double romance, plenty of conflict, a climax which moves with effective dramatic force.

(From Harrison's Reports)

If the word "knock-out" had not, on account of constant use, lost its power of expression, it could be used to denote the exact quality of "Masters of Men;" but such word will not do the picture justice now. Besides being interesting, appealing and thrilling, it is also refreshing, because different. It is a story of the sea, and surpasses any picture of this kind that has ever been produced.

From Moving Picture World

"For vivid action and primitive appeal it would be hard to improve on 'MASTERS OF MEN.' Vitagraph has, in this, an irresistible attraction."

NOT only is it an inspiring achievement from a picture viewpoint, but it is unrivaled in box-office drawing power. Never in the history of the industry has a picture smashed records with such readiness. Playing in the biggest houses everywhere, it is smashing all records as if they were everyday occurrences.

This is the same picture that scored a record run of three sensational months at the Lyric Theatre, New York City, and was hailed by critics and public as the most amazing African adventure picture of all time. In Philadelphia it proved an overnight sensation, opening with a smash and growing bigger and bigger within the capacity of the Forrest Theatre at each succeeding performance.

A wire from the Garden and Alhambra Theatres, Milwaukee, reads: "No less than superhuman skill could produce so remarkable a picture as 'Hunting Big Game.' Our opening day bigger than expected! Such a record-breaking response is most extraordinary and gratifying." The Columbia Theatre of Seattle, Wash., wired that, "in spite of opposition from another animal picture and all other competition all attendance records were broken." Similar results were experienced in Portland, Ore., at the Columbia Theatre. "Broke all known records—receipts more than double of any picture played this year," was the wired report received from that city.

From the Laughlin Theatre, Long Beach, Cal., comes another enthusiastic report:

"The Flirt" Cleaning-Up for Exhibitors

"THE FLIRT," one of the year's biggest successes, continues on its very successful way as attested by a few of the lines quoted below: "Did four weeks' big business!" reports the Cameo Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa. "Broke every house record!" Olympic Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y. "Breaks all house records!" Mozart Theatre, Canton, O. "Line a block long!" Majestic Theatre, Madison, Wis. "Tremendous success, record business!" Garden Theatre, Princeton, N. J.

"Opened to biggest single day's business in history of house—hundreds turned away; nothing but praise from patrons, greatest they had ever seen!" In Colorado Springs, the Tompkins Theatre wires: "Opened big, going to hold over next week. Congratulations, patrons delighted at seeing something entirely new." Other wires from Columbus, O., New Haven, New Britain and Bridgeport, Conn., bring the news that the picture has scored tremendous hits.

This is an ideal picture for every exhibitor, particularly well suited for the Summer months, and with the exceptional advertising and exploitation press sheets conceived by Universal for it, it is one production no showman can afford to overlook.

Milwaukee Opens Its Arms to "Driven"

FOLLOWING the literally sensation-ally favorable reviews given "Driven" by the critics, Milwaukee fans turned out in huge crowds to see this Universal Jewel, hailed as the most perfectly stage, directed, acted and constructed story of the year.

The Empire Theatre wired that they "closed a four-day run and turned them away even on the fourth night," and the Butterfly Theatre that "'Driven' was greeted by tremendous crowds and assures the public of the finest entertainment and exhibitors of big box office receipts." Universal is promoting "Driven" with national advertising in the Saturday Evening Post and extensive exploitation and publicity co-operation.

Third "Leather Pusher" Series Soon Reginald Denny Starred in Another Cork- ing Series to Be Released by Universal!

Reginald Denny and Elinor Field in a scene from the Third "Leather Pusher" series—the bigger and better de Luxe edition.

THE first and second series were such phenomenal money-makers for exhibitors everywhere, and the demand for these two-reel Jewels continued to be so great, that Carl Laemmle has a third group in production which will be ready for exhibitors very shortly. This new group of six is by the same author, H. C. Witwer, famous for his red-blooded stories of action and humor which will be known as the Third Leather Pushers, de Luxe Edition.

It is reported from Universal that this de-Luxe series is far superior to even the first two groups, when it comes to lightning speed, terrific suspense, heart-interest and box-office punch.

The same winning cast which made the first two series of "Leather Pushers" so successful will appear in this new group; Reginald Denny plays the lead, of course, and Hayden Stevenson, his inimitable smiling manager, with Elinor Field as the girl in the case. Harry Pollard is now busy directing these pictures, for which exhibitors and public are anxiously waiting.

"The Flame of Life" a Countrywide Triumph

PRISCILLA DEAN'S latest Universal Jewel production continues to clean up for exhibitors in a most satisfactory fashion. Reports continue to pour in from many cities testifying to the fact that this is one of the greatest of the year's box-office attractions!

During the sensational run of this feature at the Randolph in Chicago, the Herald and Examiner said, "It deserves praise above the ordinary," while the Evening Post enthusiastically commented, "One of the most vivid and entertaining productions we have seen this season—especially well worth seeing." In New York, the Daily News said, "Carl Laemmle, Universal chief, rings the bell with 'The Flame of Life'—we think highly of it!" "An example of realism, is entertaining, all kinds of action and it is exciting," says the Buffalo Courier; while out in Seattle, the Record insists that "You will be cheating yourself if you miss it!" Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Los Angeles, and other important centers have likewise deluged this production with praise.

"The Storm" Still Breaking House Records!

"The Storm" continues to roll up new box-office records, according to the flood of exhibitor reports on this Universal Jewel.

"First picture I've played since the war that stood them out two days," Orpheum Theatre, Quinton, Okla. "Drew capacity crowds for two days," Strand Theatre, Kingsport, Tenn. "Beats a lot of million dollar specials at box-office," Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburgh, Ill. "You can't go wrong," Liberty Theatre, St. Louis, Mo.

Carl Laemmle Asks Exhibitors to Set Dates for "The Shock"

Bristling with thrills—replete with a heart interest story that is sure to appeal to any audience, Universal's Jewel production of "The Shock" is shortly to be released to exhibitors.

The remarkable cast of this Jewel is headed by Lon Chaney, and Virginia Valli. Lambert Hillyer directed.

A whirlwind publicity and exploitation campaign has been prepared for exhibitors by Universal including national advertising in the Saturday Evening Post.

Trade Press and Newspaper Critics Lavish Praise on "Abysmal Brute"

New Universal Jewel Starring Reginald Denny Scores Heavily Everywhere!

SELDOME does a picture receive the thunderingly enthusiastic reception such as has been accorded "The Abysmal Brute." Their prophecy of a great box-office career for it is being substantiated by sensationally successful runs in all points.

"It will prove one of the season's best box-office values," declares Exhibitors Trade Review, while Laurence Reid of the Motion Picture News says: "It's a fine box-office attraction! Get it quick!"

During its highly successful run at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre, New York City, the newspaper critics greeted it with most lavish praise. "It is a credit to its star and director," said P. W. Gallico in The Daily News. "We enjoyed it and think you will."

"As entertaining as anything we have seen this season. Don't miss it!" was Harriett Underhill's comment in The Tribune.

It's a Hobart Henley Production, starring Reginald Denny, supported by a superb cast, including Mabel Julianne Scott, Buddy Messenger, Hayden Stevenson, Craufurd Kent and David Torrance.

Reginald Denny, Mabel Julianne Scott and Craufurd Kent in scene from "The Abysmal Brute," hailed by critics as a masterpiece of entertainment, by trade press as a big box-office bet.

"Bavu" Keeps You Glued to Your Seat, Writes Famous Coast Critic

Universal has another ten-strike for exhibitors in "Bavu," soon to be released. The thrill-hardened critics who have reviewed this Universal Jewel have been the first to hail it.

"It keeps you glued to your seat and your eyes glued to the screen every second," writes Grace Kingsley, famous critic, in the Los Angeles Times. "It's bound to be a sensation when it's sprung on the public. Tremendous work is done by Wallace Beery, while Forrest Stanley does perhaps the finest work of his career. Sylvia Breamer touches unvonted emotional heights and Estelle Taylor is lovely and convincing."

With such a superb cast, and its "everlastingly exciting" story, "Bavu" promises to be a sparkling box-office stimulant of sensational powers. It was made from the great stage success by Earl Carroll, and directed by Stuart Paton.

"Trifling With Honor" a Fine Audience Picture

With a background of varied and colorful action, this new Jewel, just received in the New York office of Universal from Universal City, tells in straightforward, vigorous fashion a beautiful modern romance. It is particularly noteworthy at this time that there is a baseball angle to the picture which is guaranteed to bring any audience to its feet with suspense and enthusiasm. Exhibitors have the greatest opportunity of their lives to make tie-ups that will put this picture over to new records.

Heading the cast are Rockcliffe Fellowes, Fritz Ridgway, Buddy Messenger, Hayden Stevenson and others, all well known and popular.

The picture is adapted from a Collier's Weekly story by William Slavens McNutt and is directed by Harry Pollard, whose amazingly successful direction of "The Leather Pushers" are still the talk of the trade.

Your patrons will thrill to the answer in this, a drama that mirrors the lives we sometimes envy, sometimes try hard to forget.

A story as poignant, as appealing and as true to life as any drama dares to come. It tells in bold, slashing strokes of the people who choose their lives and of some of the roads they travel—of a wife who walked the lonely road in marriage and the child who kept her there.

Drama for wives and husbands — drama that makes them think.

Motion Picture News

Chicago

THE National Convention of exhibitors in Chicago—May 19th to 26th—will mark a vital stage, perhaps a turning point, in national exhibitor organization.

That is a prediction based upon these evident facts:

The development to date of a number of powerful state units.

The recognition, at last, that the importance of exhibitor organization justifies the means to the end; and that the means consist, first and foremost, of an adequate treasury whose funds shall be supplied—not by make-shift schemes—but by the exhibitor members themselves in the form of membership dues.

The activity everywhere in organization matters of prominent and successful exhibitors—men who have in the past given up at times in despair but who are back with a determination, now, to put this thing over.

In other words: there are enough state groups powerful enough and enough leaders determined enough to build at last a well financed, active, functioning national organization.

And Chicago will be the building ground.

Just how the plans of the national edifice will be drawn remains to be seen.

But this much is certain: there will be interest enough in this Chicago gathering to take there every exhibitor who is in this business to stay.

And, we also predict, every producer and distributor will want to get on the side lines and watch the foundation laying of what promises to be an exhibitor body capable of meeting with group strength and intelligence its Federal and State relations and its industrial problems.

Can a National organization be built—some-what from the top down, by fostering its state units, or—

Can national organization arrive only after the state units have first, of their own efforts, become powerful enough to make by juncture a national body, or

Should the unit organizations be formed by trade territorial divisions—out of the key city centres—rather than by state or geographical lines?

These are fundamental questions.

As is also the problem of how to raise, through dues, a national annual budget of at least one hundred thousand dollars.

These are questions for Chicago to decide.

There will be held an exposition—of film and accessory manufacturers—in connection with the exhibitor convention.

An experience with thirteen previous expositions, one of which was held by the Board of Trade at Madison Square Garden—makes it difficult to enthuse over them; and the national exhibitor body of the future will, we believe, not need them.

But there is this to be said, in fairness: the best of all these past expositions was held in Chicago, and by all reports the Chicago people are going at this one in a way that will duplicate their previous success. Furthermore, this important convention with the large exhibitor attendance it assures, makes an exposition a natural addition and to the practical film man, a desirable one.

Sidney Cohen will open the convention with a national organization he has fought hard to maintain. Whatever his mistakes, it is a fact that the great body of exhibitor members are strongly and sympathetically with him. They have found him on the level and they like and respect him for his hard work and self sacrifice.

He will not, he states, be a candidate for reelection. Some strong leaders are looming up for the office of President.

And it is important to elect the right man. But more important still and far more to the moment than convention politics is the sane business thought that will make a plan and a budget which—and only which—will in turn make a national organization.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

TERRY RAMSAYE, who is writing a history of the motion picture for Photoplay, is a stickler for accuracy. In speaking of the death of Andrew Holland of Ottawa, he points out that the deceased's picture pioneering was even a little earlier than the motion picture as we know it today. Mr. Holland was formerly associated with the Edison Kinetoscope which has been marked Exhibit A by various writers who termed it a projection machine, while properly it was a peep show machine and is interesting today as the machine in which the motion picture was born.

Holland Brothers' show, a "Kinetoscope Parlor," was at 1115 Broadway, in 1894. James H. White, then with the Edison company and still in the picture business in New York, installed the machines. Three years later Edison built his first projection machine and called it the "Projecting Kinetoscope." But this was after Woodville Latham's significant but unsatisfactory demonstration of his "eidoloscope" in April 1895, and also after Thomas Armat of Washington had built and marketed the first successful projection machine in a commercial sense—the Vitascope sold by Raff and Gammon, Edison agents.

THE London newspapers and trade press are heaping encomiums upon Felix Orman, the American scenarist and purveyor of publicity, for his work in association with J. Stuart Blackton while the producer was in the British capital. Mr. Orman did the script for the Blackton production, "The Glorious Adventure," besides acting in the capacity of casting director.

MARY ALDEN has been rewarded by Metro with a starring contract after many seasons of faithful service on the screen. This gifted character actress will see her name emblazoned in electric lights in "The Eagle's Feather."

AS the robin is a harbinger of spring, just so surely does a letter from Frank Rembusch precede the annual national convention of exhibitors. We always look for this letter. We are even lax about remembering the convention date. When the letter arrives then we begin to make definite plans for tickets and hotel reservations. This time it is a long letter which is a clear indication that the convention will be a red-hot one. Boiled down, the letter says that positively, under no circumstances, will Mr. Rembusch attend this convention but in all probability, yes undoubtedly, he will be there in person. Of course!

What would a convention be without Frank Rembusch? That is the real joy of his motion picture life. Between conventions he just puts in his time building up chains of theatres. Just now he has a string of twenty, and liking and respecting him as we do, we hope that he won't talk himself again into an organization job. But—you can't stop him anyway. He has been working just as hard as ever this year for other exhibitors—on the music tax. And we do like his platform—an exhibitors organization for exhibitors only.

WE are always willing to be corrected. In a review of American Releasing's picture, "Vengeance of the Deep," which appeared in last week's NEWS we mentioned that "while the marine shots are of the studio, they are fashioned in a realistic manner." Fred Warren, the vice-president of A. R. writes us that the company that made the picture went to Honolulu, spending over $8,000 in transportation, fares and hotel bills and not one scene of their marine stuff was made anywhere near a studio, all of it having been done under water about six miles from Honolulu.

This only goes to prove how realistic are the under water shots—so much so, that we could not consider it possible for any cameraman to take them unless he resorted to such properties as the tank. It is a big feather in his cap that he has made them so vivid and clear.

HAZEL DEANE, new Christie leading lady, is seriously ill at the Clara Barton hospital, suffering from peritonitis. She was taken sick suddenly on the day when a new picture was to be started. Best wishes for a speedy recovery.

THE effect of American films on a majority of the Chinese race was discussed in Seattle recently by Julean Arnold, United States attache to China, in a lecture to the students at the University of Washington. The power of motion pictures to accomplish real constructive work among the Chinese was cited by Mr. Arnold in the instance of the manner in which American educational films have revolutionized the silk industry in the Orient. After watching many slap-stick comedies, Mr. Arnold said, the Chinese nation, to a great extent, believes that it is quite customary for an American wife to chase her husband through the city brandishing a rolling pin, or that American husbands are in the habit of throwing their wives from the top of twelve-story buildings onto the pavement below.

Better feed them some of our westerns and show them that America is inhabited by he-men who are always gracious to the ladies.

ELAIN HAMMERSTEIN has come to New York to attend the premier presentation of "Broadway Gold," which will probably take place within the near future. The star and Edward Dillon, the director, who has also come to Gotham for conference with Truett officials, are spending the greater portion of their time visiting the current plays and reading stories, as no selection has as yet been made for the next picture.

A WEST coast breeze has brought us word that the script for "The Magic Skin," which will be produced under the Goldwyn banner, has been completed by Charles E. Whitaker, who journeyed across the desert to adapt the widely read Balzac classic, "The Wild Ass's Skin."

THE predictions made at past hearings on the question of censorship in New York state, that censorship of pictures would become the opening wedge for censorship of the press and literary publications, at least in New York state, bore fruit the past week, when the state assembly passed a bill which has raised a furore among New York state publishers, and whose provisions could be twisted into a censorship of the press. While the bill is intended to wipe out obscene literature, its provisions are so wide that many contend it will exact a hardship upon every publishing firm in the state.

It is doubtful, however, if the the senate passes the bill. In view of the fact that the New York state senate recently passed a bill repealing motion picture censorship, the same body of men could hardly be expected to pass a measure calling for the censorship of publications.

"There is no doubt in regard to the sincerity of the framers of this bill, in that they seek to curb the publication of certain types of erotic books," said Speaker Machold of the Assembly, "but in this they have prepared what virtually amounts to a censorship of the press."

THE Bray Company has just finished by special request of the U. S. Bureau of Public Health Service a series of twelve one-reel subjects entitled "The Science of Life," which should be on the program of every exhibitor in America, since it was designed as a course of visual instruction, the first ever produced, covering general biology, communicable diseases, and personal hygiene. The subject not merely makes biology, which sounds so forbidding, as simple as "A B C," but it also makes it as fascinating as a novel. The film is considered a most important contribution toward the betterment of the health of our citizenry.

JACOB KAROL, president of Jacob Karol Film, G. M. B. H. Berlin, Germany, will visit the United States this month for the purpose of connecting with American distributors to dispose of the rights for the North American and South American markets. Herr Karol is sponsoring the Maciste films as well as two circus spectacles. The pictures have been sold for all countries of the European continent—as well as for China and Japan.

AN announcement of much import is the entry of Gene Stratton-Porter, the authoress, in the picture industry as an independent producer. There is perhaps no person in the business or out of it, for that matter, who has the allegiance of the public to the extent of Mrs. Porter, who in her chosen field, that of fiction writer, has reached a position so high that no other author is even a good second. Good Housekeeping announced last January that with the solitary exception of the Bible, Gene Stratton-Porter's novels have had greater sales than any other books in the history of literature.

Even without bringing this prestige to the industry the advent of the authoress would be worthy of more than passing comment, because of the story back of it. From the time of the 700 foot feature she has been an ardent fan. She was pleased when she received an offer for the picture rights to any one of her books. Selecting one of the most popular, with faith in the screen to humanize it, she was disappointed to discover that nothing remained of the original story except the main title and the name of the characters. She made no squawk that pictures were impossible, but retained her belief that pictures were and are the greatest medium of entertainment ever devised.

So Mrs. Porter went to Los Angeles to observe the making of motion pictures. A year ago she organized her own company to produce "Michael O'Halloran," which has sold over a million copies as a book. This picture will be released in July.

LESLEY MASON, editor and publisher of The Screen Mirror, is to be congratulated upon his venture of furnishing the film fans with up-to-the-minute photographs of productions and personalities. The magazine carries a slogan: Every Picture tells a Story, and is well made-up and captioned and of a size which can be easily looked over, even in a crowded subway train. We look for Lesley to get quick results as there are sixteen pages of photographs which range all the way from views of current and forthcoming releases to the personalities who appear in them. In addition there are two fashion pages which will give the girls an inkling of what their favorite

IT is not our purpose to record any non-stop dancing records which are furnishing copy these days in the press, but we will put down that Thomas Lee Woolwine, Jr., son of the district attorney of Los Angeles, tied with Harry Harts, the racing driver, dancing with Helen Thomas, for the weekly dancing contest cup at the Ambassador Cocoanut Grove last week. The judges were Alan Hale, who formerly shook a toe or ten in musical comedies, Kathleen Clifford and Clara Horton. Other society items from the Coast tell us that Alice Terry is appearing at the Cocoanut Grove in her own black locks, minus the golden wig which is so familiar to the picture public—that Carmel Myers is wearing one of the very latest King Tut embroidered gowns—that autograph hunters are the latest thing at the Ambassador Cocoanut Grove and that the back of a menu is the vehicle for carrying the much-sought-for signatures.

THERE has been a deal of agitation the past two years over censorship. Certainly the pictures have a lot to contend with in combating the evils which would deny them real expression. Self appointed censors and otherwise are everywhere in our midst telling the industry what is art and what is not. This dictatorial campaign toward uplifting (?) the screen is not restricted to any particular state or community.

Out in Mason City, Iowa, the Ku Klux Klan have a klonklave and recently they visited the Palace—a delegation of twenty—and protested against the showing of the Chaplin picture, "The Pilgrim," unmindful of the fact that the clergy which looked it over, found no cause for censure, although the manager was willing to cut out the interior of the church scenes. Be it said for the ministers that they tried to pacify the Klan, but it was of no avail.

Manager Ravencroft, however, went ahead and showed the feature regardless of the Klan objection, inasmuch as he considered the ministers satisfied with the picture.

We compliment Mr. Ravencroft in standing up for his rights. Had he acceded to the wishes of the Klan, it is possible that he might be visited again with the consequences that he might lose his clientele if self-appointed moral uplifters advised him what to run on his screen.

The Mason City Times says a special showing of the film for the pastors and laymen and a committee of the local organization of the Mason City K. K. K. was arranged for seven o'clock and in the discussion which followed this showing, Mr. Ravencroft agreed to cut out about 200 feet of the film. Headed by Dr. W. G. Skidmore the committee members of the K. K. K. stated that they were utterly opposed to the type of film similar to "The Pilgrim" being shown in Mason City and that they would keep in touch with the offerings coming here in order to prevent the necessity of another delegation such as that which called upon the theatre manager the other day.

Chicago Convention Plans Shaping

M.P.T.O.A. Board of Directors Arrange Details for Event Set for May 21-26

A NUMBER of important features were associated with the pre-convention meeting of the National Board of Directors, and other officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America held in Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Friday, April 20.

The convention committee fixed the dates of the 1923 convention of the national organization from May 21 to 26 inclusive, and the Motion Picture Palace of Progress dates from May 19 to May 26. The convention and exposition will be held in the Chicago Coliseum. This action was approved and the work of the convention committee endorsed and the entire list of national officers constituted a supplementary committee to assist in the work.

President Sydney S. Cohen presented a report on the convention which showed a very constructive program with many distinguished men and women in official, professional, industrial and commercial life to take part in the sessions.

This special report was unanimously endorsed.

President Cohen's report on organization affairs was very comprehensive and detailed the outstanding work of the national organization for the year. He told of the organization of the theatre owners of New York State in conformity with a resolution adopted at the meeting of the national directors immediately following the Washington convention. He showed the progress made in that State in organization and the complete response of all independent theatre owners.

The advance made by "Movie Chats" and the general and wide-spread use of this reel was commended on very favorably. He also made reports on the Music Tax situation, the Uniform Contract Conference held in New York, National legislative matters and the work done on the same, and the preparation of a budget for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for the fiscal year. A number of other important matters were discussed in detail in his report.

Those present at the meeting were National President Sydney S. Cohen, New York; Vice-Presidents Joseph Mogler, St. Louis, Mo., and Joseph G. Rhode, Kenosha, Wis.; National Directors A. R. Pramer, Omaha, Nebr.; W. D. Burford, Aurora, Ill.; M. C. Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis, Minn.; Claude Cady, Lansing, Mich.; E. M. Fay, Providence, R. I.; W. A. True, Hartford, Conn.; R. F. Woodhull, Dover, N. J.; Executive Committee Members: Harry Davis, Pittsburgh, Pa.; J. C. Retter, Detroit, Mich.; Fred Seegert, Milwaukee, Wis., and T. L. Hays, Minneapolis, Minn.; M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the National Public Service Committee acted as secretary for the Board.

J. J. Rubens, Chicago manager for the Motion Picture Palace of Progress, reported that very gratifying progress was being made in connection with the big exposition which made it certain that it would be the greatest presentation of moving picture elements in the history of the industry.

Messrs. Davis, Woodhull and Comerford were constituted a committee to handle the Motion Picture Palace of Progress situation in New York.

Review Board Secretary Passes Away

W. D. McGuire, Jr., executive secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, died Tuesday night, April 17, at Derby, Conn., from illness following an operation for appendicitis. Mr. McGuire, who was a resident of Scarsdale, N. Y., had been connected with the National Board since its organization in 1909, as a committee of the People's Institute, first as review secretary, later succeeding John Collier as executive secretary.

In this capacity Mr. McGuire devoted himself to the affairs of the Board, in which he had taken a leading part up to its present development. He was also vice-chairman of the National Committee for Better Films, affiliated with the National Board.

Trainer Injured When Mad Elephant Charges

"Charlie," the elephant, preceded by his trainer, "Curly Joe" Stecker, was heading the movie circus parade down the long "set" while men and women cheered him from either side. The gaudy procession was suddenly halted when the elephant cavorted and charged. Stecker, in his efforts to quiet the animal, was seized and lifted high in the air. So tightly was he held in the elephant's trunk that two ribs were fractured.

The climax came when the screaming beast drew Stecker's head in its mouth. Carl Stecker, a brother of the trainer, probably saved a life by remaining on the scene and beating the animal with a heavy stick. Studio workmen and extras arrived with spears and the trainer was dropped to the ground suffering from concussion of the brain, in addition to the fractured ribs.

N. V. A. Benefit on Coast Nets $15,000

The Cocoanut Grove supper dance and benefit performance for the N. V. A. held in the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, netted the organization $15,000. A three-ring circus was taged in which the following artists participated: Bert Lytell, Alice Lake, Houdini, Buster Keaton, Duncan Sisters, Larry Semon, and a score of other stars.

The entire Grove, with Lyman's orchestra, had been turned over to the artists by A. Frank, general manager of the Ambassador Hotel Corporation, together with a police permit to run the party as late as they chose. Things started quietly enough, and it was not until after midnight when Buster Keaton and Larry Semon crawled around the floor as amateur sleuths looking for some money for the N. V. A., while Alice Lake did a Hula Hula and Frisco danced with Katherine McDonald, that things began to really warm up.

Ben Piazza, manager of the Los Angeles Hillstreet theatre, had arranged a vaudeville performance which included Fred Stone and his entire Company, Houdini in a sensational escape, the Six Brown Brothers, the Duncan Sisters, the Four Fords, the Cansinos, Miss Dorothy Jardon, Jan Rubini, Lew Brice, Max and Mortiz, Frisco, Dan Clemmons and Bryan Foy.

Blue Law Problem Again Up in Wisconsin

The Wisconsin M. P. T. O. is again embroiled in the "blue law" question, with the consideration of the Grahn bill. This bill, embodying the blue law idea except for an amendment legalizing sports and amusements on Sunday, was brought before the judiciary committee of the Wisconsin Assembly last week, and the vote showed 6 to 4 in its favor, with one absentee.

In advocating the amendment, the Association wanted to make understanding of the bill complete and sure, not only to have Sunday entertainments legalized, but also to allow any one's attendance at these entertainments, the blue law idea making it criminal to operate a place of amusement on Sunday, and also a crime subject to fine to attend one.

Theatre Owners Discuss Problems in Important Session Held at Rochester

REPRESENTATIVES of the Western New York Motion Picture Theatre Owners, Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors League, Northern New York Motion Picture Theatre Owners and the Greater New York Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America held an animated state meeting in the large assembly room of the Elks Building at Rochester, April 23.

The meeting was presided over by Jules Greenstone, president of the Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors League and addresses were delivered by National President Sydney S. Cohen and M. J. O'Toole, Chairman of the National Public Service Committee.

President Howard Smith of the Western New York Motion Picture Theatre Owners made an interesting report of organization activities in that section and extending into other divisions of the state. This report and others of a similar nature presented by other delegates, showed that there was a greater number of Theatre Owners now signed up in membership in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, through these regional bodies, than at any time in the history of the National Organization.

In his address President Cohen told of the many advances made by the National Organization during the present fiscal year, and the constructive plans laid out for the Chicago convention next month. He reported that the National Board of Directors at the meeting in Chicago on Friday, approved of the organization work carried on in New York State and endorsed all moves of the National officers in this connection.

M. J. O'Toole reported the direct cooperation of the Post Office, Commerce, Labor, Agricultural and Interior Departments with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in the Motion Picture Palace of Progress to be conducted in the Coliseum in Chicago the week of the National Convention.

Famous Players Trust Charge Hearing Opens

W. W. Hodkinson and Al Lichtman Among First Before Federal Trade Commission

THE hearing of the Federal Trade Commission action against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, six affiliated companies and six individuals, opened on Monday, April 23 in the Engineering Societies Building, New York City. It will later go to Philadelphia, Boston, Atlanta, New Orleans, Los Angeles and San Francisco for further taking of evidence, in all probably requiring more than a year.

It is charged in the complaint that the respondents have reached a position giving them a "dangerous tendency to monopoly" in the motion-picture business. The other respondents named in the Commission's complaint are the Realart Pictures Corp., Stanley Co. of America, Stanley Booking Corp., Black New England Theatres, Inc., Southern Enterprises, Inc., Saenger Amuse. Co., Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Jules Mastbaum, Alfred S. Black, Stephen A. Lynch and Ernest V. Richards, Jr.

Among the first witnesses called this week were W. W. Hodkinson and Al Lichtman, who told of various matters concerned with the early history of the companies involved in the complaint and of steps leading to their various consolidations.

W. W. Hodkinson, the first witness, told of the formation of the Paramount Distributing Corporation in 1913, when he promoted the plan of distributing pictures by taking in as partners men who had developed state rights exchanges.

These included Hiram Abrams, who was then operating an exchange in Boston; A. D. Flinton of Missouri, who operated under a sub-franchise from Steele of Pittsburgh; Raymond Pawley, who handled Southern New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, and the District of Columbia; S. A. Lynch in Atlanta for the South, and John Kunsky of Detroit.

After operating six months, the original five year franchise plan was changed to a franchise which was to operate 25 years. And he followed this by telling how Adolph Zukor, who was then operating Famous Players, was to get an advance of $100,000 from Paramount, which was to distribute a picture made abroad.

There was some question, however, as to the operation, because the feature ran at greater length than that which the franchise called for, and Hodkinson and his associates had planned the formation of the Select Film Booking Agency to distribute this and other pictures. As a result of the discussion, however, Paramount failed to organize this company, but Zukor in turn took up the organization, formed Select, and finally Paramount had a 50 per cent interest in the concern.

He related that it was in the spring of 1915 that he first heard of the proposed plan to unite the producing and distributing branches of the business, and that the question of going into exhibiting came up about the same time. He admitted his willingness to take any "progressive steps," but pointed out that while he was president, Paramount owned no theatres.

On June 13, 1916, he testified, he was frozen out of the presidency of Paramount, without warning, with Sherry, Steele and Abrams voting for Abrams and Pawley and Hodkinson voting for Hodkinson. He then went into a lengthy discussion of his efforts to unite Famous Players, Frank Garbutt and other producers into an organized unit, so that the distribution of their pictures could be handled by Paramount, but said that Zukor refused to deal, because he felt that Garbutt had nothing to offer. At that time, Hodkinson said he informed Zukor that his (Zukor's) policy was not conducive to successfully offset the policy of the General Film Co., then in operation.

He testified further that the Paramount Corporation, which handles Famous Players films, owns the Criterion, Rialto and Rivoli theatres, three of the five Broadway houses, which exert great influence on the motion picture industry throughout the country, and that it was impossible for outsiders to book any but short pictures in these theatres.

Mr. Hodkinson said Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with six subsidiaries, controlled two-thirds of the picture theatres in the United States. During a single week in 1920, according to his testimony, 6,000 theatres were showing only Paramount pictures, owned by the corporation.

Mr. Hodkinson was asked what portion of the returns from a picture came from first run houses. This was objected to and never answered. Hodkinson said that there was a big difference of opinion as to what a key city was and that he heard from various sources that from 50 to 100 cities were included in this description, but that in his opinion a key city was, generally speaking, a city in which the leading companies operated exchanges. He said that the term "key city" was a trade term which really meant that these cities were the entrances to the markets of these various communities. In response to a question, he said that because of the desire to have these first runs affect the business generally, that advertising and exploitation were conducted on a much larger scale for the presentation in these communities.

He presented two charts at the afternoon session, one showing the franchise basis under which Paramount worked until 1916 and another, showing Paramount's producing affiliations. This included the old Morosco company and others.

The examination of Mr. Hodkinson was conducted by W. H. Fuller, chief counsel of the commission, and heard by E. C. Alvord, an examiner of the commission. Joseph W. Folk, former Governor of Missouri, appeared as special counsel representing Mr. Lasky and Mr. Zukor.

An important point was settled by the Commissioner during the afternoon, when he ruled that no one will be allowed to give an opinion concerning Famous Players unless that opinion had an important bearing at the time of their connection with the company.

Mr. Hodkinson resumed the stand on the second day of the hearing, and continued his discussion of the producer-owned theatre situation. He stated that the open market was partially closed to the independent producer, from whom, he contended, all improvement in motion pictures must come. Vigorous objections were raised at this point by Robert T. Swaine, counsel for Famous, which were sustained.

The witness then alleged that independent producers could not do business on the portion of the market left open to them, to which objections were again raised.

The cross-examination was then opened on the matter of what constitutes a first-run house. Mr. Hodkinson referred to "Down to the Sea in Ships," which is now in its third month at the Cameo theatre, and produced a letter from S. L. Rothafel, managing director of the Capitol theatre, New York, which he stated had refused to show the picture. The letter, dated January 22, 1921, read:

"I have your letter of January 21, and have carefully noted the contents.

"You must know that this is a subsidized Goldwyn theatre, and therefore we cannot enter into your arrangements however meritorious they might be. Nevertheless, I thank you for bringing this matter to my attention. Yours very truly,

"SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL."

The next witness to take the stand was Elek John Ludvigh, general counsel and secretary-treasurer of Famous Players, who produced the minute book of the corporation. A number of points were read into the record from this relative to the early history of Famous Players, one of which indicated that for the 4,482 shares of stock of the Lasky Pictures Co., valued at $1,200,000, 50,000 shares of Famous Players stock was issued, and for the Famous Players Film Co.—the old Zukor organization, stockholders received two shares for one, and $250,000 in notes.

The minutes also showed a record in August, 1916, of securing an option on the Pallas and Morosco Film Co. stock, and just before recess, a survey of the motion picture industry with special reference to the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., was presented. This survey was made by the American International Corp., for Kulin, Loeb & Co., in 1919, in connection with the purchase of $10,000,000 worth of preferred stock by the banking house.

During the afternoon, further records from the minutes were read into the record.

Al Lichtman, president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, took the stand on Wednesday morning. The early portion of his testimony paralleled that of Mr. Hodkinson in telling of the formation of the company.

He told of Mr. Zukor's growing dissatisfaction with the distributing contract with Paramount, and that Mary Pickford's demand for $10,000 a week made it imperative that her pictures be made to gross more money. Mr. Zukor and Mr. Hodkinson, he stated, were at this time of different opinions concerning terms and prices at which films should be rented.

He then told of conferences between Mr. Zukor and Hiram Abrams and Walter E. Greene, Abrams being a director of the Paramount Distributing Corporation and Greene being his partner. These two, he stated, agreed with Mr. Zukor regarding the need of a change in policy, and promised to approach W. L. Sherry and James Steele, also directors, with regard to voting Hodkinson out as president. Within a week or ten days, he continued, this was done, and Abrams was

Eastern Penn. M.P.T.O. Convenes

Action Taken on Important Measures; Interest in Chicago Session Growing

At a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, at the Hotel Vendig, Philadelphia, on Friday, April 20, action was taken on several recommendations in the report of the Finance Committee made by Chairman Sam Stiefel, of the Stiefel Amusement Company.

The first of these recommendations was the proposal that the city be divided into 26 film zones with an exhibitor member from each zone as a contact point between the theatres in that zone and the organization to keep the theatres in closer touch with the body.

The proposal that the organization be put upon a budget system of expenses and receipts was referred back to the committee following a spirited discussion on the floor. Another recommendation by the Finance Committee, which was adopted, was a resolution placing in the hands of the Finance Committee the negotiation of contracts for industrial reels, the completion of such contracts, however, to be subject to the approval of the Board of Managers.

Charles Rapoport, the National Committeeman, dealt at some length upon the many business and social attractions of the coming Chicago convention and called upon the members who intend to go to get in touch immediately with Convention Committee Chairman Goodwin.

A discussion as to whether, in the event of the passage of the Derrick Bill prohibiting municipalities from adopting daylight saving measures, the exhibitors should open their theatres on standard time, ignoring the "moral recommendation" of city councils, was referred to the Daylight Saving Committee for action.

Lew Pizor reported on the progress of the mammoth Movie Ball to be given by the joint motion picture industry in Atlantic City some time in August.

Daylight Saving Adopted for Albany

Daylight saving was adopted in Albany, N. Y., on April 29, without so much as a single peep being officially made by the motion picture theatre owners of the city, each and every one of whom is frank in admitting that daylight saving in past years has cost them many hundreds of dollars.

Exchanges declare that with one place having one time, and another some different time, there will be more or less confusion in shipping during the entire summer. Troy and Schenectady will also have daylight saving time.

Bill Admitting Children Is Likely to Pass

An amendment has been made to the Antin bill in the New York State Senate, to the end that it will apply to children between the ages of eight and sixteen years, who may be admitted to motion picture theatres of New York City up to 8 p.m., even though unaccompanied.

The bill as first introduced simply stated the age as being under sixteen years. It is believed that the bill will be passed. It provides that the owner of a motion picture theatre must pay a license fee of $15 as well as the expenses of a matron who will look after the children once they are within the theatre, where they will occupy a space by themselves. If the bill is passed and signed, it will become effective at once.

Albany F.I.L.M. Club Again Resumes Activities

At a meeting attended by practically all managers of film exchanges in Albany, N. Y., held last week, the Albany F. I. L. M. club, which has not been functioning for several months, was given the necessary impetus and will from now on resume its former activities. The meeting was held at the Pathe exchange.

C. R. Halligan, manager of the Universal exchange, acted as chairman. A committee consisting of Messrs. Hoy, Abeles and Adler, from the New York film club, were present.

The exchange managers of Albany, attending were: Robert Bendell, American Releasing; Vie Bendell, F. B. O.; Charles Walder, Goldwyn; Howard Morgan, Educational; Frank Bruner, Pathe; C. R. Halligan, Universal; Bert Gibbons, Vitagraph; Miss Marie Wheeler, Merit; Marvin Kempner, Paramount; G. A. Woodard, Fox. An election of officers will occur within the next few days.

Sprinkled Industry Will Turn "Naked Truth" Fountain To Waters of Ink

The big unique event of the year in film circles will be held at the Hotel Biltmore April 28, when the entire industry will be sprinkled at the fountain of the Naked Truth. For the third annual dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, John C. Flinn, as president, will preside as Oracle, while Harry Reichenbach will be sergeant at arms to hold all unwilling novitiates while the simon-pure kalsomine is being applied.

For this accomplishment Reichenbach will have a corps of capable assistants, composed of the association's members, as well as numerous guests, including leading film executives, distributors and exhibitors of the New York territory. From the 400 diners who have signified their intention, a strong-arm squad is being selected whose members will rotate in holding each other at the baptismal fountain of truth.

The first plunge into the realm of the Naked Truth will be made promptly at 6:45 and subsequent immersions will occur just as rapidly as the facilities of the hotel will permit, with only a slight interruption for dinner.

Nine acts, running all the way from horse play to horse shoes, are on the program. For most of these the talent will be provided by the association members, but two will be supplied by members of the Green Room Club.

The acts will include "The Land of Haze," a spiritualistic picture of the Naked Truth itself as filmed by Sir A. Conan Doyle; an unsuppressed monologue by Harry Reichenbach; "Fifty Fifty," a parody on what made Ireland famous, and an act supplied by the courtesy of the Green Room Club members.

Tom Wiley and S. Charles Einfeld, in charge of tickets, have announced that the seating capacity of the hall has been almost entirely taken.

Asia Minor Is Strong for American Pictures

That the American motion picture has come to historic Asia Minor, and has come to stay, is the opinion of Consul Knabshue, Constantinople, in a report to the Department of Commerce. All through Turkey, the Greek Islands, Palestine, and Syria, the American celluloid picturizations are certain of an appreciative audience, and the Consul states that in these localities the superiority of the American film is accepted without question.

Pictures of the "Wild West" type are extremely popular among the "movie fans" of Asia Minor; and strong preference is shown in general to those films that are replete with action and depict sensational feats.

Ritter Out For Presidency of M.P.T.O.A.

Detroit Exhibitor Announces Platform Upon Which He Seeks Office

JAMES C. RITTER, of Detroit, in a statement just issued announces his candidacy for the presidency of the M. P. T. O. A. The announcement came as the result of the conviction of the exhibitors of Michigan that they would be shirking their responsibility if they did not offer at least one man as a candidate from what they term the best organized state among the exhibitors.

The announcement follows:

If the exhibitors of the United States are successful in providing adequate finances to carry out a sound business plan for national organization, Michigan offers as a candidate for national president, James C. Ritter, of Detroit, the first president of the Michigan association, and the man to whom Michigan gives credit for its efficient organization, past national treasurer, past national board of director and present director of the Michigan association. Such is the announcement given out to-day by H. M. Richey, general manager of the Michigan organization.

Mr. Ritter's platform is a simple one. It is based solely on the record Michigan has made in organization work and on the conviction that a non-political, business administration of the affairs of the national organization, carried on by a Board of Directors, a paid organizer and a business manager and adequately financed will bring the national organization to the goal that has long been sought but which to date, has never been realized.

The announcement of Mr. Ritter's name came after a meeting of the Michigan board, at Jackson, Michigan, last week and followed the move made by Michigan to devise a plan to adequately finance the national organization. Its first step was to call the recent meeting in Chicago at which time a plan of finance was discussed, and which was later followed up by that state, sending representatives to various state conventions to discuss finances and Michigan is now convinced that if a definite plan of organization and efficient business policy is instituted it will be possible to interest the exhibitors of the country not now sufficiently sold on the benefits of national organization, to support it in a financial way.

Mr. Ritter says:

"My name has been mentioned many times as a candidate for national president and always I felt that the gigantic responsibilities were such that there were others who could take the burden. However, I feel that if I can assist in the welding together of a real efficient business administration similar to the one we have in our state, the time and effort will not be in vain and I am willing to allow my name to be announced as a candidate pro-

Late Wire Briefs from the West Coast

JESSE HAMPTON'S "Spoilers" was pre-viewed at the Glendale theatre Monday night.

The annual Wampus frolic Saturday night was the biggest event of the kind ever given here. Warner Brothers' mammoth new stage was taxed to capacity, with an attendance of more than 4,000. The vaudeville dansant began at 9 o'clock and continued until 2 in the morning. Fred Niblo was master of ceremonies.

The feature of the program was the introduction of baby stars of '23, including Margaret Leahy, Derelys Perdue, Evelyn Brent, Laura La Plante, Ethel Shannon, Kathleen Key, Pauline Garon, Virginia Browne Faire, Jobyna Ralston, Betty Francisco, Dorothy Devore, Helen Lynch, Eleanor Boardman, and the baby stars of '22 who appeared in the make-up used in their most successful productions of the past year. These were Helen Ferguson, Colleen Moore, Claire Windsor, Jacquelin Logan, Patsy Ruth Miller, Marion Aye, Lila Lee, Louise Lorraine, Lois Wilson, Pauline Stark, Kathryn McGuire, Bessie Love and Mary Philbin.

By agreement with First National, Virginia Browne Faire will play opposite William Desmond in the "Skyline of Spruce." The story is by Edeson Marshall under the direction of Robert Hill.

Glen Dunnway, head of the paint department of the Lasky studio for the past seven years, was found dead in the office Monday morning from accidental asphyxiation.

Frank Woods' production of the Associated Authors, directed by Chet Withey, adapted from Scott's novel "The Talisman," titled "Richard the Lion Hearted," has been completed.

Charles Pettijohn, of the Will Hays organization, has been a visitor here.

vided that the exhibitors of the country will give into the hands of a carefully selected board of directors, adequate finances for one year, that we can go out and show the exhibitors of the country real beneficial results.

"Unless we, as exhibitors, can get down to brass tacks and look our problems squarely in the face, disregarding entirely politics and personalities, either past or future, and settle down to bring into one fold all of the exhibitors of our great industry, unless we can make the efforts of the organization so beneficial to the exhibitors that he cannot afford to not support it financially, then the efforts of any one, I care not who he may be, cannot be crowned with success. There is nothing mysterious about organization. It is a simple business problem, that can, and I am confident will be solved at Chicago.

"I place more importance than the election of a president, in some plan of providing adequate finances for one year that, with an efficient personnel of a paid organizer and a board of directors, who will meet at least every two months to iron out, if you please, the national problems and devise ways and means for paying the bill and of accomplishing what we set out to accomplish. So, whether you select me as your president or not, exhibitors of the country, I plead with you to do this one thing—eliminate politics and let's get down to the real work of organization so the Chicago convention can be constructive, so it can be conducive of real beneficial results. We can't hope to sell an efficient business man, and there are hundreds of them now outside the organization, an inefficient national organization that is broke and thereby handicapped before we start.

"Let's get an organizer who will spend his entire time at organization work to take off his coat and go out and assist states not now organized, to get organized. Let's not shoot too high, let's get at some of the problems that are next to the heart of the exhibitor. Let's solve one problem at a time, not picking any fight with any one. I don't believe there is an exhibitor in the United States who is not sold on the necessity of organization but he also wants to see some results for the money he spends for organization."

Reformers Win in Sunday Closing Fight

The finale of the "Swan Song" in the motion picture-Blue Law Sunday fight between motion picture theatre owners of Findlay, Ohio, and members of social and clerical interests of that city, came to an end, Tuesday, April 17, with a resounding discord. The Supreme Court in the appeal case of Walter W. Richards, motion picture exhibitor of that city, handed down the decision that has put an end to the fight that has been waged in Findlay, for more than five years.

The Supreme Court ruled that a motion picture theatre is to be classed as one in which a "theatrical or dramatic performance" is conducted, and, therefore, may be placed under the ban of Sunday closing laws.

Richards' appeal to the Supreme Court was "that a motion picture theatre is not a theatrical or dramatic performance," and, therefore, does not come under the ban of Ohio Sunday closing laws.

At a meeting held Tuesday night by Findlay exhibitors they announced that they would close their theatres from now on, on Sunday.

Churches Act to Override Governor's Veto

Action to override Governor Donahey of Ohio when he vetoed the bill of Representative J. H. Gordon, changing existing censorship laws, was approved April 17, by delegates from county councils in Ohio of churches, gathered at Columbus at the international relationship conference called by the Ohio council of churches.

The conference body ignored the Governor's objections to the bill, after Rev. B. F. Lamb, executive secretary of the Ohio council had characterized Governor Donahey's action as "another case of hasty conclusion in the rush of business," and urged an active campaign to carry the measure over the chief executive's veto.

The Gordon bill, which would eliminate the prison sentence from Ohio censorship laws, substituting instead heavier fines, was turned down flatly by the Governor last week.

Four Now Seek Presidency of M. P. T. O. A.

FOUR hats are now in the ring for the presidency of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, the candidacies of Ritter, of Michigan; Mogler, of Missouri; and McWilliams, of Wisconsin, having been announced at the meeting of the National Board of Directors, held at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, on April 20th, and the headpiece of Al Steffes, of Minnesota, having been tossed in the ring previous to that meeting.

Ohio Censor Board Under Changes

Chief Censor Abolished, with Vernon Riegel Given Additional Power

THE motion picture censorship board of Ohio under the appropriation bill for 1923-'24 will be changed in appearance with Vernon M. Riegel, director of education of Ohio, virtually the head of the board with little opposition to come from any other member. Other changes have virtually re-organized the entire board.

The position of chief censor is abolished. This was accomplished by not making an appropriation for this position, which carried a salary of $3,600, under the original re-organization bill. Two assistant chiefs, positions which were created with the advent of censorship in Ohio, retain their positions, but instead of drawing salaries of $1,800 a year their salaries are increased to $2,400.

Although the position of chief censor is abolished by the inability of the Ohio finance committees to make the regular appropriation, Vernon M. Riegel, under whose department the supervision of the censor board came in the past, is now chief censor, figuratively speaking, and also head of the department of education. When there was a difference in the past as to whether or not a picture was to be passed, Mr. Riegel was consulted, but will under coming conditions have no opposition whatsoever in the rejection of pictures from the state.

The position of chief censor had been a political appointment in the past and the last to hold that chair was Mrs. Evelyn Snow. The position has remained vacant since the resignation of Mrs. Snow a year ago under the administration of the former Republican Governor, Harry L. Davis, of Cleveland.

In the future the two assistants will carry on the work of censorship and when any difficulty arises will consult Mr. Riegel.

Another new office created in the department is that of cashier of the censor board with an annual salary of $2,400. Two operators have also received a boost in the pay envelope receiving under the new appropriation bill $1,400 instead of $1,200 each, as provided for during the past two years.

Other salaries in the department have been increased, and the total appropriations for operation of the department for the next two years under Governor Vie Donahey are $49,430, as compared with that of the past two years, which was $47,690. This makes an increase in the appropriation of $1,740 in spite of the fact that the position of chief censor has been eliminated.

Presents Daylight Saving Bill for St. Louis

Alderman Samuel L. Wimer of the Twenty-seventh Ward on Friday, April 20, presented a daylight saving ordinance to the St. Louis Board of Aldermen. He introduced the bill by request. It would change the official time by advancing the clock one hour between 2 a. m. on the first Sunday in June, 1923, and 2 a. m. on the last Sunday in September; and from 2 a. m. on the last Sunday in April until 2 a. m. on the last Sunday in September on subsequent years.

It would affect all courts, departments, legal and official proceedings under the jurisdiction of the city. Automobile dealers, stewards of country clubs and others who would benefit by more recreation during daylight hours are making a strong effort to put the bill across. It will be fought by the local motion picture exhibitors and various labor organizations. The working classes don't want daylight saving.

N. Y. Pastor Urges Papers to Back Censor Law

Engineered by Rev. O. R. Miller, superintendent of the New York Civic League, efforts are now being made to secure the support of New York State papers in the campaign which the league is carrying on to prevent the repeal of the present motion picture censorship law in that state. Rev. Mr. Miller has just notified the newspapers that a free copy of the catechism on motion pictures, prepared by Canon Chase, will be sent to any newspaper requesting it.

N. W. Exhibitors Are Warned on Advertising Schemes

THE Northwest Film Board of Trade has sent out a warning to the exhibitors of the Northwest against individuals who are proposing advertising schemes in connection with the gratis distribution of certain musical selections which they are to furnish.

Various exhibitors in the Northwest have been approached by individuals outlining a scheme something like this: The exhibitor is to introduce the exhibitor to merchants in his town who are to be solicited for advertising to be placed on music for the exhibitor to distribute in his theatre.

Several exhibitors have been victimized in this manner and find that the merchants usually come back on them for the money advanced to the advertising agent.

Express Company Liable in Film Loss

A test case to determine the liability of an express company that loses a shipment of film has just been completed in Seattle by the United Artists Corporation, represented by Charles Hardin, resident exchange manager, against the Puget Sound Electric Company, in which the film company was the victor.

In June, 1921, almost two years ago, a print of "The Nut" was shipped from a Tacoma theatre back to the Seattle exchange, but was stolen from the express company and was never received by Mr. Hardin. Films shipped from or to the exchange are usually valued at $50, in order to secure a lower express rate. When the picture was sent from Seattle to the Tacoma theatre this $50 value was placed upon it, but when the Tacoma theatre returned it, no value was written on the express slip, as is quite often the case.

When the express company realized the loss of the film they agreed to settle for the usual $50 valuation placed on all films, but Mr. Hardin held out for a sum of $310, the actual cost of replacing the film. The express company refused to pay this and the case was taken to court.

A judgment in favor of the United Artists Corporation was received from the District Court where the case was tried, but the Puget Sound Express Company carried the case to the State Supreme Court. The Supreme Court likewise agreed that the film company should receive the cost of a new print.

Sydney Cohen Foresees Great Gathering for M.P.T.O.A. Chicago Convention

PRESIDENT SYDNEY COHEN, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who was in Chicago last week attending the convention of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, and later the meeting of the national Board of Directors, declares that the outlook is for a large attendance of exhibitors at the national convention in Chicago in May.

He stated that in the various localities he has visited recently a keen interest in this event was evidenced by exhibitors, and already it is assured that from 1,500 to 2,200 will be on hand.

Eastern and Western Pennsylvania will come to Chicago with a representation of 150 men; New York with 200, little Connecticut with 50, Indiana with 75 or more, Michigan 150 to 200, Kansas 40 or 50, Missouri close to 100, Arkansas at least 50, and Minnesota with 150.

Other States which he has heard from will also send an unusually large number of delegates to the convention.

In addition to Mr. Cohen, Al Steffes of Minnesota, Cady and Ritter of Michigan, Pramer of Nebraska, and leaders throughout the country, are working to bring the largest number of exhibitors to Chicago which ever assembled for a convention, and from present indications their efforts are going to meet with even greater success than could have been hoped for a month or so back.

Mr. Steffes declared it is his aim and ambition to see 3,000 exhibitors in Chicago for the big meeting, and he believes this number can be gotten together.

Illinois M.P.T.O. Directors Elect Officers

Glen Reynolds Named to Head Organization; Much Accomplished at Convention

AT a meeting on April 19th, the day following its election, the new board of directors of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, elected Glen W. Reynolds, of De Kalb, president; Samuel Abrahams, of Chicago, vice-president; Ludwig Siegel, of Chicago, secretary; and Sidney Selig, of Chicago, treasurer of the state organization.

Mr. Reynolds, who has been an active member of the board of directors for the past year, was put in nomination by Joseph Hopp, of Rock Island, and seconded by Adam Dernbach, of Wheaton. His opponent was J. J. Rubens, popular Aurora exhibitor and brother of the retiring president, L. M. Rubens, who was elected national committeeman for Illinois.

The second day of the Illinois convention was given over largely to addresses by organization leaders from many states who were in attendance.

Following a speech by Secretary Richey, of the Michigan organization, who outlined a successful organization and financing plan, used in his home state, Theodore Hayes, of Minnesota, took the floor. He praised the spirit of unity which had marked the Illinois convention and told of Minnesota's accomplishments in building up a powerful organization and the influence this organization had been able to bring to bear on the state legislature as evidenced by the defeat of all measures, including three censorship bills, aimed at motion picture theatres in the past year.

He made a plea for an open national convention and declared that it was his opinion that states not paid up should not be barred from the floor, and that every exhibitor, even to the smallest, should be given an opportunity to participate. He put the name of Al Steffes, president of the Minnesota association, before the convention as a candidate for national president, told of the successful work as an organization chief that Mr. Steffes has done in the northwest during the many years past, at the sacrifice of time and money, and paid a notable tribute to his integrity and ability.

He was followed by President A. R. Pramer, of Nebraska, Joe Friedman, of St. Paul and M. J. O'Toole, of Pennsylvania.

When Al Steffes took the floor he was received with an outburst of applause and after a few introductory remarks declared, "I stand before you as an avowed candidate for president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and am proud to be a candidate after twelve years of work in behalf of organization in the northwest. The keynote of my campaign will not be, what has been done, but, what we are going to do."

He declared he was drafting a platform which he would submit to the exhibitors of the country through the trade press within the next week, and that so far as he knew, this was the first time in the history of motion picture organization that an avowed candidate had done this, putting his plans before the exhibitors in concrete form. He declared that he has not condemned the president or national organization for lack of accomplishment, as if there has been any failure in securing results, it is largely through lack of finances to carry on the work. He added that condemnation on his part of the

President Harding to Attend Coast Exposition

MADGE BELLAMY is finding an unusual amount of interest being displayed in the Motion Picture Exposition and Monroe Centennial Celebration to be held at Los Angeles July 2 to August 4. Miss Bellamy, an official representative of the Celebration, is being guaranteed every assurance of support. She has been received by President and Mrs. Harding, General Pershing, Rear Admiral Coontz and other prominent officials.

On Monday, April 16, Miss Bellamy went to Washington and was entertained at the White House by Mrs. Harding. The President met her in the forenoon and requested that she return in the afternoon. She did so and took pictures of the President and was taken with him with the $10,000 camera which she is carrying with her. At the afternoon meeting the President escorted Miss Bellamy to the Botanical Gardens of the White House, where the motion pictures were taken. These pictures will be shown at the Motion Picture Exposition.

The President said he intended attending the Exposition, as did Admiral Coontz.

national organization would be ridiculous as he was part of the organization. He went further and stated that he had stopped propaganda directed against the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, by members of his own state organization.

Sydney Cohen was given a warm welcome and declined as retiring national president to discuss politics. He briefly outlined some of the accomplishments of the organization under his administration, including the repeal of the film tax and stated that recent indications pointed to early relief from the excise tax and music tax.

Kaplan, of Minnesota, was the last of the out-of-town speakers and on conclusion of his address the conference adjourned.

At the closing session J. J. Rubens, chairman of the Finance Committee reported that a comprehensive plan for financing the Illinois organization in an adequate manner would be given to the board of directors at an early date and a movement to start taking subscriptions on the floor of the convention was halted.

The following delegates, who compose the board of directors, and twenty-seven alternates were elected to represent Illinois at the national convention in May: Ben Berve, Rochelle; Adam Dernbach, Wheaton; W. D. Burford, Aurora; J. F. Dittman, Freeport; Kenneth Fitzpatrick, Chicago Heights; Felix Greenberg, Peoria; Joe Hopp, Rock Island; Charles Lam, Rockford; J. C. Goldson, James Stepanek, Sam Rabinovitz, Frank Seim, J. B. Dibelka, and Julius Laum, of Chicago.

A number of resolutions were adopted at the session. Among them was one to the effect that the Chicago convention be made an open one. Another urged action for revision of the Music Tax law on the part of the M. P. T. O. A. and the Will Hays organization. It was resolved to lend and seek co-operation with the churches, schools and newspapers in advancing progress and development for the good of communities.

Producers were urged, in another resolution, to use every effort to confine the length of all future pictures to five reels, and in no case to permit them to exceed seven reels.

New Officers Named for Review Board

Following the death on April 17th of W. D. McGuire, executive secretary of the National Board of Review, a special meeting of the full executive committee of the board was held on Friday, April 20th.

At this meeting it was unanimously voted to appoint Wilton A. Barrett executive secretary in the place left vacant by Mr. McGuire's death. Mr. Barrett, as review secretary of the board and also secretary of the Committee on Exceptional Photoplays, has been closely associated with Mr. McGuire for ten years.

At the same meeting it was also unanimously voted that Clarence A. Parry be made chairman of the National Board. Mr. Parry, who is associate director of the Department of Recreation of the Russell Sage Foundation, has for several months been acting chairman of the National Board, since the resignation of Everett Dean Martin, whose work as director of Cooper Union Forum precluded his longer serving.

Exhibitors of Kentucky Endorse M.P.T.O.A.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kentucky held a well attended state convention in Louisville, Ky., on Friday, April 20th. Resolutions were passed endorsing the activities of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America during the present fiscal year, approving of the official acts of National President Sydney S. Cohen, endorsing the action of the National Board of Directors in repudiating the "uniform" contract presented as unfair and inequitable.

The delegates selected to attend the Chicago convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, May 21st to 26th, were confirmed by the convention. It is expected that a large number of independent theatre owners from Kentucky will accompany the delegates to Chicago and that that state will be well represented there.

Motion Picture Arts Congress Is Planned

World's Leading Novelists, Dramatists and Artists to Meet in N. Y.

ANNOUNCEMENT of a formal call for an International Congress on Motion Picture Arts to be held in New York City on Thursday and Friday, June 7th and 8th under the auspices of the Author's League of America, was made Thursday by the league acting on the suggestion of Adolph Zukor, the president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that the league co-operate with him in his movement to have American and European novelists, dramatists and artists formulate a set of principles for the artistic development of motion pictures.

Invitations to attend this first congress on motion picture arts are being issued to leading novelists, artists, dramatists, editors and educators, and to others prominent in public affairs not only in this country but also in Europe, with a view to developing the artists standards, which, it is hoped, "will guide picture producers in discharging their obligation toward the cultural development of the millions of people all over the world who rely on the screen for their principal recreation."

Rex Beach is chairman of the General Congress Committee for the Authors' League, which also includes Samuel Hopkins Adams, George Barr Baker, Edwin Bjorkman, Ellis Parker Butler, Irvin S. Cobb, George Creel, C. B. Falls, Charles Dana Gibson, John Golden, Clayton Hamilton, Rupert Hughes, Edward Hungerford, Will Irwin, Orson Lowell, George Barr McCutcheon, George Mallon, George Middleton, Harvey O'Higgins, Floyd W. Parsons, Luther Reed, Tony Sarg, Leroy Scott, William G. Shepherd and William Allen White. Several distinguished European writers as well as delegates from the British and French authors' societies will attend.

Eric Schuler, secretary of the league, said plans for the details of the conference have been in preparation by the committee and Mr. Zukor's representatives for a number of weeks. One of the features of the congress will be the announcement by Mr. Zukor of a series of prizes amounting to several thousand dollars which he will offer "to those elements contributing most to the motion picture's artistic development during the year."

In his invitation to the Authors' League, Mr. Zukor said, in part: "While the artistic progress of the motion picture has been great, the greatest development so far in the pictures' short career has necessarily been in the technical side of picture craftsmanship and in the stabilization of the industrial side.

"To-day we have pretty nearly attained perfection in photography, lighting, scenery and in other phases of picture production which go into the making of merely beautiful and effective photography. The last two years have seen the business put on a firm and stable financial basis.

"The big field of picture progress, therefore, lies in developing the screen along the soundest artistic principles. Millions of people all over the world not only get all of their amusement from motion pictures, but they also depend largely on pictures for their cultural development.

"The responsibility of picture producers toward the fostering of the sound taste and artistic standards in those people is an enormous one. I know producers have tried to meet this responsibility, but the growth of the industry has been so swift that attention has had to be concentrated on the physical development of the picture business.

"In discharging this responsibility, we should have the best advice and guidance available, and I am, therefore, inviting the Authors' League to join with me in holding the congress which will explore the artistic and cultural possibility of the motion picture art. It is my hope that the men and women representing the best in American thought and taste will evolve some set of principles which can be accepted by the motion picture industry as its artistic guide. Our aim is to have a conference that will be to the motion picture what the French Academy is to the French letters, what the Royal Academy is to British art and what the Pulitzer Foundation is to American journalism."

First National Holds Annual Convention

Original Franchise Holders Attend Session at Which Problems Are Discussed

WITH nearly every original franchise holder in attendance, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., held its annual meeting at the Hotel Ritz-Carlton in Atlantic City last week. The sessions began Tuesday, April 17th, and continued into Friday, the business meetings, at which organization problems were discussed, being interrupted at various times for the purpose of hearing addresses by prominent film men.

The speakers included Will H. Hays, Dr. A. H. Gianinni, Joseph M. Schenck, Louis B. Mayer and Samuel Goldwyn, who but a short time before had signed a contract to produce for First National a series of George Fitzmaurice Productions and the film version of "Potash and Perlmutter," the rights to which he controls.

The annual election of officers took place on Tuesday and was marked by two minor changes. Sol Lesser, of Los Angeles, was elected first vice-president, succeeding J. D. Clark, of Pittsburgh, who retired from that position to become a member of the board of five voting trustees. Mr. Clark fills the vacancy caused by the withdrawal of Fred Dahnken, of Turner and Dahnken, whose northern California interests have been absorbed by Mr. Lesser and his associates.

All the other officers and trustees were re-elected unanimously, as follows: president, Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis; secretary-treasurer, H. O. Schwalbe, of Philadelphia; first vice-president, Sol Lesser, of Los Angeles; second vice-president, John H. Kunskey, of Detroit; third vice-president, Jacob Fabian, of Paterson, N. J.; voting trustees, J. G. Von Herberg, of Seattle; M. L. Finkelstein, of Finkelstein & Rubin, Minneapolis; Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis; Nathan Gordon, of Boston, and J. D. Clark.

The original franchise holders present were A. H. Blank, Des Moines; Thomas H. Bolland, Oklahoma City; R. D. Craver, Charlotte; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh; Harry M. Crandall, Washington D. C.; W. P. Dewees, Vancouver; Jacob Fabian, New Jersey; M. L. Finkelstein and I. H. Rubin, Minneapolis; Frank Ferrandini, Richmond; Sol Lesser and Mike Gore, Los Angeles; N. H. Gordon, Boston; Sam Katz, Chicago; John H. Kunskey, Detroit; Colonel Fred Levy, Louisville; E. Mandelbaum, Cleveland; Moe Mark, New York City; John J. McQuirk, Philadelphia; Harry T. Nolan, Denver; S. P. Skouras, St. Louis, and Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee.

Company executives in attendance, in addition to Mr. Lieber and Mr. Schwalbe, included Richard A. Rowland, general manager; E. Bruce Johnson, manager of the foreign department and C. S. Pinkerton, financial comptroller. District Managers Louis Bache, R. C. Seery and H. A. Bandy and Ralph H. Clark, manager of the New York exchange, also were present.

The convention drew other film men to the seaside resort, including Colvin W. Brown, New York representative of Thomas H. Ince; E. M. Asher, representing Mack Sennett; Bert Adler of Distinctive Pictures; Joseph M. Schenck, Nicholas Schenck and Felix Feist; Samuel Goldwyn, James I. Grainger, D. P. Howells, A. Jordahl, Knut Husbert and John Olsen, of the Swedish Biograph Company; George W. Trendle and Watterson Rothacker.

The women relatives of the members were invited to the Thursday morning session to hear Mr. Hays' address, which was preceded by short talks by Louis B. Mayer and Samuel Goldwyn.

Mr. Hays complimented the members on the success First National has attained and declared that its formation was largely responsible for the heights to which the industry has risen.

"I am proud to be associated with you men," he concluded, "for I have found that the First National franchise holders are strong factors in their communities."

In his address Mr. Goldwyn expressed his pleasure at becoming associated with First National as a producer. He declared that work on his first production, "Potash and Perlmutter," would start approximately May 8th with Barney Bernard and Alexander Carr, the creators of the stage characterizations of the partners, heading the cast. Vera Gordon of "Humoresque" fame also has been signed up.

On Thursday evening, Mr. Goldwyn was host at a dinner to the delegates. This constituted the chief social function of the meeting, no formal banquet being held.

Edwin Carewe reached Atlantic City, Thursday night from Los Angeles with a print of "The Girl of the Golden West," just completed. It was shown at the Colonial theatre on Friday morning and at its conclusion Carewe was given a round of applause.

Paramount to Hold Sales Meetings

*In New York May 8, Chicago May 12,
New Orleans May 14, on Coast May 21*

THE semi-annual Paramount sales conventions, for the discussion of distribution policies for next season, will open in New York Tuesday, May 8th, according to an announcement by S. R. Kent.

For the purpose of economy and efficiency, this convention will be held along different lines from those previously conducted, it is announced. Instead of having one big convention to which would be brought the district and branch managers from all parts of the country, the next Paramount convention will be split into four conventions, held in four different cities, and each convention will be attended by all the salesmen, booking managers and exploitation men in the respective territories.

The first convention will be in the Commodore Hotel, New York, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 8th and 9th, and will be attended by the sales forces from the Boston, New Haven, Maine, New York City, New Jersey, Buffalo, Albany, Philadelphia, Washington and Wilkes-Barre offices.

Following the two-day session in New York, a group of Home Office executives, headed by Mr. Kent, will go to Chicago where a two-day session will be held Saturday and Sunday, May 12th and 13th, at the Drake Hotel. This convention will be attended by the sales forces of the Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Columbus, Chicago, Milwaukee, Peoria, St. Louis, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Sioux Falls, Des Moines and Omaha offices.

Leaving Chicago Sunday night the convention heads will go to New Orleans, arriving there Monday, May 14th, for a two-day session which will be attended by the sales forces of the Atlanta, New Orleans, Charlotte, Dallas and Oklahoma exchanges.

The convention car will leave New Orleans

Thursday, May 17th, for Los Angeles, arriving May 19th, for convention sessions Monday and Tuesday, May 21 and 22. The Los Angeles convention will be attended by the sales forces from the San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Portland, Salt Lake City and Denver offices.

Unlike other conventions, these sessions will be attended not only by the home office executives, department heads and district and branch managers, but also by all of the salesmen in each of the exchanges, the booking managers and the exploitation representatives, so that every member of the entire Paramount sales force throughout the country will receive first-hand information on Paramount's distribution policies for next year.

Those from the home-office who will attend the conventions out of town are the following:

S. R. Kent, Jesse L. Lasky, Eugene Zukor, Emil E. Shauer, M. A. Shauer, George Spidell, G. B. J. Frawley, Claud Saunders, Charles E. McCarthy, A. M. Botsford, William R. Horgan, sales manager of the Paramount Australian organization, John D. Clark, George W. Weeks and Harry Ballance.

His production program will materially increase the number of Preferred Pictures to be released by the Al. Lichtman Corporation. These plans are to be announced in detail in the near future.

The film version of Mr. Kyne's tale will go into production as soon as work on "Richard the Lion-Hearted," the initial release of Associated Authors and Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, is completed. Elmer Harris is writing the third story which will be screened and released by Associated Authors.

Hearing on Trust Charges Opens made president, Steele becoming treasurer instead of Pawley, who had voted with Hodgkinson.

About this time, he testified, the Famous Players, Lasky and Bosworth producing companies were merged into the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and stock was acquired in the Paramount Distributing Corporation.

The Artercraft Company was then organized, with Mr. Lichtman as general manager, to distribute those pictures that require higher rentals than the program releases of the company, and the Artercraft exchanges, 15 in number, then released the Mary Pickford pictures, later obtaining those of Douglas Fairbanks, George M. Cohan and D. W. Griffith. Some nine months later this was merged with Paramount in the Paramount-Artercraft Corp.

At this time Mr. Lichtman was made general manager of distribution for the new company, continuing until January, 1921. He admitted that he knew, at that time, of the company owning an interest in Loew theatres, including the Stillman theatre in Cleveland. He also stated that the company owned the New York theatre, operated under contract by Loew.

Mr. Lichtman was then questioned at length concerning certain physical arrangements, the shipment of negatives to the laboratory, the shipment of prints to the exchanges, and the sale of pictures and the approval of the contracts on them.

At the afternoon session Mr. Lichtman resumed the stand. He stated that Famous Players prevented independents from showing their films in the first class theatres throughout the country, or when they were shown the return was inadequate.

He had, he stated, been able to show only four pictures in the last two years in the Rivoli, Rialto, Strand and Capitol. He then told of being unable to place "Poor Men's Wives" in any of these, and of renting the Criterion for two weeks. His expenses in this house, he said, included $4,000 rental, $2,000 for the electric sign, $6,000 for advertising, and $8,000 miscellaneous expenses. Total receipts for the two weeks, he added, were $8,000.

He also told of being invited to book some of his pictures at one of the Broadway houses for the last two weeks in May and one week in June, on condition that he guarantee Famous Players $18,000 a week. Learning that their receipts are about that figure at this time, he said, he declined. Under the questioning of W. H. Fuller, he stated that Famous Players control the best houses in many of the large cities.

Mr. Lichtman testified that he had been questioned in 1919 by H. E. H. Coniek about Famous Players in connection with the survey made by the American International corporation for Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Mr. Coniek became chairman of the finance committee of Famous Players shortly after he completed this investigation, according to Mr. Lichtman.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger

I. E. Chadwick

W. Ray Johnston

The principals in the big amalgamation deal that combines the Arrow & Merit exchange

Merit-Arrow Exchanges in Merger

Shallenberger Points Advantage of Distributing Through One Exchange

UNDER the terms of the deal just closed between Merit Film Corporation and Arrow Exchanges, Inc., the two concerns will be consolidated into one company, probably to be known as the Merit-Arrow Exchanges.

It is understood that the present quarters of Arrow Exchanges, Inc., in the Godfrey building, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City, will be maintained as the feature department for the new organization and that the present quarters of the Merit Film Corporation at 126 West Forty-sixth Street, New York City, will be maintained as the short reel department.

Under the terms of the contract just made, Merit-Arrow acquires all of the older product of both Merit and Arrow, as well as a number of new releases just recently purchased by Arrow Exchanges.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Exchanges, Inc., represented that company, I. E. Chadwick, president of the Merit Film Corporation, represented that concern and W. Ray Johnston, vice-president of Arrow Film Corporation, represented the latter company in concluding the negotiations.

Mr. Shallenberger, in commenting on the amalgamation, said: "Arrow Film Corporation for a great many years has been doing business in New York City with the Merit Film Corporation, as well as distributing a great number of pictures through my own exchange, known as Arrow Exchanges, Inc., and it is a natural result that we should find it advisable that all of the Arrow product should be distributed through one exchange, especially in the New York City territory where the volume of business is so large and competition so keen. Mr. Chadwick for some time has been negotiating with me for the exclusive New York franchise on Arrow Pictures and I feel that the combination with his Merit exchange of Arrow Exchanges, Inc., as well as the series of new Arrowplays Deluxe and also forthcoming productions will unquestionably make the Merit exchange the largest Independent distributing office in the New York City territory.

"Mr. Chadwick has always been one of the foremost distributors in this territory and has a reputation that is to be envied and I feel confident that in placing the Arrow product through his exchange it will secure the widest and best distribution that could be effected in the territory. Needless to say, I am greatly pleased over the deal."

When asked for the amount of money involved in the deal Mr. Chadwick stated that between the amalgamation of Arrow Exchanges, Inc., and the purchase of the new product, a total in cash slightly in excess of $325,000 was involved.

"Why Men Marry" Title of Betty Blythe Subject

B. B. Productions, Inc., announces that it has changed the name of the last of the four Betty Blythe pictures, now being completed at the Whitman Bennett studios in Yonkers from "The Girl Who Got Everything" to "Why Men Marry." The reason for this change is that the old title, "The Girl Who Got Everything," unintentionally conflicts with the title of one of the lesser known Clyde Fitch plays, which is soon to be produced in pictures.

The cast supporting Betty Blythe in "Why Men Marry" includes: William Carleton, Richard Neal, William Tooker, William Collier, Jr., Gipsy O'Brien, Fuller Mellish, Frances Grant. "Why Men Marry" is by Dorothy Farnum.

Mighty Lak' a Rose—

Backed by a strong program and did well. (East.)

FOX

The Custard Cup—

GOLDWYN

Enemies of Women—

This is a good picture from the audience angle and the box-office showed good receipts. (West.)

LICHTMAN

Are You a Failure—

Weak picture. Fair business on account of title. (Middle West.)

Madge Bellamy added to her fame in this splendid film. (East.)

Poor Men's Wives—

Excellent complement to its sister picture, "Rich Men's Wives." Fairly interesting. Business not up to average. (Middle West.)

Picture fair and business at the box-office was also fair. (West.)

METRO

Trailing Wild Animals—

Interesting animal picture, but too long drawn out. Would be much more satisfactory, if released in sections. Business not what it should have been because competitive house played another animal picture at same time. (Middle West.)

A good box-office attraction which did satisfactory business here. (West.)

A novelty, but needs feature with it. Business poor. (East.)

The Forgotten Law—

Plot not original, but story appeals. Did well. (Middle West.)

The Famous Mrs. Fair—

Did good business and was liked. (East.)

The Woman of Bronze—

Not so good. Business indifferent. (East.)

Crinoline and Romance—

A poor picture. Business the same. (East.)

PATHE

Safety Last—

Second week — going strong. (East.)

A great drawing card. Played to big houses for the first week's run and is being held over for at least one more week. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood—

Great feature and packed them in. (Middle West.)

Now on its second week and still going good. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Hunting Big Game—

Instructive and entertaining. Business fair. (East.)

Splendid picture that would have been a tremendous hit if opposition houses had not also played another big animal picture. The running of them simultaneously split the business so that there was no way of judging the box office value of the picture. (Middle West.)

This is a satisfactory audience picture and house realized good receipts on engagement. (West.)

Driven—

One of the season's best. In second week continue to go strong. Much favorable comment from press and fans. (Middle West.)

Dead Game—

A typical Hoot Gibson picture that pleased his large following tremendously. Good week's business. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

One Siolen Night—

Alice Calhoun very good in this one. A pleasing entertainment. Did well with it. (Middle West.)

WARNER BROTHERS

Little Church Around the Corner—

A very fair picture. Business excellent all week. (East.)

Your Best Friend—

Very good picture. Strong mother appeal touched audiences. Nice business. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Temptation—

A fair picture. Good business. (East.)

The Drug Traffic—

Nothing to get excited about. Receipts about average. (East.)

 NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

Around the Trade

THE Sunday Blue Law Bill, introduced in the Illinois legislature at the behest of the Lord's Day Alliance, is dead. Senator MacMurray of Chicago, who introduced the measure, asked to withdraw it from the committee and moved that it be laid on the table. This was done without comment and puts the quietus on this drastic measure. Strong reaction had developed in the legislature previous to the senator's action and numerous protests had been received by the members of the state law making body from all over Illinois. In withdrawing support from the Sunday Closing Bill, Senator MacMurray read a statement saying that he only introduced the bill at the request of Mr. Fleming, of the American Federation of Churches, and without pledging himself to support it. The storm of indignation with which news of this measure was received, not only in Chicago, but in other parts of Illinois, is regarded by motion picture leaders as a good indication of public sentiment in regard to further restrictive laws and it is believed will have a tendency to prevent the introduction of other similar legislation at this session.

Downers Grove, known as one of the state's strongest church centers, at an election held April 17th, voted to permit Sunday movies. The vote was 1,012 for and 987 against the ordinance. E. Uhlhorn, owner of the Dicke and Curtiss theatres in Downers Grove, made a strong campaign to obtain votes for the passage of the measure and received congratulations from many of his fellow exhibitors on his successful fight when he appeared at the Illinois state convention last week.

Aaron Jones and his wife are scheduled to leave for French Lick, Indiana, May 1st, for a short vacation, and Ralph T. Kettering, publicity and advertising manager for Jones, Linick & Schaefer, will spend the month of May at St. Augustine, Florida. Ralph will be accompanied by his wife and two husky sons.

The Blue Bird theatre at East Peoria, Illinois, has been purchased by Paul Rorig, former manager of the Orpheum theatre in Elgin.

W. Beadell's new house, the Avenue, at 31st and Indiana avenue, is now running first run pictures at twenty-five cents admission.

The vaudeville entertainment put on at the recent "Get-Together Dinner" of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners was greatly enjoyed. It was arranged by I.

Maynard Schwartz, who secured the co-operation of Billie Diamond and Phil Tyrrell, of the Gus Sun Agency, in putting it over. Good as the entertainment was, it would have been still better if the lateness of the dinner had not made it necessary for several of the best acts, procured by Mr. Schwartz, to return to the theatres where they were playing before they could present their acts to the diners.

L. B. Rubens' globe trotting in the last year or two, has not appeased his appetite for travel and he is now planning a long world circling trip. He expects to leave New York within the next two months to travel by way of the Panama Canal across to the Pacific, visiting Japan, China and other countries of the Orient, then journeying to India, and on through the Suez Canal, visiting Egypt and Mediterranean points before he returns to Illinois.

The premier performance of the best six compositions received in Balaban & Katz's one thousand dollar contest is scheduled for April 29 at the Chicago theatre and musical critics predict that some great compositions will be heard. In offering the thousand dollar prize it is stipulated by Balaban & Katz that the contestants must enter American compositions, written in America by an American. The judges are to be: Richard Hageman, associate musical director Chicago Civic Opera; Adolph Weidig, Maurice Rosenfeld, Edward L. Moore, Herman De Vries, Karlton K. Hackett, Glenn Dillard Gunn, Rene De Vries, Charles Watts, Florence French, Margie MacLeod and Nathaniel Finston.

Emerson Hough, author of the famous novel, "The Covered Wagon," from which Paramount's great feature picture was made, was one of the large audience which viewed its Chicago premier and at the close of the performance made a short speech, praising the work of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, James Cruze and the twelve hundred actors, who participated in this epic of the screen. Special Representative Flinn, who had charge of the opening, has returned to New York, leaving Dan Roche to supervise the showings during the remainder of the run.

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has stirred up a hornet's nest in demanding payment from radio broadcasters, of music tax, and the radio men from all over the country were to meet at the Drake Hotel this week to plan a fight to a finish on the tax. They have indicated that only in the event of unconditional surrender on the part of the publishers will they consent to use the society's productions. Coming at a time when the motion picture organizations are battling the society, the action of the radio broadcasters is timely and will aid the motion picture interests.

Pinkleman & Corry, owners of the Princess and Gem theatres at Quincy, are reported to be planning a new house for that city.

S. L. Gregory, of Hammond, who is erecting a twelve hundred seat house in Chicago Heights, is also planning to building a new one thousand seat theatre on Twenty-second street, Berwyn.

Manager Chinn's new five hundred seat house at Antioch is rapidly approaching completion and he expects to open it some time within the next three weeks. It is planned to run for four days a week during the summer, but he will make it a six day house if conditions prove favorable.

M. Stern, who recently took over the Liberty theatre in North Chicago, has reopened this theatre, which has been closed for some time.

The sale of Cosmopolitan Securities Company by Nathan Ascher, president of this organization, was reported this week, the properties including the Cosmopolitan theatre, store and office building at 7924-42 South Halsted street. The sale, it is understood, will not cause a change in the conduct of the theatre, which Ascher Brothers will continue to operate. The house has 854 seats.

Brunhild & Young have purchased the Douglas theatre building, located at 22nd and Sawyer. The structure includes a fine nine hundred seat theatre and four stores. This brings the Brunhild & Young circuit of theatres up to five as, before acquiring the Douglas, they owned and operated the New Era, Rogers, Shakespeare and Emmett.

"H. A. Snow's Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera" got away to a big start at the Randolph, Sunday, following an unusually vigorous advertising and exploitation campaign, and Manager McCurdy expects the run to be one of the longest in Chicago's picture history.

"Enemies of Women," which opened at the Roosevelt, Sunday, for an extended run, is getting great crowds and this feature promises to duplicate the success it has had in eastern cities during its Chicago loop engagement.

Among the Exchanges

WALTER D. NEALAND, Goldwyn publicity director, has returned from Peoria, Illinois, where he has been assisting Dee Robinson put over "The Christian," at the Madison theatre for a full week's run at that playhouse, opening Sunday, April 22nd. "Souls for Sale" opens at Balaban & Katz's Chicago theatre the week of May 14th.

United Artists is now represented on Chicago's west side by Reggie Aberts, a salesman with a long and successful record behind him in Chicago's film circles.

George Smith is now connected with the Fox organization and will handle non-theatrical pictures. He resigned from Vitagraph's sales force to take the new position.

F. J. Godsol, of Goldwyn Pictures, was in Chicago last week for a hasty visit, stopping off for a few hours between trains on his way to the Culver City studios. He visited the local exchange and conferred with District Supervisor Hickey and Manager Reingold, predicting that "Souls for Sale" will score a big hit in Chicago and the Middle West section.

Goldwyn's staff is all pepped up with the spring drive at its peak, and at a sales meeting held on April 21st, at the branch office, enthusiasm ran high when the salesmen were handed bonus checks by District Supervisor George A. Hickey, who delivered an address and read a congratulatory telegram from General Sales Manager James R. Grainger. The Chicago office is running close to the top of the list in the contest and many of the local boys expect to win prizes.

Manager I. W. Mandell, of Security Pictures, has removed his offices from 808 S. Wabash avenue to the ground floor at 738 S. Wabash avenue.

Country Sales Manager Bromberg, of First National, has returned from a trip to some of the leading key centers of the state and reports that Watts and Thurston, owners of the Gaiety and Princess theatres in Springfield, have renewed their franchise for a long term and signed up with Mr. Bromberg for "Daddy," and "Toby Tyler." Other houses which have signed up to continue their franchise or taken out new ones, are the New Apollo theatre at Belvidere, the Orpheum at Quincy, and the Lincoln Square and Avon at Decatur, the latter having been signed up by Bob Lucas.

Brockton Is Scene of Strong "Souls for Sale" Campaign

Brockton, Mass.—Robert F. Keene and Ivan A. Rogers, proprietors of the Colonial theatre, and Buddy Stuart, Goldwynner, put over an intensive advertising campaign for "Souls for Sale," described by them as follows:

"We had fifteen 24-sheets, 100 one-sheet, 400 window cards, and 25 hall-sheets in frames with 8 x 10 photos in them—(these we used in hotels and restaurants). We also used 50,000 heralds which we had distributed from house to house.

"We had a tie-up with Met Shoe Store on 'Souls for Sale,' also one with Hunter Book Store on 'Read the Book—See the Goldwyn Picture of Rupert Hughes 'Souls for Sale' at Colonial Theatre—Now.'

"We also got tie-ups with four drug stores on Palm Olive Cold Cream showing picture of Eleanor Boardman using same and stating see her at Colonial theatre in 'Souls for Sale.'

"Buddy Stuart arranged for Rupert Hughes to wire Mayor Manning of Brockton and invited himself and family to attend first evening performance in all New England, we in turn wrote him a note and sent the complimentary tickets.

Knotted Cords Used to Put "Message of Coue" Over

WATERLOO, IOWA.—One hundred thousand knots and a pair of crutches were used to put "The Message of Emile Coue" over at the Strand Theatre. A friend of Arthur E. Weld, the manager, wrote him a letter to the effect he had put the formula "day by day" into practice and found no further use for the piloting sticks. Mr. Weld draped them over an easel and placed them in front of the theatre with a big card containing the letter.

The knots were tied in South Sea Island twine, 20 to a strand, and these were tied to a card labeled "Coue Health Strand." Five thousand of these cards were mailed to a selected list, plain envelopes being used and nothing printed that would lead to the sender. By the time the picture was announced the whole town was talking about the health strings and wanted to know more about the health theory.

Ten "Roses" Given Passes to See "Mighty Lak' a Rose"

Mansfield, Ohio.—The management of the Majestic theatre took the names of ten women whose first names were Rose at random from the city directory, printed them in the want columns of the Mansfield Sunday News and offered passes to those of the ten who came to the News office and identified themselves. The exploitation stunt was a direct tie-up between the theatre and the newspaper in conjunction with the run of "Mighty Lak' a Rose."

The want ad read: "Mrs. Rose — is invited to attend the photoplay, 'Mighty Lak' a Rose,' as a guest of the News at the Majestic theatre, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Kindly call at the News office before Thursday and receive two tickets."

It was an even split with the theatre supplying the passes and the newspaper contributing the want ads.

Happiness Week a Strong Boost for "Peg O' My Heart"

Memphis, Tenn. — "Happiness Week" proved to be a good will getter in Memphis in connection with the showing of "Peg o' My Heart" at Loew's Palace theatre. The stunt was engineered by Harold Horne, manager of the theatre, and G. E. Brown, director of publicity.

The Commercial Appeal carried a half dozen stories on the "Happiness Week" program which included the free distribution of flowers to the sick people of Memphis who were unable to see the picture. Scores of boxes of beautiful flowers went out, being distributed by society women who volunteered their aid.

Invitations also were extended the sick ones who received flowers to visit the Palace as the guest of the management during the following week if their health permitted.

It was chiefly a good will campaign but the publicity the week's attraction received and the fact that each recipient and each woman who aided in the distribution has been made a fast friend of the theatre, cannot be overlooked.

Uses Novel Means to Aid Early "Robin Hood" Performances

Seattle, Wash.—A novel method of drawing the children's patronage to early shows and increasing their interest in good music was used by Manager Leroy V. Johnson of the Liberty theatre here recently, in conjunction with the run of "Robin Hood."

A few days before the day of the event, papers in the city carried news stories and advertisements to the effect that the Liberty would offer cash prizes to the children between the ages of 6 and 16 who offered the best suggestions for an organ concert of three numbers.

The Saturday of the performance the children were to gather in front of the Liberty at 10:15 a. m. Each child was to have his three musical numbers written on a slip of paper. The slips would be collected and turned over to Oliver G. Wallace, who was acting as guest organist at the Liberty during the "Robin Hood" run.

During the first show, Mr. Wallace read over all the slips and picked out the three best concerts that were suggested. At the end of the show he gave his special concert, and the names of the winners of the contest were announced from the stage. The one who suggested the concert that was played by the organist received $10 in cash. The second prize was $5 and the third prize, $2.50.

As an added attraction, motion pictures of the children in front of the theatre were taken.

"The Fast Mail" Given Aid of Railway Company

WINNIPEG, CANADA.—The Lyceum theatre obtained valuable advance publicity for the showing of "The Fast Mail" through co-operation given by the Winnipeg Street Railway Company.

Half-sheet cards advertising the Lyceum picture were used on the windows each side of the trolleys for the first time in the history of the city.

The Lyceum theatre ran a short reel showing the construction of the new 170,000 horsepower plant which the railway company is erecting at Great Falls, and in return received the space on the street cars.

In addition, Manager Egan had a miniature electric train set against a background of miniature mountain scenery, traveling continuously in a neat glass cabinet and then placed in the front of the theatre for the week before and week during the showing of this melodrama.

Venetian Set Built in Lobby for "Adam and Eva"

Birmingham, Ala.—Manager Thomas D. Coleman, of the Galax theatre, stressed two points in his campaign on "Adam and Eva": First, that the picture was from the brilliant Broadway stage success, and second, that the picture was made by the star and the director of "Knighthood." These two facts were put in all ads and on all slides.

A Venetian set was the centre of attraction in the lobby. This scene was painted on sheeting and placed in the centre of the lobby. It was framed by lattice work which arched over at the top. Stills and lobby cards were used on this lattice work. Across the top of this was a banner reading: "Adam did not approve of Eva's $40,000 Venetian masquerade." Across the entire front of the lobby stretcher a banner, presenting the title, the star and the above-mentioned sales points. Displayed in several places were indorsements from the Better Films Committee, calling it "an exquisite picture." Just above the set and to the front of it was a row of lights, some painted red and some blue; this lent color to the painting.

A window display was secured from a jewelry store on the strength of the purchase of a watch and a bracelet in the picture.

Fashion Promenade Is Staged on "My American Wife"

Dallas, Texas.—An elaborate style show was staged by the Palace theatre, in conjunction with the Neiman-Marcus company, on "My American Wife."

The name given to this style show was "The Golden Apple." A springtime fantasy of the ancient and modern Paris, which was interpreted on the screen by a short film, followed by an allegory in the form of a prologue which explained the title, "The Golden Apple," and its connection to the style revue. A epilogue brought the show to an end and marked the awarding of "The Golden Apple" to the fairest of the models.

Between the prologue and the epilogue was the promenade of fashions composed of eleven young ladies, the best models that could be obtained in Dallas. Every type of spring dress for women was displayed, also to add interest to the show special dance acts were inserted. The theatre was decorated to lend atmosphere to the show and the spring styles were broadcasted by radio throughout the country. It was the first time in history that an event of this nature has been broadcasted.

During the showing of the garments by the models the Palace theatre orchestra under the direction of Don Albert rendered popular selections.

The style revue was written and staged under the direction of Herman Philipson, who is advertising manager of the Neiman-Marcus company.

Newspapers Ties Up on Contest for "The Mystery Box"

New York, N. Y.—An unusually comprehensive tie-up on a short subject has been made between the New York Evening Mail and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on "The Mystery Box."

"The Mystery Box," which deals with the subject of radio, made its New York bow at the Rialto theatre. Beginning with the issue of March 31st, the Evening Mail presented a full page story about the production, together with a layout of stills and also an announcement of the contest, which will run for six weeks.

According to this announcement the Evening Mail and the producer will give prizes for the best description of a person's experience in radio. These prizes will be displayed prominently in a Broadway window. The contest is open to all. The winning story is to be used, if possible, as a basis for a new picture to be produced by the Bray Productions some time in the near future.

During the six weeks in which this contest will run the Evening Mail will list the names of all the theatres that have booked "The Mystery Box" in the territory covered by the Mail. The newspaper will also print posters to be used on all Evening Mail wagons announcing the contest and also advertising the production that is appearing at the local theatres.

Essay Contest Is Tied Up to "Poor Men's Wives"

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—An essay contest was used to good effect in exploiting "Poor Men's Wives" at the Bijou theatre, by Phil Kahn, of the Al Lichtman exchange.

Five days before the premier at the Bijou the paper announced $25 in gold as prizes for the best thoughts on the questions: "Should 'Poor Men's Wives' be Pitted? Can They be Happy?" The time limit placed on the answers was eight days from the date of the first announcement which covered the entire run of the picture.

For six days the paper carried an article reporting on the progress of the contest. Phil Kahn supplied all the copy for these articles which got into print unabridged.

Floral Tie-Up Is Made to Aid "The White Flower"

FORT SMITH, ARK.—Manager Hugo Plath of the Palace theatre arranged a tie-up with his local florist to help him sell "The White Flower." The florist made Mr. Plath a wholesale price on white carnations and all the ladies attending the matinee on the opening day were given a white carnation.

The florist loaned the theatre palms, ferns and other flowers which made the lobby a veritable hot house. Each white carnation carried a small tag giving the name of the picture and the star. Betty Compson, and since most the ladies carried the flowers home with them, this piece of advertising reached quite a large field of prospects.

All house employees wore a white flower and all the traffic cops in town were furnished with a white flower.

Five Hundred Telegrams Are Sent to Aid "Mad Love"

WORCESTER, MASS.—Manager Curtis, of the Plaza theatre, was aided by Goldwynner Buddy Stuart in putting over a thorough exploitation campaign for "Mad Love."

A stunt that attracted attention was the sending out on Western Union telegram blanks of 500 fake telegrams signed "Pola Negri," bearing a Los Angeles date line. The telegram read as follows: "I trust that you will be able to see my newest picture, 'Mad Love,' coming to Worcester next week. Many persons who have seen it have written to me to say that they consider it a better picture than 'Passion.' I think myself that it is. I certainly have worked hard to make it so." (Signed) Pola Negri.

Banners were used freely in the lobby of the theatre in advance of the showing. These banners read, "Pola Negri in 'Mad Love,' a Goldwyn picture." One was placed over the street entrance into the lobby, another over the foyer door so that persons entering the theatre could see it, and another over the foyer door as they came out.

Orphans' Matinee is Given on "Prince and the Pauper"

Seattle, Wash.—About 75 youngsters, all inmates of the Mother Ryther Home for orphans in this city, were guests of John Danz, manager of the Colonial theatre, recently when he played "The Prince and the Pauper."

The free matinee for the children was a part of the exploitation put over by Mr. Danz to interest the young people in the picture and make them friends of the house. It was arranged in conjunction with the motion picture committee of the Seattle council, Parent-Teacher Associations, thus insuring official backing for the picture and good newspaper publicity.

In addition to witnessing the show at Manager Danz's expense, the children were also furnished automobile transportation to and from the theatre by the Colonial management, through a tie-up with Seattle automobile dealers.

"Souls for Sale" Given Extra Heavy Exploitation Drive

New York, N. Y.—One of the heaviest exploitation campaigns yet used by the Capitol theatre was conducted for "Souls for Sale," by Eddie Bonns, manager of exploitation for Goldwyn, and W. R. Ferguson, of the home office exploitation staff.

Two and a half weeks in advance of the opening, one and three sheet teaser window cards reading: "Is Your Soul for Sale?" were posted on advertising boards of subway and elevated railroads and sniped all over town. A week in advance of the opening these teaser cards were covered by one and three sheet pictorials giving the name of the theatre and the date of showing.

A national tie-up recently concluded by Messrs. Bonns and Ferguson with the manufacturers of Palm Olive Cold Cream and with ADS hydrogen peroxide resulted in 500 window cards of each in various stores carrying these articles.

Another exploitation stunt that attracted great attention was an auction flag about 2½ x 3 ft. in size which was placed outside the theatre, in the branch exchange and in other places where it attracted great attention. The background of this auction flag was red and it carried the title of the film "Souls for Sale" in black type on white ribbons. A novelty auction poster, which was a reproduction of this auction flag, were used for various exploitation features. Fifteen hundred of these were displayed in stores and shops along Broadway.

Automobile Parade Gotten on "Poor Men's Wives"

WASHINGTON, D. C.—When "Poor Men's Wives" played at the Central theatre, a tie-up was made by J. H. Beaver of the Al Lichtman exchange with the Chevrolet Motor Company in which approximately thirty cars were used. In the back windows and across the windshields cards were placed stating that the Chevrolet car was used by rich as well as "Poor Men's Wives"; "Prove it at the Central theatre, week of April 15th." These cards were carried in the cars used by the entire Chevrolet sales force and used the whole week of the "Poor Men's Wives" run.

In addition the Chevrolet people arranged a parade of its cars in cooperation with the exploiteer, in which all the sales force took part.

A feature of the exploitation campaign which attracted unusual attention was a long strip, 46 inches in length by 15 inches in width, on which was printed the picture of the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, California. The caption at the top of this strip was, "How would you like to get into the movies?" Underneath the pictures in smaller type was the following: "Goldwyn's massive studios in Los Angeles where Eleanor Boardman, one of the most recent of big screen finds, appeared in Rupert Hughes' 'Souls for Sale,' in which she is now starring and which tears aside the veil of secrecy which surrounds the life of screen stars. Miss Boardman urges all girls with ambitions for a movie career to see this picture. She will be pleased to answer all questions about getting a start in the movies. Write to her at the Goldwyn Studios."

Gets Doctor's Office Effect in Lobby on "Dr. Jack"

Mason City, Iowa.—During the run of "Dr. Jack," the management of the Palace theatre used the lobby doors as entrances into a doctor's office, with lettering reading: "Dr. Jack, Laughing Specialist, Laughing Hours, 1 to 11 P. M." The words "Private" covered all other doors but entrance.

In the lobby a doctor's operating table was used, filled with needles, pins, buttons, etc., with card reading: "Make use of these if you laugh too much."

Safety First Campaign Is Put Over as "Driven" Boost

San Francisco, Cal.—One of the most extensive campaigns in the history of the Granada theatre was used for the opening of "Driven."

A city-wide "Safety First" drive was inaugurated for the purpose of seeing that anything which was "Driven" was "Driven" carefully, and three days before the opening of the picture thousands of automobiles carried stickers on the windshields reading, "This car is driven by a careful driver." These caused a great deal of comment and paved the way for the two parades which were held on the opening day, Saturday.

A tie-up was made with the Yellow Cab Company, and at the noon hour a long string of Yellow cabs paraded the down-town streets preceded by a brass band. Appropriately worded banners put over the message in great shape and resulted in great publicity for the taxi company as well as the theatre and picture. The entire fleet of Yellow cabs, 110 strong, carried cards reading: "Hop in and be 'Driven' to the Granada to see 'Driven.'"

Half an hour later the Howard Buick Company, Pacific Coast distributors of the Buick, staged another parade headed by the first car of this make sold on the coast and followed by one of each of the subsequent models, each with a banner stating the length of time or mileage which the car had been "Driven," and advising spectators to buy a Buick and be "Driven" to to the Granada.

The campaign was handled by the Herbert L. Rothchild publicity staff, cooperating with D. M. Vandawalker, Jr., Universal publicity director.

Effective Campaign Put Behind Run of "Under Two Flags"

Dallas, Texas—Manager Charles Mitchell, assisted by Exploiteer Jack Meredith, exploited "Under Two Flags" at the Queen theatre with very effective methods.

First, the entire lobby and front of the theatre was covered over with canvas to represent a tent. French and Arabian flags were draped artistically about the lobby and in the center of this display was a large cut-out of Priscilla Dean dressed in her regimental costume as Cigarette. A baby spotlight played upon the cut-out of Priscilla Dean and over her head hung the French and Arabian flags.

There were several window displays advertising the novel in connection with the picture, also the leading jewelry store of Dallas advertised Priscilla Dean pearls in their windows, showing small cut-outs and photographs of Priscilla Dean with small silk French and Arabian flags.

A tie-up was arranged between the local public schools and the theatre, whereby four hundred children would be admitted free to see this picture. A personal letter sent out by the manager went to the different principals of the grammar and high schools of Dallas and attached to this letter were ten passes to be awarded as prizes to the ten students for the best averages for the week.

George Rea, manager of the Colonial theatre, Washington Court House, Ohio, made use of his automobile to exploit "Adam's Rib," as shown here

Teaser Doorknob Hanger Is Used on "The Pilgrim"

CHICAGO HEIGHTS, ILL.—Practically every doorknob in the city recently carried a printed reward of $100 for the capture of an escaped convict who stole a parson's clothing, a girl's heart and a thousand laughs.

The printed doorknob cards were supplemented by window cards identifying the escaped prisoner as Convict 23. He was, of course, "The Pilgrim" and the reward was part of the exploitation for the run of the attraction at the Lincoln-Dixie theatre.

Elaborate Presentation Given "The Ninety and Nine"

Los Angeles, Cal.—During the recent run of "The Ninety and Nine" at Sid Grauman's Million Dollar theatre, a huge locomotive was built on the stage. With its mechanical effects, said to be the best ever constructed by the theatre's staff of mechanics, and its accompanying prologue, the picture had one of the best settings ever given in the theatre.

An exact, or as near exact as possible, duplicate of a giant locomotive was constructed and the background showed an immense timber set through which the locomotive sped. From the speeding of the giant drive wheels to the smoke issuing from the stack and sparks of fire in the forest, the illusion was perfect; by the aid of treadmill and splendid lighting effects—it gave the appearance that the locomotive was traveling at terrific speed through the burning timberland.

The flying sparks of the burning timber were produced by the aid of stereopticons and red flares. The result was a spellbinder and an additional effect was obtained by raising the picture screen at the moment when the hero was driving the locomotive through the forest fire and showing the built locomotive in action.

In addition to the locomotive stunt Mr. Grauman showed a separate prologue. This was called "Twenty Minutes at a Railroad Station," and was presented just before the picture. The scene was supposed to represent the railroad station in the town of Marlow, the town in the picture, and the different characters that really appear on the film were seen on the station platform. The action of the prologue was made up of stunts by the station agent, the old maid and the gang generally found about a country station.

Adam's Rib Ball Staged to Aid Showing of "Adam's Rib"

Jamestown, N. Y.—When the Palace theatre here presented "Adam's Rib," Manager Howard Waugh, assisted by Exploiteer Royster, of the Buffalo Paramount exchange, put over one of the best campaigns ever staged in this city. The feature event was the "Adam's Rib Ball," held on Saturday night before the opening Sunday. At this event, which was widely advertised, Mr. Waugh engaged a jazz orchestra which he named the Adam's Rib Band. This band, he said, was "all to the mustard" and he offered a prize of $500 to any other musical organization in town that could outplay the boys in putting down a jazz barrage. There were no comers to claim the prize, but the stunt brought a lot of space in the public prints.

Mr. Waugh also arranged for about fifty window displays, put over a double page tie-up ad in one of the newspapers, billboarded the film like a circus and put out several thousand heralds.

In the double page ad Mr. Waugh titled the display, "Things They Did Not Have in the Days of Adams Rib," and offered free tickets to patrons finding the mis-spelled words in the various ads inserted.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

"For You, My Boy"

Rubicon-State Rights—Six Reels

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

THESE is an appealing story running through "For You, My Boy" that should give the picture a decided element of audience appeal. Mother love dramas have been done often, but the story of a father's sacrifice for the sake of his son has been seldom used, and it is on this that "For You, My Boy" bases its appeal.

The outstanding role, that of the father, has been placed in the hands of a competent actor, B. H. Lewin, who successfully makes the transition from the young bank clerk, torn with grief over the loss of his son, to the broken-down old man, searching for this same son. In the latter part of the picture he is strongly reminiscent of Frank Bacon.

There should be a strong appeal to the youngsters, and some of the older folks as well, in some rather unusual fight scenes. Not that fight scenes are new, but these are different. The boy, after the father has permitted a wealthy couple to adopt him and to claim him as their own, falls into bad company and takes to frequenting Kelly's Sporting Club, a hang-out for "tough kids," where crap games, boxing bouts and what-not are staged. The boy, who is regarded as rather up-stage, ends up by knocking out his heavier opponent and is the hero of the hour. There is some excellent scrapping in these sequences, and a gang of real kids.

Although much of the material is not essentially new (what is?) it has been given a number of excellent twists, here and there. The boy, for instance, goes to prison for a crime he did not commit to shield that man he supposes to be his father. His real father promises to wait for him. The boy is released early for good behavior, and when the old man reaches the prison he learns that he is nearly two years too late, and the boy has disappeared. Little touches like this do much to make the picture interesting.

The situation developed at the close is an excellent one. The boy becomes involved in the greatest crisis of his career, and it is the reunion with the old man which solves it.

The Story—Young bank clerk, believing he is acting for the best, permits wealthy couple to adopt his motherless son as their own. The boy inclines to wildness as he grows up, and his real father is ever in the background, watching over him. Grown, the boy assumes the guilt of a robbery to shield the man he believes his father, and goes to the penitentiary. "Westbound Limited"

F. B. O.—6100 Feet

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS production offers a train de-luxe which unfortunately is hampered just slightly by none too smooth a roadbed. Unlike the Twentieth Century, the Broadway or Overland Limited, "Westbound Limited" takes in a few too many "tanks" and an occasional unnecessary detour. The action is inclined to move more at the pace of a local than a limited. It makes exceptional time for a good part of the journey, but just falls short of getting you to your destination as rapidly as you think you should arrive.

It tells an interesting story, though by no means a new one, and it provides a number of thrills that are keener in their anticipation than in their realization. There is no getting away from the fact that it stirs you up at times, but there is something in the climaxes that does not register as heavily as you are prepared for.

The real thriller is in the impending crash of the express trains and the race on horseback by a short cut to prevent the crash. It shows some rather daring horsemanship by Johnny Harron, and has you rooting for him to make it to the crossing before the limited arrives there. This is an exceptional sequence, and one that for action and photography has rarely been surpassed.

Incidentally Johnny Harron, as the son of Ralph Lewis, engineer of the limited, rather takes much of the play away from his dad, though Lewis' portrayal of the role is excellent and he gets all the sympathy possible out of it.

The Cast

Bill Buckley.....	Ralph Lewis
Mrs. Buckley.....	Claire McDowell
Esther Miller.....	Ella Hall
Johnny Buckley.....	Johnny Harron
Henry.....	Taylor Graves
Raymond McKim.....	Wedgewood Nowell
Jack Smith.....	David Kirby
Bernard Miller.....	Richard Morris
Mrs. Miller.....	Jane Morgan

Produced by Emory Johnson.

The Story—Deals with a railroad engineer whose happy home is presumably about to be broken up by the villainy of the unscrupulous but confidential adviser of the president of the railroad. Bill Buckley is led to believe that his wife, in his absence on the road, has been unfaithful to him. The villain is thwarted in his atrocities both to the engineer's wife and the president's daughter, and the story ends happily in the marriage of the engineer's son and the president's daughter.

Classification—Melodrama.

Production Highlights—The race to prevent the crash of express trains. Splendid work of the entire cast and excellent photography.

Exploitation Angles—Tie-ups with railroads and railroad offices. Play up the numerous thrills, the daring riding of Johnny Harron and the work of Ralph Lewis.

Drawing Power—It is adapted to houses of all classification.

"What Wives Want"

Universal—4745 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS triangle story offers nothing new in the idea or development, but because it comes close to reality, is well interpreted by players possessing an adaptability for their roles, and is finely staged against backgrounds in harmony with the plot it will interest most picturegoers. They will forget the box office title in their attention to the manner in which the neglected wife, to save herself, allows her sister to be compromised.

The feature starts out along very familiar lines and during its development no one will notice any marked originality—not even in the figure of the newly married sister, who, in a spirit of self-sacrifice, acknowledges the sin of the other. If the spectator wanted to, he could puncture the case the husband has against his sister-in-law, since there is no real compromise, but only a scene wherein the two sisters are guests of the philanderer.

Up to the climax the story features the husband giving excuses to be away from his wife owing to the pressure of business engagements, and the attempt of his hand-shaking partner to make love to his wife. The younger sister of the latter arrives with her husband after a two weeks' honeymoon and discovers evidence that happiness has not rewarded the others. She learns that the wife has an appointment with the trespasser and confronts them.

This is the logical place to introduce the neglected husband, who upbraids his partner for his erring ways. Oh, yes, the guilt is established when he notices his wife's gloves. The sister steps forth from her hiding place and confesses that she wore them. But when her husband comes through the door he places a wrong conclusion upon the scene. Thus it is up to the bride to save her sister or admit her guilt. The hot-headed youth knocks the playfellow cold, and when he reaches home proceeds to choke the truth out of his wife. The timely intervention of the erring sister saves her. She confesses at last. And so the neglectful husband appreciates that he can't mix business and love. A reconciliation is effected for all concerned.

An obvious tale, but finely directed, and staged in keeping with the manner of smart society. The director has kept the players in fine repression.

The Cast

Claire Howard.....	Ethel Grey Terry
Austin Howard.....	Vernon Steele
John Reeves.....	Ramsey Wallace
David Loring.....	Niles Welsh
Alice Loring.....	Margaret Landis
Mrs. Van Dusen.....	Lila Leslie
Newhart.....	Harry A. Burrows
By Edward T. Lowe, Jr., and Perry N. Vekroff.

Scenario by Edward T. Lowe, Jr. Directed by Jack Conway.

The Story—Wife is neglected by her husband, and his partner in business seizes opportunity to make a conquest if possible. The wife responds to his attentions, but her sister saves her from disgrace by assuming the guilt, which, of course, antagonizes her husband. A divorce is contemplated between the young people, but the neglected wife confesses her guilt. Result: A reconciliation.

Classification—Eternal triangle story involving two married couples.

Production Highlights—The finely staged production. The adaptability of the players for their roles. The fairly good suspense. The climax when the husbands arrive at the rendezvous.

Exploitation Angles—Title might suggest a teaser campaign. Feature the stills. Emphasize the fact that the story is genuine.

Drawing Power—Suitable for second-class downtown houses.

"Her Fatal Millions"

Metro—5390 Feet

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

A PRESENT day light comedy of the kind that bids for popularity, the locale being that of a fairly good-sized town, presumably in the Middle West, one that has grown from a village to a factory center, incidentally making Amos Bishop, who owns the enterprise, a millionaire. Nevertheless, the local activities failed to offer sufficient inducement to hold an ambitious youngster, who, with the beginning of the story, leaves for the city, there to seek his fortune. When he leaves he places a modest engagement ring upon the finger of Mary Bishop, who, it is important to establish, bears no relation to Amos Bishop, for upon the complications due to the surname being the same hangs the rather complicated plot, that grows thicker as the story is told. It might be well to mention here that the narrative, despite being complicated, has its very interesting bits of rural comedy, human interest and romance and is well played by a splendid cast.

We first become acquainted with Mary Bishop, characterized by Viola Dana, when Mary sees her boy friend to the train. Then we find her the clerk in a jewelry store and note that as she has grown a bit more mature she has also become more attractive. Mary has heard about Fred Garrison's success, but has also read a city newspaper which described the fashionable wedding of one Fred Garrison to a daughter of society. So, when in the course of her monotonous life she receives a telegram to be at the station, stating that he was passing through in his private car, Mary has the feminine desire to appear prosperous, too, and thereby hangs the tale.

In borrowed finery and a limousine she awaits his arrival. Believing him married, she claims to have married, too—and since she received the telegram addressed to Mary Bishop, impulsively claims to have married the old millionaire. It takes an accident and a world of detailed action to unravel the twists and prove neither of the pair married. It brings about Viola Dana's attempt at disguise (to escape the millionaire's wrath), using some masculine apparel so much too big for her that perhaps with purpose she resembles Charles Chaplin and scores as emphatically a comedienne.

The direction is good; Miss Dana is easy and charming in the role of Mary Bishop, which exacts an amount of versatility. A thoroughly entertaining picture, manifesting no other intent than to amuse.

The Cast

Mary Bishop.....Viola Dana
Fred Garrison.....Huntley Gordon
Lew Carmody.....Allan Forrest
Louise Carmody.....Peggy Brown
Amos Bishop.....Edward Connelly
Mary Applewin.....Kate Price
Landlady.....Joy Winthrop
Story by William Dudley Pelley. Adapted by Arthur Statter. Directed by William Beaudine. Photographed by John Arnold.

The Story—About a girl who is left behind in a small city to await the return of a native son, who seeks his fortune in New York. It describes her life, chiefly, and not until the young millionaire is due to return do evidences of his success become apparent. She has read an account of a man by the same name having married a society girl, and, wishing to appear as prosperous as he, she borrows finery and, impulsively, the name of the town millionaire, which leads her into difficulties and unforeseen complications. Eventually, however, after a couple of sub-plots have unraveled, the happy pair are reunited, ending in Mary's unhappy existence becoming the realization of her dreams of life in the city, the wife of Fred Garrison, the small city boy, who made good.

Production Highlights—Miss Dana's scenes in disguise, when she resembles Charles Chaplin and drains the situations for comedy. Scenes in the millionaire's home during the reign of exaggerated complications.

Drawing Power—The star and big names in the cast.

"The Truth About Wives"

B. B. Productions-State Rights—5973 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS is another eternal triangle story, and because it lacks any novelty of situation, but carries along on its threadbare theme, it hardly suffices in interesting the spectator beyond the good interpretation by the star. Betty Blythe is well cast as the self-sacrificing wife whose marriage is a failure. In fact, she is about the only asset the picture possesses, for the action follows a very familiar groove and becomes far-fetched in its melodramatic moments. Had the author incorporated some new twists it would have lent more appeal, or if Director Windom had introduced some of his own it might have proved more convincing.

Instead we see the familiar figure of the wife who has made a mess of marriage by choosing the wrong man, who turns out to be a rotter, while the rival, a man of spotless character, still carries a deep love for her. His attitude is that of the "big brother," for he intends watching over her. This indicates that his opportunity will arrive in the course of the action. There is very little suspense, so the interest rests upon Miss Blythe's study of the role. The picture promises big things at the start, but soon after settles in its groove, once the couple are married. Then comes a caption which establishes the fact that they have been married four years.

The development of the plot brings in the wealthy old bounder who would buy the wife and the youth who really loves her. Familiar figures, these. But when the concluding reels are unwound one notices a melodramatic flare which is unconvincing and trite. The climax presents a murder and subsequent trial with the wife held for the crime of killing the rich old man, although her husband is, in reality, guilty. She doesn't extract much sympathy for her predicament in shielding her "no-account" husband even for the sake of the youngster. The courtroom scene is rather tedious because much of the preceding action is gone over again.

The ending arrives in the obvious manner—showing the husband, conscience-stricken, confessing to the crime and conveniently committing suicide in order that the wife might find happiness with the honest admirer. Tyrone Power and William Carleton give competent support. The picture carries an appeal for feminine audiences.

The Cast

Helen Frazer.....Betty Blythe
Howard Hendricks.....Tyrone Power
Alfred Emerson.....William Carleton
Lettie Lorraine.....Anne Luther
Harold Lawton.....Fred Jones
Col. Bob Alton.....John Daly Murphy
Maid.....Marcia Harris
Mrs. Anthony Frazer.....Nellie Parker Spaulding
Baby.....Frankie Evans
By E. C. Holland. Directed by Lawrence Windom.

The Story—Treats of the eternal triangle, featuring a wife who sacrifices herself, but is saved from selling herself to the highest bidder by the man who loves her. The husband commits suicide after he confesses to killing the wealthy aged bounder. Which provides opportunity for wife to find happiness with a man whose love is honest.

Classification—Eternal triangle story involving melodramatic twist concerning a murder and suicide.

Production Highlights—The good work of star, who gives a finished performance. The capable acting by supporting players. The adequate staging.

Exploitation Angles—Might feature theme, since it usually interests the feminine portion of an audience. Use stills of Betty Blythe and play her up big by mentioning that she is at the head of her own company. Use title which can be exploited through catchlines.

Drawing Power—Should prove suitable for second and third-class houses which cater to feminine clientele.

"You Can't Fool Your Wife"

Paramount—6500 Feet

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

DIRECTLY following the main presentation appears upon the screen a quartette of featured names—"Lewis Stone, Leatrice Joy, Nita Naldi, Pauline Garon"—having a desirable effect—that of encouraging one to settle down and prepare to view a good picture. With four such reliable players, and capable directing, one feels assured. There is no disappointment, for "You Can't Fool Your Wife" IS a good picture from various angles. It is an interesting sort of modern society drama, a production, too, altogether worthy of favorable comment. The picture plunges directly into the story, then keeps on telling it convincingly and entertainingly, taking a firm grip on the interest at the start and holding on with enjoyable tenacity. There are lavish sets, beautiful locations, women in smart apparel and men like those one meets in everyday life, at least in the newspapers.

"You Can't Fool Your Wife" is of the ultra-modern variety and relates how the happy married life of a financier with a flesh-and-blood wife is interrupted by a flirtation into which the husband drifts without meaning to go too far.

It would be difficult, indeed, to improve upon the characterizations delivered by each member of the cast, all of whom deserve special mention.

In addition to this picture being one of beauty from a standpoint of construction and detail, it tells a believable story and offers a glimpse into the problems of those who have money enough to buy everything but happiness.

It embraces all the popular types, the real man, the real wife, the "vamp," the "flapper," the present day physician and the selfish, revengeful type of man, who uses schemes to further his ambitions, rather than the old-fashioned sort of bad man, usually termed "the villain." It's a safe bet that "You Can't Fool Your Wife" will please a big average of motion picture enthusiasts. It has all the "makings."

The Cast

Edith McBride.....Leatrice Joy
Ardrita Saneck.....Nita Naldi

Story by Waldemar Young. Directed by George Melford.

The Story—Garth McBride, a power in the financial world, lives a normal life with a normal wife in a magnificent home, Long Island, N. Y. They accept the invitation of wealthy friends to spend some time in Miami, Florida. The wife of a medical scientist is also in the party, and with a view to social climbing encourages the attentions of McBride, who first admires her as a beautiful woman, without intending to become involved in indiscretion. The flirtation develops until the two decide to take a short pleasure trip in an aeroplane, which they miss on the return trip, and are consequently under deserved suspicion. McBride's wife returns to New York and enlists as a nurse. Due to the enmity of a competitor, McBride is the victim of planned accident. His wife is called as nurse, all of which puts an end to his flirtation with the wife of the physician who attends McBride following the accident, and reunites the pair.

Production Highlights—Almost too numerous to mention. Scenes in Stock Exchange and attempt upon McBride's life; sequence showing the flirtatious pair when on aeroplane trip. The wife's recognition of her husband when called to assist in operation to save his life.

Exploitation Angles—Here's a chance to tie up with railroads running excursion trips. Modistes and household furnishings.

Drawing Power—Play up the all-star cast and feature the gorgeous production. Use names of four popular players featured.

6 good reasons why you should show every Hal Roach comedy

Pathe Exchanges Inc.,

New York City

Gentlemen;

1. Stanley Laurel is a great bet! After seeing his first two pictures have signed him on five year contract.
2. We have Jay Howe, George Jeske, Percy Pembroke and Ralph Cedar, four of the best directors in comedies, working exclusively on one reel pictures.
3. Our General Committee discusses every picture before it starts, watches it during the course of production, and assists in making eliminations and retakes where necessary.
4. The Hal Roach Studios now has invested-including the new ten acre ranch for exterior locations- over $400,000.00 in studio and picture-making equipment, which makes this, if not the best, one of the best constructed and equipped studios in the United States.
5. We are having meetings twice a month in the evenings to discuss ways and means of increasing quality, and my instructions to the directors are NO COMEDY CAN COST TOO MUCH IF IT IS GOOD ENOUGH! And the quality we are getting is certainly evidence of the sincerity in which the staff here is going about making real short comedies.
6. We are endeavoring to make the type of single reel comedies that will run successfully in any type of house, - whether Broadway, New York, or Main Street, Iowa.

Very Sincerely

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

(Educational—Two Reels)

THE first part of this subject we considered to be of rather inferior quality as a laugh provoker. Philbyburg is in the throes of a fly swarm. Swatting the fly serves as the basis of the comedy incident. At one place, you are given a close-up of a horse's back on which the flies, a title announces, are holding "a toboggan contest." Next enters Hamilton with a fly-swatter and proceeds to chase the elusive fly all over Dobbin's hide. With the passing of the flies the reel picks up a bit. "Buddy," the clever dog player, is introduced as Hamilton's companion. The dog, while chasing a frog, dives into the city's reservoir, rakes up the mud bottom and thus pollutes the city's fresh-water supply. The mud-laden water from the reservoir is much in evidence in the incidents that follow. A crowd is gathered to witness the unveiling of the city's new fountain. Following the dedication ceremony, the water is turned on and the spectators are deluged with streams of inky-black water from the reservoir. "Buddy" and Hamilton are forced to quit town by the outraged citizenry.

The second reel presents the exiled Hamilton and his "Buddy" aboard a freight car in the company of four hoboes, who prove to be amply equipped with whiskey flasks. "Buddy" gets in some clever work in the early sequences. A brood of young chicks concealed under an overturned water-basin are also used to introduce some humorous incidents. The flasks, of course, come in for their share of comedy service. The business from start to finish is frankly of the slapstick order. Hamilton goes through with his customary poise.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Farmer Al Falfa's Bride"

(Aesop's Fable-Pathe—Short Reel)

NOW then we find an unusually humorous "fable," and this one, bringing out the moral, "When maidens say no, they often mean yes," starts with a laugh and keeps a laughing tempo all the way. It deviates from many of the fables, using cartoons of the farmer and the lady designed to be Mrs. Al Falfa, and the farmer gets his idea of how the male species of fowl and small animals engage in changing the mind of fair ones who say "no," but mean "yes." The action is very fast and the situations worked out with very funny detail. One of the best of this sort of entertainment among recent releases.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Fourflusher"

(Fox Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS comedy records the adventures of a corpulent count who has fallen from his high estate and who plans to marry an American heiress to save the family name. Not very original, is it? It doesn't succeed in extracting many laughs because of its ancient vintage and the shopworn gags have outlived their usefulness. Witness the valet dressing up to impersonate the count's sister. Witness the dinner scene when slapstick of the old school is employed. The finish brings in the antiquated flivvers with considerable racing around and the w. k. bomb explosion. The piece started off with good intentions but couldn't keep up the pace.—LAURENCE REID.

"Only a Husband," a Hallroom Boys offering on the C. B. C. schedule.

"Winter Has Come"

(Educational—Two Reels)

THIS is another travesty on conventional stages and screen plots that Christies has been turning out. "Winter Has Come" burlesques the old standard dramatic plot in which daughter, returning from the big city with unexpected wealth, arrives just in the nick of time to defeat the cruel, cruel landlord, save the old homestead from a tragic foreclosure, and keep the aged folks from being driven out into the blinding snowstorm. Among those present, of course, is the sleek son of the town-banker, who offers the necessary coin to save the homestead on the condition that he gets the hand of daughter in marriage. But beautiful daughter spurns his gold and casts her lot with her poor but brave and honest rustic lover.

The plot and setting of the original formula are followed throughout. The burlesque is effectively presented, the comedy element being injected by a series of amusing incidents. The race of the daughter to the bank to have her bonds converted into cash wherewith to pay the mortgage and the ruses perpetrated by the hero to embarrass the landlord and the sheriff are among the highlights of the subject. In the race between the rival parties to reach the homestead before the fatal hour of foreclosure, there is much scrambling as the sleighs are overturned in the snowdrifts and the occupants pitched out. This part weakens perceptibly in the comedy element.

There are some shots of the Truckee snow country where Al Christie, who directed, took a company for the exteriors. Dorothy Devore appears in the daughter's role while Earl Rodney is seen in the part of the rustic sweetheart. Both principals appear to advantage and the support is adequate.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Weeping Waters"

(Pathe-Kiser Artfilm—One Reel)

THIS is based on an Indian legend of the Oregon country with the scenes laid in mountain caves and streams. Happy Heart, daughter of Chief Storm, awaits beside a deep pool the coming of her chosen mate, Bright Eagle. A witch woman offers her her choice of moccasins for the lover, whose destiny depends upon her choice. She refuses them. Storm Cloud has chosen Black Hawk for Happy Heart. When the witch offers Storm Cloud the moccasins he hurls them over a cliff at the feet of Happy Heart. She accepts them as a happy omen, but the bewitched moccasins send Bright Eagle to his death in the pool. Happy Heart is saved from Black Hawk and her lover's soul becomes the guardian spirit of the pool. The story is a very pretty one and the photography shows some exceptionally beautiful scenes.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"The Noon Whistle"

(Roach-Pathe—One Reel)

STAN LAUREL proves himself considerable comedian in this snappy comedy whose scenes are laid in a planing mill. There is not a dull moment from the time he gets the job until the foreman is fired for the troubles Laurel implicates him in.

Laurel is stupidity personified. He is everything he should not be on the job. Planks carried by him innocently catch the foreman under the chin and bags of lime, etc., dropped by him constantly find a resting place on the dome of his superior. A policeman who is summoned shares many of the same fates as the foreman and because of the manner in which the incidents are evolved the comedian is always exempt from punishment.

There is no end of opportunity for humor in the fast moving action and there are probably few screen comedians who could get as much real humor out of the action as Laurel does. It is a highly amusing picture.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Some Sense and Some Nonsense"

(Educational—One Reel)

THIS is up to the usual fine standard of Lyman H. Howe's "Hodge Podge" reel in point of novelty and interest. Thrills and laughs and the mystifying effects of trick photography are here in pleasing variety. Inchoate masses, suggestive of Conan Doyle's ectoplasm, evolve themselves into clever sculptures of notables past and present—Beethoven, the Sultan and his harem, John Philip Sousa, and Thomas Edison. Next are introduced some beautifully tinted scenes of the Ocklawaha River in Florida, with excerpts from Longfellow that serve admirably as sub-titles. Then back again to more trick photography in "A Whirl Around the Globe." The reel concludes with a cartoon titled "Auto Speed Demon," which fairly whizzes from laugh to thrill. Here is a split-reel subject which, in our opinion, will hold its place in any high-class program among the better houses.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Sunny Spain"

(Roach-Pathe—One Reel)

IF Paul Parrott appeals to you as a comedian you'll be bound to like him in this one. If he doesn't appeal to you you'll like him anyhow. He certainly goes through a lot of funny stunts and gets every bit of humor out of them.

Stalling as a soldier of fortune in Spain just as a revolution starts over the discovery of a mine he gets directly into the path of gun-fire, with shells whizzing so close to his head as to make the hair stand on edge. Eventually he escapes by showing more fleetness of foot than the speed of the shell.

From this incident he is carried off by a rich senorita to her father's rubber plantation, where a bull fight is in progress on his arrival. Inadvertently he is thrust into the bull ring and his escapades as a toreador are ludicrous in the extreme. In fact "throwing the bull" brings the hero both fame and fortune. There is wide scope throughout for the Parrott strain of humor and the comedy while rough in spots is well worth while.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

In and Out of the Omaha Branch-Offices

E. N. McFARLAND, the new branch manager for United Artists, is one of the youngest executives of the motion picture business in the Middle West. He was selected from a field of prospects by T. Y. Manager McFarland, for three years covered the Nebraska and Iowa field for Famous Players-Lasky out of the Omaha exchange.

Omaha claims more than an ordinary interest in Harold Lloyd, because Nebraska is the native heath of the famous screen comedian Burchard, Neb., is the name of the obscure hamlet where Lloyd first moved and had his being.

The house where Lloyd was born and the house of his youth are both functioning as dwelling places, and occasionally the old home town people point with pride to these buildings.

Pawnee, the county seat, is planning a holiday when Lloyd shall make his promised visit to the old town. He lived in Pawnee after he donned long trousers.

An old lady who held Lloyd on her lap years ago will be one of the first to greet him when the train pulls in with the hero of the horn-rimmed spectacles.

Mirrie Cohen, manager of the Strand theatre at Council Bluffs, which is just across the Missouri River from Omaha, recently bought an insurance policy in amount of $500 against rain, snow or hail during the showing of "The Third Alarm" in his house. This is said to have been the first policy of its kind ever issued in the State of Iowa. The elements were propitious during this showing.

Incidentally, it is worthy of note that "The Third Alarm" was the first picture shown in Council Bluffs to receive the indorsement of the new Better Film Committee, whose members are of the public school and public library boards.

H. H. Milstein, formerly associated with the Fox Film Corporation at Denver, has taken charge of the local branch exchange of the American Releasing Corporation, succeeding

E. R. Keefe, formerly of the Universal offices at Detroit, is now on the field staff of the Omaha F. B. O. office.

R. C. Seery of Chicago, district manager of First National, held a conference with Eddie Alpers, local manager, and his sales staff.

James Winn, who has been doing the exploitation work for First National in the Omaha district, received his marching orders and is now making hay on the road as a salesman.

Harry Melcher, Hodgkinson exchange manager, made an extended trip through Iowa in the interests of "Down to the Sea in Ships."

A new member of the United Artists organization is R. W. Smith, who has transferred his salesmanship abilities from the Famous Players-Lasky payroll.

Lew Levi is covering the Northern Nebraska territory for Universal, whose organization he recently joined.

H. A. Friedel has been transferred from position of booker to salesman of the Metro branch exchange.

Theatre and Film Row Items from Cleveland

THE Department of Industrial Relations of Ohio, through the Consumers' League of Cleveland, is stirring up a lot of dust about children's contests in motion picture theatres. These children contests have been very popular here. Exhibitors reckon that at least 75 per cent of the suburban houses have been featuring them once a week. They have greatly assisted to preserve the balance on the right side of the ledger. Now along comes Miss Alice Gannet, of the Goadrich House, Cleveland, representing the Consumers' League, and says that they must cease. This is what Section 12968 of the Department of Industrial Relations has to say about it: "Whoever takes, receives, hires, employs, uses, exhibits, sells, apprentices, gives away, lets out or otherwise disposes of a child under the age of fourteen years for or in the vocation occupation, service or purpose of singing, playing on musical instruments, rope or wire walking, dancing, taking part in, or appearing in connection with a moving picture exhibition or performance given in a theatre or place of public amusement * * * shall be fined not more than $200 or imprisonment for not more than six months, or both." This is perfectly clear. Under the section children contests are illegal. Local exhibitors have not stated what their action will be in the matter.

C. W. Kline, manager of the Arcade theatre, Akron, is a seldom visitor in Cleveland. But the opening baseball game last Wednesday was too great an attraction. He looked in on some of the exchanges on the way uptown and stopped long enough to book a couple of Fox features.

The Schagrin twins, Joe and Max, of the Orpheum theatre, Youngstown, were right on deck to assist in a formal opening of the ball grounds.

R. C. Steuve of the Orpheum, Canton, saw to it that he also had business in Cleveland the middle of the week. The business didn't keep him in the Film Exchange Building after 3 P. M., however.

Did you hear about Joe Trunk of the Dome theatre, Youngstown? He's all dolled up for the summer. New automobile n'everything.

"Billie" Liebson is the only exchange manager in Cleveland known to be leading a double life. During the day "Billie" is manager of the local office of the American Releasing Corporation. But in the evening she is a great opera impresario, being a member of the Cleveland Grand Opera Company, which is this week singing "Robin Hood" at the Hanna theatre.

The Central Western offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation held a real party in Columbus last week, at which more than 150 members of the organization answered present at the roll call. It was a dinner-dance, and purely social from start to finish. Among those present were Eddie Fontaine, Cleveland exchange manager; Morris Milligan, Cincinnati exchange manager; Charles Regan, Indianapolis exchange manager, and representatives from all six offices which comprise this district. Columbus Exchange Manager Harry Dodge added new honors unto himself as host of the occasion.

Jimmy Surrall is now house manager of the Superior theatre, Superior Avenue and East 85th Street, Cleveland. Surrall was formerly manager of the American in Elyria.

Milton Bryer has added the Ideal theatre, Akron, to his possessions. He also has the People's theatre of Akron.

Andy Jacknic has been transferred from the management of the accessories department of the local F. P. exchange to a like position in the Detroit exchange. Mark Cummins has succeeded Jacknic in the Cleveland accessories department and is making good at the job.

Nat Barack, manager of the Goldwyn exchange, has been taking an active part in the Goldwyn sales drive which is now on in full force, by personally visiting the exhibitors in the territory. He just got back from a tour of the high spots.

This is Eddie Fontaine. He is not a motion picture star, although he looks like one. He is manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Cleveland exchange, and he was one of the leaders in the Harry A. Ross sales campaign that was pulled the first week in April with the most satisfactory results of any previously engineered sales drive.

Moe Geiger has changed his sales talk from United Artists product to Famous Players product.

S. G. Sladdin, publicity manager for F. P. out of Cleveland, is off his milk diet. Since substituting coca-cola for the white fluid, Sladdin has knocked off twenty pounds—so he says.

M. J. Glick, formerly with the Cincinnati branch of the Standard Film Service, is now a member of the Famous Players sales force, and is calling on the Akron exhibitors.

Butte Bulletins and Montana Trade Items

O. K. WHIPPLE, book-manager of the Butte Pathe office, reports his branch very busy these days with all business in the city and state gradually reaching topnotch he says it is reacting for office receipts. Mr. Whipple uses every spare moment to develop sales promotion. Each week he phones all exhibitors in Butte and ascertains if they can use any good short subjects, and then he informs them just what his stock in trade is for attractive short subjects. Mr. Whipple started in the film business with the Mutual Film Corporation in 1915 as a poster mounter, and from that humble beginning he worked to shipping clerk, then went with the Universal, locating at Salt Lake City. From there he was transferred to Seattle as booking clerk. From Seattle he was sent to Spokane, where the Universal office was opened for the second time. In 1921 he became identified with the Pathe at Spokane, and the following year he was given the management of the sub-branch at Butte, Mont., where he is at present watching over and directing the destinies of the Pathe pictures.

O. K. Whipple

Amen." He has started the campaign in Montana and what he starts he generally finishes, so all film fans may count on seeing this much-talked-of king.

The Silver Bow Amusement Company has in the past several months regularly held a dancing party every week or two for the pleasure of the employees, and Manager W. J. Sullivan of the Rialto and the American theatres has always included the managers of the film exchanges and their respective employees on the guest list. In return for the many compliments extended to the film men, the managers of the various film exchanges with their staff membership extended honors to the Silver Bow Amusement Company and the employees and gave them one of the most delightful dances of the season at the American hall on Wednesday evening. A seven-piece orchestra discoursed sweet music while the merry throng of some eighty couples tripped the light fantastic. At midnight a gorgeous lunch was served to all the guests. At the close of the evening a flash-light photograph was taken of the crowd.

The American theatre at Roundup, Mont., has been rebuilt and the new theatre is now open under the management of Mr. Newton.

The management of the Peoples theatre, a

500-seat house, just one block the other side of the popular Rialto theatre, has been searching for a policy that would permit of its showing the biggest pictures in competition with the three biggest houses in the best block in town. As a try-out of its scheme, three pictures from United Artists, "Tess of the Storm," "One Exciting Night" and "Robin Hood," were booked at a price for each more than had ever been paid in Butte before. The People's theatre advertised a graduated scale of prices covering a two weeks' period for each subject. Butte is a three or four days' town, and for a house to undertake a two weeks' showing was a decided innovation in itself. The price varied from 55 cents the first four days to 35 cents the next seven days and 20 cents for the last three days. People's theatre figured that in a city the size of Butte there were all kinds of people willing to pay all kinds of prices. The first picture, "Tess of the Storm," played to very satisfactory business at 55 cents. At 35 cents the crowds increased with each day's showing, and the week at this price was finished with very good results. The last three days at 20 cents brought out what seemed like the whole town. The night shows were capacity with a long line on the sidewalks waiting for the 9 o'clock performance. The fourteenth day was the biggest in point of numbers in attendance. Asked for his honest opinion of the experiment, the manager stated he felt that the graduated scale of prices had possibilities. That the public could be educated if anyone cared to stick to it long enough.

Trade Jottings from Central Pennsylvania

TWO days after the M. E. Comerford Amusement Company had taken over the Palace motion-picture theatre in Northumberland, Pa., under a lease, the theatre caught fire and was totally destroyed. The scenario to be used is by William Hutchinson of the federal forestry service. Col. Henry S. Graves, dean of the Yale Forestry School, is co-operating. Henry I. Baldwin, secretary of the Connecticut Forestry Association, and State Forester Austin F. Hawes, were in conference last week with Guy Hedlund, who will direct the film and act as leading man in the cast. Mr. Hedlund was with the original Biograph Company, was for three years with also planned to use it as a motion picture theatre site and had already begun to clear away for the foundation work. Mr. Panora will take over direction of the opera house May 1.

The Palace theatre at Hartford, Conn., last week lost its box-office assistant and special police detail through an even more realistic romance than those of the screen that nightly provide relaxation for the many patrons of this popular playhouse. As an aftermath of this romance, nursed in the shadow of those of the screen, Miss Ebba Pierson, for the past two years in the box office of the house, accompanied Policeman William T. Owen, for the past year detailed to duty at the theatre, to the altar. Their honeymoon will be passed on an automobile tour to Chicago, where they will make their future home.

As Policeman Owen and Miss Pierson were about to leave the theatre, several nights prior to their leaving it permanently, they were made guests at an impromptu reception staged by the management and attaches of the playhouse. In behalf of the hosts, Manager Benson presented the guests of honor with a Rogers' silver anniversary set, the card accompanying the remembrance reading "With our very best wishes for your future happiness."

Radio week at Loew's Palace which was staged in connection with WMC, the Commercial Appeal's powerful class B station, is proving to be a splendid advertising feature for the theater. WMC can be picked up over practically the entire United States and each night for a week the radio exhibit and features at the Palace were announced over the ether. It is believed that the sending of a voice over the air to the broadcasting station and its reception in the theater from whence the voice is originating, which is one of the features of the Radio week program, marks an innovation in radio history.

The Orpheum theater, playing Orpheum vaudeville, closed this week the earliest in many years.

Exhibitor and Exchange News of Carolinas

A RESPITE has been granted the theatre owners of South Carolina, against whom the recent session of the General Assembly levied a special ten per cent tax on theatre admissions for state revenue. The bill was passed during the closing hours of the Legislature without offering the theatre men an opportunity to protest, but, immediately upon appointment of the State Board of Appeals to handle the special sales taxes, a delegation of South Carolina exhibitors appeared on April 5 and protested in such powerful manner that the matter was taken under advisement and a decision handed down on April 18 cancelling that part of the bill affecting motion picture theatres until January 1, 1924, "at which time," declared a member of the board, "it is hoped that business will be back to normalcy and the theatres able to bear this tax, which is a manifest hardship at this time." This will give theatre owners a breathing spell to marshal their strongest forces to put up an argument for the repeal of the bill at the session of the General Assembly, which meets next January.

Energetic exhibitors who sent out over a hundred telegrams imploring theatre owners to attend the hearing on April 5 were sorely disappointed when only thirteen responded, among those attending being the following: Mrs. Phelps Sasseen, Easley; Max W. Bryant, Rock Hill; Turner Jones, Southern Enterprise theatres; J. R. Eaves, Gaffney, Chester and Union; J. M. O'Dowd and M. F. Schnibben, Florence; George L. The "righteous and indignant citizens" of Durham, N. C., recently had Pola Negri's "Bella Donna" taken off after the first day of its three-day run at a local theatre. To make matters worse, the local ladies of the Y. W. C. A. had sponsored and sold advance tickets to the show, a method pursued often by the various civic organizations when in need of a little cash. But when the good ladies reviewed it at its first performance they did not like what they saw, with the result that considerable "rumpus" was stirred up and, of course, the theatre manager came up promptly with the announcement that the picture would be taken off.

Colonel Henry B. Varner, secretary of the North Carolina M. P. T. O., has joined the campaign managers committee to further candidacy of H. Steffes, of Minneapolis, as National President of the M. P. T. O. before the Chicago convention in May. Colonel Varner declares that he believes Steffes is the man for the job and will help his candidacy in every way possible personally, while, however, not being in a position to pledge the other Carolina delegates to such a course. His judgment will undoubtedly, however, go far with the Southern delegates. It is believed that should Georgia send delegates to the convention they will line up with Charles L. O'Reilly, however, since Mrs. Willard Patterson has recently commended him editorially for the post.

Will H. Hays has tentatively accepted an in-

W. E. WOOD, operator of radio broadcasting station WOAL, Webster Groves, Mo., was forced to hire the Ozark theatre to accommodate the crowd of radio fans who accepted his invitation, broadcasted to the world from his station, to visit him at his station. He left for New York April 19.

Skouras Brothers, is installing a handsome new electric sign. The sign will cost about $10,000.

Owing to the sweeping sentiment of the public of St. Louis, the press, city and State officials against the hold of dance marathons, Herchal Stuart, manager of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, called off the long-distance dance contest scheduled to start at the Missouri on Saturday, April 21. The $100 prize offered to the boy or girl who would break the world's dancing record was divided equally among the ten who had entered the contest.

"Might Meets Might," a five-reel motion picture in defense of law enforcement, was shown at the Third Baptist Church, St. Louis, Friday evening, April 20. C. J. Hall, of Los Angeles, presented the picture. No admission was charged, but a "free-will" offering was taken.

W. R. Clark, who opens his Hurst theatre, Hurst, Ill., on May 5 with "Westbound Limited" as the feature attraction, is charging a $5 top for the occasion, and, judging from the advance sale of tickets, all of the 500 seats will be occupied long before the time the show is scheduled to start. Hurst has a population of about 1,200, and the better than Broadway first-night prices being charged is something for other towns to think about.

The safe of the Park theatre, Cape Girardeau, Mo., was looted by crackmen last week, the robbers escaping with $700. The theatre is owned by Doyle & Strain.

The National Association of University Extension Workers, at their convention at Hotel Chase, St. Louis, the past week, enjoyed a private showing of "Nanook of the North." Miss Elizabeth Ressez, of New York, manager of the educational department for Pathe, came on for the presentation and told the delegates what the motion picture industry is doing to further visual education.

St. Louis callers of the past week included: Charley Goodnight, De Soto, Mo.; C. C. Jones, American, Cambria, Ill.; W. R. Clark, Hurst theatre, Hurst, Ill.; Frank Neitz, Strand, Mascoutah, Ill.; Elmer Brient, Hall Amusement Company, Centralia, Ill., and J. Doyle, Park theatre, Cape Girardeau, Mo.

J. D. Williams, president and general manager of the Ritz-Carlton Pictures, was a caller of the past week.

C. C. Pettijohn of the Hays organization was here on Thursday and addressed a gathering of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade. He told of the efforts being made by his organization to bring about a better understanding between the exhibitors and the exchanges and producers, and was assured of the co-operation of the St. Louis organization in consummating that movement.

E. C. Jansen, F. B. O.'s general manager, was here for several days, later going to Kansas City.

S. T. Wilson, formerly with Associated Exhibitors, is traveling Eastern Missouri for Enterprise.

South Bend, Ind.—The senior class of Notre Dame University on April 18 filed suit against Ezra Rhodes, lessee of the Blackstone theatre here, for $500 for alleged breach of contract. The suit was brought by Morris J. Ducey as agent for the class. In their complaint they claim that Rhodes agreed to show four football pictures at his theatre within one week after each game and to give the class $500 if they would sell 200 tickets at 25 cents each. The class claims to have fulfilled their part of the agreement, but that Rhodes refuses to pay the $500, they allege. The pictures in question showed Notre Dame playing Georgia Tech, Nebraska, West Point and Indiana. Rhodes plans to resist the suit.

Around Seattle's Photoplay Trade Circles

"DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS" has been sold to the Columbia theatres in Seattle and Portland by J. R. Beal, manager of the local Hodgkinson exchange, according to an announcement just made here. It will begin an indefinite engagement at Manager R. W. Case's house in this city early in May and will be shown in Portland by Manager William Cutts shortly after the Washington State premiere.

First prints of "Souls for Sale" arrived at the Goldwyn exchange last week, and the picture has been booked by Manager W. E. Bamford to open an engagement at Frank Steffy's Coliseum theatre on May 12. Twenty-four sheets on the attraction have already been posted in the city, and an advertising and exploitation campaign is now being planned.

L. K. Brin, president of the L. K. Brin exchanges, returned to the city recently from Butte, where he had made his first stop en route to New York. Mr. Brin was bound for the East to confer with the Warner Brothers, but in Butte was taken slightly ill and was forced to carry on the conference by telephone from Montana to New York.

H. A. Black, manager of the Vitagraph exchange, left the city recently on a short trip around the larger towns of this State. During the summer Mr. Black intends to spend more time on the road, according to a recent statement. "Masters of Men" has arrived at the exchange, but no bookings have been arranged on the picture yet.

B. B. Holcomb, manager of the Vandette theatre in Tacoma, was a visitor on Film Row recently, booking pictures to play at his house during the coming season.

The Paragon Film Company has recently been organized here and is now located in new quarters at 2024 Third Avenue, a part of the room belonging to the Select exchange. Roscoe Russell is general manager of the company, and has just returned from Los Angeles, where he has obtained several pictures to be released at early dates. "His Last Race," a Phil Goldstone special, will probably be the first picture that Paragon will handle.

Other officers of the new company include: E. Pederson, president; O. Crouse, vice-president, and Capt. R. H. Smith, secretary-treasurer. Mr. Russell was formerly a resident of Oakland and has also been associated with Sid Grauman. In addition to "His Last Race" he has obtained the rights to release the next twelve pictures of Richard Talmadge.

L. O. Lukan, general manager of the Blue Mouse theatres in Seattle, Tacoma, Portland and Astoria, has resigned his position with the organization, according to an announcement made by John Hamrick, president and owner. Mr. Lukan has been with the Hamrick circuit for the last five months, taking that position after resigning the Western division management of the Associated First National Exhibitors circuit.

Although Mr. Lukan has announced no definite plans for the near future, it is believed that he will leave this city for New York in a short time to again become associated with some producing and distributing corporation. It is thought probable that the vacancy he leaves in the Blue Mouse organization will not be filled for the present time.

For the first time in the history of the city, an entire motion picture program will be brought back intact to the same theatre it originally played for a return engagement when "The Pilgrim" returns to Manager H. B. Wright's Strand theatre in May. "The Pilgrim" played at the Strand the second week in March, but because of previous bookings it was only able to stay at the theatre one week. Despite the fact that extra morning and evening performances were given, one week's run was not enough, so the picture will be brought back next month. "Toll of the Sea," which played on the same program as Chaplin's picture, will also be brought back to round out the bill.

After causing quite a furore among the authorities in this city, several Japanese photoplays brought into the United States last week for exhibition here were reviewed by the Seattle Board of Theatre Censors and officially okehed by that body. The whole discussion over the films was started by a newspaper article saying that the proprietor of the show did not wish any Americans to see the film entitled "The American Family."

The censors immediately got in touch with the Japanese running the program, and from him got a synopsis of the picture, to the effect that it dealt with a poor man who was sent off to war against Germany, during which time his family nearly starved until they were helped by a generous American public. When the censors came to review this picture, however, it was found to deal with a love cult established in Japan, which was smothered by the Japanese government because it was getting too strong.

Despite the apparent discrepancy between the verbal story told by the Japanese and the story as it was flashed on the screen, the censorship board decided to allow the exhibition of the films. They are now running at a Japanese hall and attracting large houses.

Ray Grombacher, manager of the Liberty theatre in Spokane, was a recent visitor in this city. At his house in that city he has established a sliding admission price scale that is said to be meeting with very good results. From 10:30 a. m. until 12 noon each day the Liberty prices are 25 cents. From 12 noon until 5 p. m. the charge is 35 cents, with children 10 cents. From 5 p. m. until closing time the admission is 50 cents, with children 25 cents. These prices, including the "Bargain Morning Matinee," are effective both Sundays and weekdays.

Washington Exhibitor and Exchange Items

MARCUS NOTES' Plaza theatre has closed its doors for all time. This was one of the old time small converted-store photoplay-houses of the 9th street "Bowery" district of Washington. His lease has been relinquished and a new era of prosperity (and increased patronage), for his other theatres in this district, as well as for his numerous competitors is assured. Construction will begin in the near future on his new Rivoli theatre in Petworth; which, it is announced, will have a seating capacity of about 2,000.

The old Revere theatre in Petworth, antedating the Crandall York, has also been darkened for the last time and is now offered for rent or sale.

E. Rogers, brother of Saul Rogers, (well-known attorney and Fox counsel,) was in Washington over the week-end as a visitor to the Fox exchange, calling upon George Roberts, local manager. Mr. Rogers, who is with the business end of the Fox organization, is to get as far south as Atlanta, in an effort to learn conditions in the south Atlantic film trade at first-hand.

Sidney Lust has just returned from a business trip to New York City and Wilmington, Delaware.

Manager Lou Reichert of Selznick Distributors Corporation has returned from the field and reports a splendid recovery in the trade.

Mr. Feldstein of Baltimore, former manager of the local Federated exchange and later a salesman for the Al Lichtman interests, was a Washington visitor Friday. He told the news representative that he had sold his Arcadia theatre in Baltimore to Mr. Bernstein, whom he introduced to Sam Flax and other exchange managers.

Ralph de Foix Edmunds returned last week from a tour of duty at the New York office of First National. He was formerly in charge of the exploitation work out of Washington, and put over some of the cleverest publicity stunts ever used in the region.

Mr. Fred Meyers is the new sales manager for the Famous Players, while H. J. Lego of Omaha is now on the sales force of the Washington branch of Paramount. Miss Ella Gazhorn is now secretary in the booking department of Paramount. Miss Anna Berns announces her engagement to a Paramount film salesman.

Sam Lust is now in charge of the shipping room of D. H. Thomas' Strand Film Service. He has been in the business a few years as assistant booker in the Universal offices here, and as assistant manager of brother Sidney Lust's Leader theater.

A. J. Nelson, chief auditor and general manager in charge of sales for the Vitagraph Company's home office of New York City, was a visitor to Manager Spoehr of the Washington branch.

The suit in equity, No. 41208, in the matter of the Royal Amusement Company, resulted in a dissolution order. Attorneys Minor, Gailey and Rowland appeared Friday.

Mr. Leon Leopold is being transferred to the Philadelphia office of Fox Films, after some five years in the Washington territory. This change coming in the nature of a promotion with an appreciable salary boost, is appropriate recognition of Leopold's success in the business of selling screen product in this territory.

Dan Scanlon, former Pathe booking assistant, is now assistant booker in the Paramount exchange.

E. J. Stutz, manager of the Chevy Chase theatre, entertained his brother from New York City and Mr. Butler, of Butler's side shows, at lunch Monday in the Harrington hotel.

Sharing screen stellar honors in local circles with Miss Madge Bellamy, the past week, was another local product, Miss Lulu McGrath of the Williamson's submarine picture, "Wonders of the Sea," who gave a large box party at the Metropolitan, Thursday night, in compliment to her friends and family. Among those noted in the party were: Judge and Mrs. Charles Meehan; Rep. and Mrs. Frederick Zihlman; Rep. and Mrs. Ray Loring; Major and Mrs. Van Ness Ingram and daughter; Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Walker and Dr. Arthur Hooe. Other prominent residents of the capital in the guest list were Mr. and Mrs. M. D. McQuade; Mr. and Mrs. Wilkie Collins; Mr. and Mrs. William Drew; Mr. and Mrs. J. Earnest Dulin; Mr. and Mrs. John Shaw; Miss Ingram; Alvin Bellman and Mr. and Mrs. James McGrath, her parents.

Harry M. Crandall, accompanied by Mrs.

Crandall and the Misses Olga and Dorothy Crandall, spent last week at the Ritz-Carlton in Atlantic City, in attendance on the annual convention for stock and franchise-holders of Associated First National Pictures, Inc. Mr. and Mrs. Crandall and their daughters planned to return to the capital Monday.

At their last meeting the Film Board went on record in the matter of cooperation with the Virginia exhibitors in their meeting here on April 23 and 24, and are to tender a banquet to the visiting Virginians.

Construction on the Takoma theater is well advanced, and it is expected to open in the next sixty days.

An order of the District Commissioner prohibits theatrical use of the Lincoln, at 1215 U street, a colored theater controlled by Harry Crandall, until a fireproof steel or asbestos drop curtain is installed. This action was the result of a report of Fire Chief George S. Watson saying that the management had refused to put up the curtain required by the district.

The Crandall manager at the Lincoln contended that the curtain was not needed; but Chief Watson refused to approve the use of the theater without the curtain and Commissioner Oyster (in charge of both police and fire departments), sustained his subordinate's decision. Hence the deadlock.

The Crandall Baseball League, composed of the neighborhood theater patrons, is taking its place in the ball tossing galaxy. Mr. Crandall, who promoted the venture, hung up cash prizes of $500 in addition to giving the courtesy of the team's theater at any performance. The winning team will split a first prize of $250 among the players; the runner up will receive $100; the players with highest averages will split up the rest of the prizes.

This action of Mr. Crandall caused Tom Moore, rival exhibitor and manager, to reorganize the Rialto nine and provide new equipment and also to offer prizes. Here's hoping that the Crandall pennant winners get a whack at Bill Moore's Rialtos.

Last week the billing of the Gasnier super, "Poor Men's Wives," for a week's premier at the Crandall Centrall was a bit of a surprise to the local film world as three days is a big run for this small Crandall unit.

Photoplay Personals and Events in Southeast

S. A. LYNCH, formerly head of the vast holdings of Southern Enterprises throughout the South and of the southern interests of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is back in Atlanta after a ten weeks' vacation trip to the Old World, his time having been divided between France and Monte Carlo, and expresses himself as happy over the recollections of one of the greatest trips of his life. Mr. Lynch has been tremendously active for several years without a real vacation until he finally disposed of his extensive film and theatre interests, and immediately booked passage for a pure vacation trip. His immediate future plans have not been announced, although he will doubtless devote his attention to the development of the Tanlac Proprietaries, which he controls internationally.

The Paramount School for Salesmen, inaugurated under the auspices of District Manager Fred Creswell, opened on April 23 with an advance enrollment of twelve men, who will be taught the principles of selling Paramount pictures. Each class will require about three weeks for graduation, classes being held each evening for that period of time. Several score applications were received, but after each applicant was put under the microscope, so to speak, only twelve were found capable from the standards employed in choosing the future Paramount salesmen.

The Lyric, Atlanta's Keith vaudeville house, has discontinued the presentation of feature length pictures in connection with their vaudeville bills. The new venture was tried out for several weeks, along with a majority of the southern Keith houses, but it was found impracticable to add so much length to the bill, since patrons objected to a two and a half hour session at the theatre. The short subjects, formerly used as standard adjuncts to the Keith bills, will be reinstated.

American Releasing Corporation, M. J. Sparks, manager, has moved their Atlanta office to the Film Exchange Building, 111 Walton street, in the heart of the film district. They occupy the stand formerly filled by the home office of Consolidated Film and Supply Company, which has recently been transferred to New York.

Atlanta's legitimate theatre, the Atlanta, has completed a wonderful run of "Robin Hood" for two weeks and is now presenting, for an unlimited run, Griffith's "One Exciting Night." It is believed that this theatre will run continuously through the summer, using the super-specials for extended runs and at legitimate theatre prices.

E. J. Sparks, operator of extensive theatrical interests in several Florida towns, has recently returned from a yachting and fishing trip off the Florida coast, during which he entertained a large party of prominent film and theatre men of the South.

W. K. Jenkins, president of Enterprise Distributing Corporation, has been in Atlanta making arrangements for more commodious and centrally located quarters for the Charlotte office. Necessary alterations at the new stand will delay moving for about thirty days.

Enterprise Distributing Corporation now advertises "the largest independent film distributing organization in the world." Their release chart for April and May alone shows seventeen feature length productions in addition to the usual run of short subjects. Their latest buy was "Flames of Passion" from the Independent Pictures Corporation, and their "The World's A Stage" goes into Atlanta's Rialto for a solid week on May 14.

Theatre and Exchange Briefs from Springfield, Ill.

The Majestic theater will close its vaudeville season about the last of April and will then go into pictures. United Artists' attractions have been booked. The first to come is "Robin Hood," which will be followed by "Tess of the Storm Country," "One Exciting Night" and "Suzanna."

Daniel Carson Goodman, former Springfield man, has come into a great deal of fame lately with two good pictures: "What's Wrong With the Women?" and "Has the World Gone Mad?" Danny is well remembered by the folks here, in fact his parents still reside within the shadow of the state house dome.

The Strand is cutting quite a swath these days with big features. All of the state right attractions and those specials from Fox and Universal are shown here.

Trade Jottings from Kansas City and Vicinity

"THE motion picture serves the average hunger for entertainment," said Leo Ditrichstein to a Kansas City audience this week, in predicting that the legitimate play was nearing death unless something unforeseen happened.

Mr. Ditrichstein's statement drew a column editorial the following day in the Kansas City Star:

"One can leave home just after dinner, walk a block or two around the corner and be back home and ready for bed by 9:30 or 10 o'clock," Mr. Ditrichstein said. "The legitimate theater is becoming too much of an institution for the well-to-do. With the growth of cities, going to a play requires too much transportation for the average middle class family."

The Kansas City Star, commenting editorially upon the statement, said:

"The strongest arguments against high prices is that the motion picture houses in the downtown sections are crowded, in spite of the longer distance traveled to reach them. Perhaps the stage has learned the lesson that might be drawn from the brevity of the motion picture and the short story."

After deliberating one hour a jury in the criminal court of Kansas City this week convicted Claude McFadden on a charge of assault with intent to kill in connection with the shooting last August of David Harding of the Liberty theater, Kansas City, in an attempted hold-up. Mr. Harding was dangerously wounded and was near death several days following the shooting.

More than eighty men and women, civic leaders of Kansas City, witnessed a pre-view showing of "Brass" at the Ricardo hotel, Kansas City, this week. The showing was by the courtesy of Samuel Harding of the Liberty theater, Kansas City, where the film will be shown next month. Favorable comment was heaped upon the production and liberal newspaper space given the pre-view showing.

Thirty thousand persons saw "Robin Hood" at the Royal theater, Kansas City, last week. Because of the unusual large attendance, special morning performances have been arranged for children, beginning at 9 o'clock.

H. E. Herbert, former Newton, Kas., exhibitor and pioneer in the industry, was in Kansas City last week on his way to Sanford, Florida, where he will manage the Milan theater. It was with no difficulty that Mr. Herbert recalled a long, long time ago when he went to the Universal exchange in Chicago to see Carl Laemmle screen his first picture, "Hiawatha."

Don Woods, who resigned recently as branch manager of the Kansas City American Releasing Corporation office, has been succeeded by J. H. Calvert, former division manager of F. B. O. in the Kansas City territory. Mr. Calvert also was formerly manager of the Kansas City Universal exchange. Mr. Woods has not decided definitely upon his future plans.

It was an elated force of employees at the Kansas City F. B. O. office last week when word was received that the Kansas City branch had placed second in the F. B. O. First Anniversary drive. Exhibitors in the Kansas City territory will see how much their support is appreciated by the service the F. B. O. office will render them the remainder of the year, Roy Churchill, branch manager, said.

Arrangements for the use of billboard exploitation has been completed by Harry Graham, branch manager of the Kansas City Pathe office, in Kansas City, Wichita, Kas., and St. Joseph, Mo., on "Haunted Valley." If the bookings warrant it, billboard advertising will be extended to cover the entire Missouri and Kansas territory, Mr. Graham said.

F. C. Nipp of Oklahoma City, Ok., is the latest addition to the Educational sales force of the Kansas City branch. Mr. Nipp, who has been selling Educational product in Oklahoma City, was "drafted" by the Kansas City office.

No other exchange in the Kansas City territory has been working harder the last two months than the Universal force. There's a reason, to be sure. The Kansas City office is far from hovering about the top in the national sales contest. At a recent sales meeting, L. W. Alexander, branch manager, had more than the usual "heart to heart" talk with his men. He outlined some plain facts. And as a result the Kansas City office in the last few weeks has shown a marked increase in contracts and it would be a difficult matter to convince any member of the force that they will not finish better than second place in the contest.

"Just wait. We're not bragging now. Watch us," is the assurance of Mr. Alexander.

News and Notes of Detroit's Film Circles

THE Empire theatre, which dates back to the early days in film history of the old store-theatres and is the last of those buildings located in a prominent business section, is celebrating the last two weeks of its existence by becoming a first run feature house and showing Elmer Clifton's drama of whaling days, "Down to the Sea in Ships." The Empire will be torn down on May 1 to make way for new and modern buildings.

Manager Moule of the Capitol theatre, for the past three weeks, has been giving unusual and varied programs in connection with the feature films. The first week was "Jazz Versus Grand Opera," with seven different musical and dancing acts. The second was "University of Michigan" week, with a band of the University boys. A scenic film of Ann Arbor, the University town, was shown. The local U. of M. Club co-operated, having a special night when a former "yell master" acted as master of ceremonies. In connection with the showing of "Brass," week of April 15, Dr. Katherine Blackford, noted character analyst, is giving a talk on her specialty. Dr. Blackford illustrates her information by chart and emphasizes the importance of choosing the right partner for marriage that the wedding rings may not turn to "Brass." Character analyses are then given on persons called from the audience.

The management of the Fox, Washington, is determined to say "spring is here," even if the weather man hasn't succeeded in having her arrive in spite of the calendar date. The current double feature bill of Tom Mix in "Romance Land" and Lupino Lane in "A Friendly Husband" is dubbed a "Spring Festival."

Detroit exhibitors need only to paraphrase M. Coué's famous phrase to "Week by week, in every way, the runs keep getting longer and longer" to have it aptly apply to the business done and still being done in the automobile town. There were one or two scattered runs before the real thing began last November with "Robin Hood" and "When Kinghood Was in Flower."

Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last" is still making audiences gasp and shriek and wonder "How it is all done!" And it's difficult to say how much longer he'll continue, as the crowds still keep coming. Then "The Covered Wagon" is due to arrive at the Adams for quite some stay, with "Bella Donna" afterward by way of contrast.

"Hunting Big Game in Africa" closed a successful run at the New Portola theatre, which, considering its four-week run at the Century theatre, proves the remarkable interest the picture has aroused.

Buffalo Briefs and Western New York News

ONE of the big events of the week in Buffalo was the surprise party given by the employes of the Paramount exchange in honor of Manager Allan S. Moritz at Brown's Hotel, Tonawanda, N. Y., on Saturday evening, April 21. The event was a surprise party. Mr. Moritz was thirty-one years old. A number of former Paramount employes were on hand to honor their old chief. Colonel Howard F. Brink attended to see that his son, Earl, behaved himself. Malcolm Williams spoke briefly. His best statement was "that he had never been in such close touch with the office." He referred to the dancing. A real surprise of the evening was the visit of Madge Bellamy and her escorts, E. J. Hayes and Gene Marks, of First National. Madge dropped in on her way home from the Falls. She had been in Buffalo in the morning to invite Mayor Schwab to attend the picture exposition in Los Angeles this summer. The work will not in any way interfere with the operation of the house. Mr. McFaul also announces the coming of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne to the Hipp for the entire week of May 13 in connection with the showing of their new American Releasing picture, "A Modern Marriage."

Theatre and Exchange Briefs from Canada

PANTAGES vaudeville has been booked temporarily into the Capitol theatre, Calgary, Alberta, one of the large Western Canadian theatres of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation. A start was made with the vaudeville on April 14, the plan being to play the various acts for four days of the week along with pictures, which happened to be "Nobody's Money," starring Jack Holt, and a Christie comedy, "Hot Water." Prices were raised to 75c for the evening shows and 50c for the afternoon performance, with three shows daily. This movie has created some surprise among Western exhibitors.

Incidentally, Manager James Adams of the Calgary Capitol has booked "Robin Hood" as a special road show for early presentation.

The manager of the Dominion theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, is now John T. Fiddes, who was manager of the System theatre, Montreal, for some time, and who was recently appointed manager of the Capitol theatre of Winnipeg by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation. Mr. Fiddes is a member of a local syndicate which has acquired the Dominion theatre, the house being reopened under the new regime on April 16. Music will be specially featured at the Dominion in the way of prologues, novelties and special acts, with Mr. Fiddes himself appearing in numerous roles. He has had years of experience as a concert singer. Programs will be changed weekly.

The marriage took place at Vancouver, B. C., a few days ago of I. H. Allen, manager of the Globe theatre, to Miss Sophie Lyons of Winnipeg, Manitoba. The bride was attended by her sister, while George Serreth, known throughout Western Canada as an exchange man, was best man. Mr. Allen, who is a cousin of Jule and J. J. Allen, Toronto, has spent considerable time with theatres in Winnipeg and met Miss Lyons there.

The Empire theatre, Quebec City, has been placed on the market, the owner, the late Mr. J. Deracey, having died a short time ago.

As a member of the Lions Club of Ottawa, Ontario, Capt. Frank Goodale, manager of Loew's theatre, Ottawa, took an active part in canvassing for subscriptions for the Salvation Army's Self-Denial Week campaign which was conducted under the auspices of the club during the week of April 16. The objective of $9,000 was reached in three days.

General Manager Murdock of the B. F. Keith circuit, New York, and Clark Brown, also of New York, were visitors in Ottawa, Ontario, on April 20, when they conferred with local theatre interests at the Russell Hotel regarding the booking of Keith vaudeville into Ottawa along with pictures. This followed up a recent visit to the Canadian capital of Mr. Albee of Montreal and others to press negotiations for Keith entry into Ottawa.

Clarence Robson of Toronto, manager of the Hippodrome and supervisor of the Regent and Strand theatres for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, was a visitor in Ottawa, Ontario, on April 19, when he inspected Loew's Ottawa theatre. A few weeks ago the Loew theatre in Montreal was taken over by N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, representing Famous Players Canadian Corporation, and, in the light of this development, Mr. Robson's trip to Ottawa is considered significant. It is predicted locally that Famous Players will have a theatre in Ottawa before next fall, whether it is Loew's or not.

Ben Stapleton, a pioneer exhibitor of Ottawa, having been manager and proprietor of the Centre theatre, has been spending a number of weeks in Florida for a complete rest and change. During his absence Don Stapleton, his son, has been conducting activities at the Centre capably.

Slight improvement is seen in the condition of Harry Brouse, proprietor of the Imperial and Family theatres, Ottawa, Ontario, and one of the mostly widely known men in the moving picture business. Several weeks ago Mr. Brouse was suddenly stricken blind, and he has been constantly under the care of specialists at his home ever since. Under treatment he has regained partial sight, but only to a slight extent yet.

The Allen theatre, Montreal, one of the largest and best houses of the Allen chain, was leased by the Sol Allen Corporation for a period of six weeks recently for "a season" of English pictures under the direction of Sol Allen, a relative of Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen, Toronto. The Sol Allen Corporation also took over the Orpheum theatre a short time ago for a least to run to the end of August for the presentation of film features. The Orpheum has been the home of dramatic stock in Montreal for years.

Edmund Benson, who was manager of the Walker theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, for years, is leaving for Australia on April 29, sailing from a Vancouver, B. C., on the "Maruko," accompanied by his wife and son. Mr. Benson, who has been in Los Angeles for the past eight months, has been appointed representative in Australia for Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford releases, and he will make his headquarters in future at Melbourne.

Comedies, Short Subjects & Serials

"Tough Guy" Butts Into Long Contract

HAL ROACH studios reports signing a new three-years contract with Noah Young, the celebrated "tough guy" in Harold Lloyd and many Hal Roach comedies distributed by Pathe. Young is recognized as one of the foremost heavies of the screen.

He is most widely known for his work in the Harold Lloyd comedies. In "Safety Last" he has the part of the indignant "cop" whose interference with the hero's plans compels Lloyd himself to do all the building-climbing stunts of the picture. Young also was the sheriff pitted against the terror-inspiring tramp in "Grandma's Boy," whom, at one stage, Grandma and her menacing broom drove off the premises. One of his outstanding characterizations was that of the "hard-boiled" sailor in Lloyd's "Sailor Made Man."

Agreement Signed for Distribution of Entire Product for 1923-24 Season

MR. E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces the conclusion of a contract between the Christie Film Company and Educational whereby Educational will distribute the entire 1923-24 product of the Christie studios. This is the fourth successive year that Educational has distributed the Christie Comedies.

The new contract, which goes into effect with the release of the last of the 1922-23 series of Christie Comedies, calls for twenty two-reel pictures, which will be of the light farce type such as the Christie Comedies of the 1922-23 series.

The past season has been by far the most successful in the history of Christie Comedies. These two-reel fun subjects have played in a greater number of representative theatres this year than ever before, it is said.

"That Son of a Shiek" was one of Christie's travesties on the overplayed desert drama, and with the keen satire for which Christie is famous, he produced a comedy that slightly burlesqued, satirized and generally made foolish the "Sheik" plays that were flooding the screen. The response was instantaneous.

"Pardon My Glove," another outstanding comedy of the 1922-23 series, was as well received. Robert Sherwood, the well known critic of "Life," wrote:

"'Pardon My Glove' is one of the best comedies that Christie has ever offered, being a rather boisterous tale of life in the roped arena."

Mr. Sherwood's judgment on this picture was vindicated by the comments of many exhibitors, chief among whom were Balaban & Katz, who played this picture at Chicago's beautiful first run theatre, "The Chicago." "Pardon My Glove," they reported, "is without doubt a one hundred per cent comedy. Give us more like it."

"Hazel from Hollywood" was also a satire, taking for the subject of its satire the movie-makers and actors themselves. Many reports are arriving on this picture, bearing out the excellent criticisms received from the trade papers.

One of the outstanding current releases of the Christie studios is "Green As Grass," released on Educational's April program. This is a racing comedy containing a steeple-chasing sequence said to outshine the best efforts of some of the feature producers.

Production work on the 1923-24 series will begin immediately on conclusion of the pictures called for under the present contract. The first subjects under the new contract will be early fall releases.

Just as soon as he finishes "Roll Along," Al Christie will leave for a short European vacation trip. He will be accompanied by H. D. Edwards, his production manager.

Pathe Reports Interest in "Haunted Valley"

Judging from the volume of business represented by advance bookings of "Haunted Valley," Pathe foresees for the new Ruth Roland serial to be released on May 6 the greatest initial activity won by any of the Roland productions.

The deep note of mystery running through the new serial, together with the desperate conflict depicted between giant industrial operations and a sinister money power in which the heroine is constantly imperiled, and the excellence of the supporting cast, are credited with much of the powerful appeal made by "Haunted Valley" at exhibitor pre-views.

The New York premiere of "Haunted Valley" will be graced by the presence of the famous star in person—Ruth Roland being in the East commissioned by the City of Los Angeles and the Motion Picture industry to invite the mayors of the big cities to the Monroe Centennial Exposition to be held in Los Angeles next June and July.

Gorham Girls Perform for Wampas

DORIS EATON and the eleven principal beauties of the Gorham Follies, rendered several song and dance numbers before the Wampas of Los Angeles at their second frolic which was held on the Warner Brothers' new stage, which is reported one of the largest in the moving picture world.

The West Coast Wampas, who comprise all the male press agents on the Pacific Coast, have 13 stars at each annual gambol, and they introduce them in conjunction with the 13 stars of the year before. The Gorham beauties were chosen this year, and they had special numbers written for them by J. K. Gorham.

Unusual "shots" of the new "Yankee" Stadium, the $2,500,000 baseball arena just opened in New York City, are included in International News Reel No. 34, now in the Universal exchanges for distribution. The International News Reel Corporation sent a large battery of cameramen to the stadium on its opening day to get pictures of the big baseball park, its crowds and the game from every conceivable angle.

"Ex-Kaiser in Exile" Draws Attention

The widespread interest in news emanating from Germany and the Ruhr is in no small way responsible for the success "The Ex-Kaiser in Exile," produced by Fred E. Hamlin and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is meeting with throughout the country.

After a careful survey of the field made by the Hodkinson Corporation it is reported that throughout the United States the bookings and interest regarding this two-reel feature, showing the former War Lord in his twenty acre cage at Doorn, Holland, has been unusual.

Plant Formations in Urban Classic

One of the most beautiful of the Urban Popular Classics which are being released through Vitagraph is "Plant Life," in which the strange story of seeds and their curious formations are screened.

The great salmon streams of Oregon and the life of the salmon from the time it battles and leaps up rushing mountain torrents to spawning fields until its capture, is told in "The Silvery Salmon," another one-reel Urban Classic.

"Safety Last" Almost Stops Circulation

Laughter and excitement over the opening of Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last" at the Strand theatre, Muncie, Ind., failed to stop the presses of the leading daily local paper, the Star, but did inspire the following editorial:

"If any local subscribers to The Star do not receive their papers until a few minutes after the usual time this morning, they are urged to blame it on Harold Lloyd. When the group of carrier boys left the Strand theatre last night following the theatre party given for them by Leonard Sower, manager of the theatre, several of them were on the verge of hysterics and the circulation manager was not at all sure that they would be able to give the usual service this morning."

Pathe News Enters in Slogan Campaign

In connection with a mutual circulation campaign now being conducted by 100 leading newspapers in the United States, in which trade-marks and slogans of well-known products of various kinds are reproduced in their columns, Pathe News is the only motion picture enterprise represented.

The daily papers which are joined in this campaign, beginning the middle of April and continuing for four weeks, have a combined circulation of more than 3,500,000. During this period the Pathe Rooster and the slogan—"Sees All—Knows All"—will be repeatedly reproduced, as seen on the screen, in all of these newspapers.

History Museum Endorses Animal Film

Henry Fairfield Osborn, president of the American Museum of Natural History, has expressed his willingness that the endorsement of the museum be officially given to Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's photoplay, "Trailing African Wild Animals," and that the title of the film show a caption carrying this endorsement. Metro Pictures is exclusive distributor of the Johnson photoplay.

In a letter to Mr. Johnson, the museum head wrote:

"I am quite willing that the introductory title of your picture should include a caption which may read: 'Indorsed by the American Museum of Natural History as a scientific record of the free wild animals in Africa, in their native haunts.'"

At the same time Mr. Osborn made a request for a print of the photoplay to be deposited in the museum, where it would be added to the reference library of motion pictures.

Director to Act, Actor to Direct

Irving Cummings, well known producer and star, and Lloyd Ingraham, director of "Going Up," both are to appear in some of the scenes of that picture, which is Douglas MacLean's first for Associated Exhibitors. These two volunteered to play in an important sequence of the comedy, and for these particular scenes

"Haunted Valley" Pathe Release

New Ruth Roland Serial Tops Program of Nine Releases Set for May 6th

RUTH ROLAND'S appearance in a new serial, "Haunted Valley," with its initial episode of three reels of swift action, heads Pathe's program of nine releases scheduled for May 6. Trade showings of early chapters of "Haunted Valley" are reported to have impressed exhibitors with the powerful drawing qualities of mystery and suspense which are felt from the start of the latest Roland production.

Pearl White, in the final episode of "Plunder," puts to rout the last of her enemies in the most perilous and exciting scenes of her screen career.

In the 1-reel Hal Roach Comedy, "Sunny Spain," Paul Parrott is said to be in his most comic element "throwing the Bull."

By the way of another Aesop's Film Fable called "Pharaoh's Tomb," Paul Terry, animated cartoonist, puts Farmer Al Falfa and his familiar menagerie through swift paces of a "see stars rye" dream in which ancient Egyptian policemen make him sorry that he failed in respect for old King Tut and his tomb.

Pathe Review No. 18 graphically pictures the whole process of making lead pencils. "Chip-chip and her babies" are starred in the Little People of the Forest Series, with Whirling Waters the Pathecolor subject. Strange scenes in the national sport of Indo-China are presented under the caption of "The 70 Prangs of Bang-Da-Lore."

Pathe News Nos. 38 and 39 and Topics of the Day No. 18 are issued in this program. Screen Snapshots No. 25 presents effective settings in which these favorites are seen: Charles De Roche, European screen star; Jackie Coogan as a fireman; "Studio golf" played by Cullen Landis, David Butler, Victor Schertzinger, Louis Gasnier, Barbara La Marr and Betty Francisco; Bill Desmond, Mrs. Desmond and Baby Desmond; William Collier and Tom Ince—and Ben Turpin and Phillys Haver agreeing that "Sherman was right."

WITH the signing of Jimmie Adams, Babe London and others under exclusive contracts to be featured in Christie Comedies, the two-reel organization has made a line up of comedy stars by which five or six different "names" will appear alternately in starring positions in the new releases. Pictures are also arranged so that the supporting players will alternate their appearances.

For instance the latest picture releases will present a great variety of talent. "A Hula Honeymoon" features Henry Murdock and Babe London. Next comes "Babies Welcome," in which Dorothy Devore is starring, supported by Anna May Wong and George Stewart. Following will be Neal Burns in "Hot Water" supported by Duane Thompson.

"Suzanna" Wins Chicago Endorsement

Coincidental with the showing of Mack Sennett's "Suzanna" starring Mabel Normand at Barbee's Loop theatre, Chicago, and which won praise from public and critics alike, this Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release won also the unqualified indorsement of the joint committee on better films of the Illinois Council of Parent-Teacher Associations, the Illinois League of Women Voters and the Woman's City club of Chicago. "Suzanna" was given the official "O. K." by these organizations as affording clean and wholesome entertainment for the family.

"Suzanna" classes among the first-rate pictures now worth seeing," said the critic for the Chicago Daily News.

"An honest-to-goodness melodrama with a bride snatched from the altar, a duel on horseback at the edge of a cliff that will give you some shivers," wrote the critic for the Herald-Examiner.

"The story has a picturesque background and its scenes are vivid and full of action," said the reviewer for the Evening Post.

"You'll like Mabel Normand in 'Suzanna' as she mixes pathos and chuckles," said the reviewer for the Tribune.

Durand Joins Dorothy Dalton Cast

Edward Durand, who scored a success with Irene Bordoni in "The French Doll," has been added to the cast of Dorothy Dalton's latest Paramount picture which Ralph Ince is now directing at the company's Long Island studio.

In this adaptation of the play, "Leah Kleschna," Durand will have a comedy role similar to the one he had in "The French Doll." Durand, who just recently returned to picture work, has been seen with Alice Brady in "Anna Ascends," and also has a part in "Fog Bound," a Paramount picture not yet released, in which Miss Dalton stars.

New Universal Production Plans

Outdoor Pictures and Male Stars in Demand by Public, Says Carl Laemmle

UNIVERSAL has made striking changes in its attraction schedule and its group of five-reel feature stars during the last several weeks. These changes, according to information from the Universal home office, are the result of a careful estimate of the photoplay situation.

Investigators for Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, have accumulated evidence and opinions from all parts of the United States and Canada. The following important facts have been deduced from this mass of data:

The bulk of the motion picture public wants out-of-doors action pictures.

Male stars are more in demand than women stars.

Therefore, Universal's forthcoming features, now going into the making, will be virile and out-of-doors, and will be made mostly with men stars.

Compared to the Universal Attraction star group of last season, which contained three men and three women, Universal's group of feature stars now consists of five men and one woman. They are Hoot Gibson, Herbert Rawlinson, William Desmond, Roy Stewart, Jack Hoxie and Gladys Walton. Desmond, Hoxie and Stewart are recent additions to this group.

Joseph Friedman, Assistant General Sales Manager of the Universal Pictures Corporation, who is in charge of Universal Attractions of five-reel features, left New York for Universal City early this week to superintend the transition in production plans to meet the new trend in picture wants.

The current release schedule, as corrected, is as follows, beginning with the release of April 30:

"What Wives Want," an all-star picture featuring Ethel Grey Terry and Niles Welch; "Fools and Riches," starring Herbert Rawlinson; "Crossed Wires," with Gladys Walton; "Double Dealing," a Hoot Gibson feature; "Burning Words," Roy Stewart's first Universal Attraction; "Don Quixote of the Rio Grande," Jack Hoxie's first Universal picture; "Thicker Than Water," with Herbert Rawlinson; "Sawdust," a Gladys Walton-circus picture; "Shootin' For Love," another Hoot Gibson riot; "McGuire of the Mounted," starring William Desmond; "The Self Made Wife," an all-star production from a Saturday Evening Post story; "The Victor," with Rawlinson; "Out of Luck," an original Hoot Gibson picture; "Forced to Fight," Stewart's second picture; "The Untamable" starring Gladys Walton; and "The Six Fifty," an all star production.

England to See "Are You a Failure?"

"Are You a Failure?" Tom Forman's production for Preferred Pictures, will be the third Al Lichtman release to be distributed in England by Walturdaw. Following a trade showing given at Leeds on April sixth the picture received unusual praise from the trade press of Great Britain.

The Kinematograph Weekly said: "A pleasing comedy-drama. There is a human touch about the principal character which affords a chance for quite a pleasant piece of characterization and also a well produced climax."

The Cinema's comment read: "The story develops amidst ideal surroundings. The scene of the breaking of the log jam is a wonderful spectacle and once again a producer has gone one better than his predecessors and secured a grand effect that makes for a splendid finale."

In the opinion of the Bioscope, "Are You a Failure?" is "a clever, well-constructed story." Continuing, its reviewer said: "Technically there are fine examples of cinematography. Youth predominates and it is to young people that the film will have the biggest appeal. The whole production is remarkably well presented."

"Vengeance of Deep" Causes Comment

The submarine scenes in "Vengeance of the Deep," A. B. Barringer's drama of undersea life distributed by American Releasing, have, in advance showings of the picture, caused considerable comment.

The entire production was made in Hawaii, chiefly on the Island of Aohu, and the underwater scenes were made in their entirety in the same vicinity. The latter were achieved without the aid of studio expedients, neither tanks nor trick photography being employed to stage the scenes played on the ocean's bed, it is claimed.

Thrills for "Master of Women"

Barker Unit Off to Canada for Outdoor Scenes for New Production

REGINALD BARKER'S next production under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices will be "The Master of Women," based upon G. B. Lancaster's "The Law-Bringers." Filming was started a little more than a week ago, several of the interior sets being "shot" before the big project embodied in the exterior sequences was launched.

Thursday the entire company, numbering about fifty persons and including the director's staff, cast, cameramen, electricians and a construction crew, started for Canada, where the outdoor scenes of "The Master of Women" will be filmed. Edmonton, which will serve as the base of operations, will be the first stop.

Through the co-operation of the government officials, Mr. Barker will stage a buffalo stampede in the Canadian National Park, 7,600 bison settlers of the place are looked up to participate, with Earle Williams, Renee Adoree and Pat O'Malley setting the pace in the foreground. If they get out of that tight position alive, the director intends to send them through the "whitewater" or rapids of the Athabasca River in a batteau and later to have them caught in an ice-jam on the Athabasca while attempting to cross the frozen river with a dog-team.

These thrills are worked in as a logical part of the story. Considering the terrific forest fire that Anna Q. Nilsson had to ride through in the last Barker picture, "Hearts Aflame," the stars of "The Master of Women" are getting off rather light. Some scenes of a whaler frozen in in the Arctic Sea at Herschel Island, and a dog-team race at Athabasca Landing are among the other unusual elements which the director will inject into his picture while in the North. Percy Hilburn who has been with Reginald Barker for the past five years will be in charge of the photography and Harry Schenck is accompanying the party as unit manager.

"TEMPTATION"

INSTANTANEOUSLY made a hit with the Stanley Company of America and played a special 8-day run at their big Karlton Theatre in Philadelphia.

PROVED itself a "go-getter" by registering a popularity record during the entire run.

BOX-OFFICE records are being smashed everywhere and big first run houses acclaim it a real hit.

SUCCESS is assured by the all-star cast featuring Bryant Washburn, Eva Novak, June Elvidge, Vernon Steele, Phillips Smalley.

Arrow Announces Big Foreign Sale

A STATEMENT issued from the office of D. J. Mountan, Manager of Arrow's Foreign Department, this week, contains the facts concerning the consummation of an exceptionally big deal for Central Europe.

The contract is between the Arrow Film Corporation and Mr. Hugo Neudecker, of Vienna, Austria, for Austria-Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Roumania, and Poland, and is for practically the entire output of the Arrow Film Corporation. It includes the eight specials, "Lost in a Big City," "Jacqueline, or Blazing Barriers," "The Broken Violin," "None So Blind," "The Rip Tide," "The Little Red Schoolhouse," "Man and Wife" and "The Streets of New York." It also takes in thirteen Jack Hoxies, two Rubye de Remers, four Neva Gerbers, six William Fairbanks, three Bessie Loves, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "Night Life in Hollywood," a series of comedies, including Broadway Comedies, Mirthquake Comedies and Speed Comedies and other series of one and two reel comedies.

Tonto Basin For "To The Last Man"

The Tonto Basin, America's least civilized spot, is to be filmed. It will serve as a background in making a photoplay adapted from Zane Grey's famous novel, "To the Last Man."

This will be Mr. Grey's first production under his new contract with Paramount which will include the production of film dramas from all his current and future works.

Mr. Grey, Victor Fleming, the director, and Lucien Hubbard, production editor, are now in the Tonto Basin looking over the ground. According to Mr. Grey, who has lived in the valley, a wagon wheel has never turned within five miles of the spot. It abounds in big game and is heavily timbered on the ridges. The story is based on the Pleasant Valley war, a feud of the late eighties between sheepmen and cattlemen, in which both factions were wiped out literally "to the last man."

Noel Smith Will Direct Century Comedies

Noel Smith, well known for his work in directing the Hall Room Boys Comedies, and Lloyd Hamilton, has been signed to direct Century Comedies. He is now working in his first story in collaboration with Sig Neufeld, production manager of the Century studio. The cast is being assembled and George Williams, who played the part of Ferdie in the Hall Room Boys series, will assist Smith in the direction.

"Covered Wagon" Is Chicago Hit New York and Coast Successes Duplicated at Opening in Woods Theatre

DUPLICATING its tremendous success in New York and Los Angeles, "The Covered Wagon," James Cruze's Paramount picture of the winning of the West, had its opening Sunday night at the Woods theatre in Chicago before an audience which packed the house after having stood in line for hours to get in, according to report.

The audience, which included most of the prominent people of Chicago, started its applause with the opening dedication to Theodore Roosevelt and continued it throughout the picture, it is claimed.

Among the people who saw the picture at the Woods theatre were Emerson Hough, author of the novel from which the picture was made; Governor McCrae of Indiana, Eugene Zukor and E. E. Shafer from the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Hough made a short address before the presentation of the picture.

Practically the same presentation was given at the Chicago showing that was given at the Criterion theatre in New York, the orchestra being under the direction of Frederick Arundel and recruited largely from the Chicago Symphony, whose season has just closed. Before the picture there was a prologue in which the songs of the period of 1849 were sung by a chorus against a background of comp-fires and covered wagons.

The Chicago newspaper critics were unanimously enthusiastic.

Rob Reel in the Chicago American said: "A living dream of a glorious past has come to us, a piece complete in the craftsmanship of the cinema, sounding the glory of men and women from whom we are sprung."

Virginia Dale in the Chicago Journal: "James Cruze, director of 'The Covered Wagon' has done a compelling piece of work. He gets to the heart and spirit of what we like to believe our country is. The picture should be Paramount's pride."

Journal of Commerce: "It is more than a movie-ization of a novel; it is a screen parallel of a novel. It imparts a fine dignity to the book from which it sprung and truly glorifies the film art. A monumental movie."

"Within the Law" at N. Y. Strand Sing Sing and Auburn Prisoners See Special Showings Previous to Opening

NORMA TALMADGE in "Within the Law," produced by Joseph M. Schenck for First National Pictures, will open at the New York Strand April 29th. The Strand showing of the famous "crook" melodrama was preceded by a presentation at Sing Sing Prison on April 25th and Auburn Prison on April 28th.

"Within the Law" was directed by Frank Lloyd, who made a special trip to New York to secure the proper scenes of the Tombs and of the Court of General Sessions which are shown in the picture. As Mary Turner, the under-paid shop girl who is wrongfully accused of robbery and sent to prison, but who later comes out to conduct a questionable business always "within the law," Miss Talmadge is said to have one of the strongest roles of her career, and one which permits her a sharp contrast of emotions, costumes and settings. On the stage the character was created by Jane Cowl, and enacted throughout the long career of the play on the stage by many of the most prominent actresses of the country.

An outstanding fact about the production is the capable cast surrounding the star, several of whom are known as stars in their own right. Lew Cody plays the famous character of Joe Garson, the "con" man who becomes a leading figure in Mary's little band. Eileen Percy plays Aggie Lynch, heroine of many a breach of promise suit, and Helen Ferguson is seen in another important feminine role. Jack Mulhull has the leading masculine role, playing Dick Gilder, and De Witt Jennings enacts the same part he played on the stage, that of Inspector Burke. Other principals in the cast are Warde Crane, Thomas Rickets, Joseph Kilgour, Arthur Hull, Lionel Belmore, Lincoln Plummer and Catherine Murphy.

Will Broadcast Star's Divorce Views

LEAH BAIRD'S views of divorce—that she has decided opinions on the question is evidenced by her current picture, "Is Divorce a Failure?"—are to be sent broadcast to the women of America from what is said to be the world's largest radio station, that of the General Electric Company, at Schenectady, N. Y.

"Is Divorce a Failure?" originally was booked for a run in the Strand, Schenectady, last week, but Manager William M. Shirley requested a postponement in order that Miss Baird might make a personal appearance. He is now negotiating with S. Hochstim, the Associated Exhibitors branch sales manager in Albany, for either the last week in April or the first in May. Arrangements already have been made for a reception by the Mayor and it will be during the popular player's appearance there that she will make the address which is to be sent broadcast by wireless telegraphy.

Additional Sales on Truart Product

The interest in the recent announcement by M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Truart Film Corporation, regarding the enlarged activities of this producer-distributing organization, is closely seconded by the unusual promptness with which the market, not only in the United States, but also throughout the world, is observing the earlier Truart product, it is claimed.

"Women Men Marry" was contracted for during the current week by Mr. Nelson of London for the United Kingdom, Belgium and Szecho-Slovakia. This means that practically the entire foreign territory on this Edward Dillon production has been contracted for.

Following closely upon the sales of the past few weeks, a deal for the New England territory was consummated by Mr. Hoffman with Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Corporation, for the rights to both "Women Men Marry" and "The Empty Cradle," the Burton King production featuring Mary Alden and Harry Morey.

"Man Next Door" Is in Final Editing

Victor Schertzinger has finished "The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough, for Vitagraph, and it is now in process of final editing. "The Man Next Door" is said to have lent itself peculiarly to the abilities of Director Schertzinger. It is one of Emerson Hough's most famous novels and gives to the screen all the wonderful characterizations that have marked this author's work.

The cast includes David Torrence, Frank Sheridan, James Morrison, Alice Calhoun, John Stepping, Adele Farrington, Mary Culver and Bruce Boteler.

Governor Sees Johnson Animal Picture

GOVERNOR RITCHIE of Maryland and city officials of Baltimore attended a screening of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's "Trailing African Wild Animals" at the New theatre, on April 16. W. Perry Bradley, Boy Scout Commissioner of Baltimore, brought 300 Boy Scouts to the opening performance and also had other detachments of Scouts to following performances.

"Trailing African Wild Animals" is the result of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson's adventures during two years in the African jungle. The photoplay has been endorsed by the American Museum of Natural History, and has been enthusiastically received by such naturalists as Carl Akeley, African explorer, and Gifford Pinchot, Governor of Pennsylvania. It is released by Metro Pictures Corporation.

Capitol Critics Like "Poor Men's Wives"

Washington screen critics were impressed very favorably with "Poor Men's Wives" when that Al Lichtman attraction played a first run engagement in the capital city recently at the Central theatre.

The Herald reviewer said: "Gasnier's direction is flawless and the photography is remarkably good, especially in the gorgeous costume ball scenes with their riots of color and action."

The Post critic wrote: "'Poor Men's Wives,' which yesterday inaugurated a week's premiere as foremost feature of a remarkable bill at the Central, won the unstinted praise of crowds that jammed the capacity of the theatre at every performance. Barbara La Marr offers one of the most convincing portrayals she has ever brought to the screen."

The Times recommended "Poor Men's Wives" to its readers by saying, "It is emphatically a picture that all will enjoy to the utmost."

Young Players Shine in Garson Production

Young Pat Moore, who played one of the leading roles in Harry Garson's screen version of James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, "An Old Sweetheart of Mine," for Metro and who has proved his celluloid value in other productions of importance, is regarded as a youngster who has very emphatically "arrived."

Harry Garson also pins much managerial faith to the appealing personality and splendid acting gifts of little Mary Jane Irving, who played a child part in the same picture, and who has been engaged in support of Clara Kimball Young in "Cordelia, the Magnificent," Frank Beresford's screen version of LeRoy Scott's novel.

"Abysmal Brute" Wins Praise

Universal Production of Jack London's Story Praised in N. Y. and Chicago

HOBART HENLEY'S latest Universal-Jewel production, "The Abysmal Brute," a film epic of Jack London's famous story, in which Reginald Denny is starred, has met with exceptional success in its recent premiere showings in the various film centers, Universal reports.

Both in New York and Chicago, it was acclaimed by newspaper reviewers and the public. The picture is regarded as one of the outstanding films of the season in the eyes of Universal exhibitor patrons, it is asserted.

The New York premiere of "The Abysmal Brute" was in B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre, where the picture is said to have played to capacity during a week characterized by exceptionally stiff opposition.

P. W. Gallico, motion picture editor of the New York Daily News, wrote:

"A photoplay for maids and men. It really is sort of a movie vacation for poor father. There's honest to goodness fight stuff in this, besides real comedy, and interesting story and splendid direction."

Harriette Underhill, of the New York Tribune, said:

"'The Abysmal Brute' opened at the Broadway theatre yesterday, and while we have never read Jack London's story for which the picture was named, we doubt if it could have been any better than the picture. Especially pleasing is the direction by Hobart Henley and the work of Reginald Denny, who plays the title role. In fact, we consider that neither of them has ever done anything so good as this new picture."

Other New York reviewers were equally as enthusiastic.

In Chicago, great praise was accorded Denny for his work in this Jewel production.

"The screen has few players of Denny's virility and clean cut, as they say, punch," wrote Virginia Dale, reviewer for the Chicago Daily Journal. "I should think he would make the boys set out a-training themselves, and make the girls tired of the drawing room shieks."

"'The Abysmal Brute' rings true from beginning to end," is the pronouncement of Polly Wood, photoplay critic for the Chicago Herald and Examiner. Rob Reel, of the Chicago Evening American, found it "a strikingly original photoplay" and "absorbingly interesting." "Good medicine" for Spring, he calls it.

Universal is now accepting bookings on this new Hobart Henley production. Prints are in all Universal exchanges.

Plans for "Ten Commandments"

Largest Set in Picture History Is Claimed for De Mille Production

THE largest exterior set ever built and the largest number of people ever carried on a motion picture location, it is said, will be outstanding features of Cecil B. De Mille's forthcoming film version of "The Ten Commandments," which is scheduled to start May 1.

The city of Rameses II, the great pharaoh who reigned at the time of the Decalogue, will be built in a desert location, hundreds of miles from Los Angeles. Over 2,000 actors will be employed in addition to hundreds of carpenters, technical aides, horses and camels.

A modern tent city to accommodate several thousand will spring overnight on the desert as a temporary home for those who will play as Hebrews and Egyptians in the Biblical cut-backs of the modern story constructed by Jeanie Macpherson around the Decalogue.

"The Ten Commandments," Paramount says, will be the biggest film effort of 1923. It will take over five months in the making. For the Biblical episodes thousands of costumes are now being prepared in an annex to the De Mille wardrobe established on the top floor of the old Lasky laboratory.

Chariots are being built by a crew working day and night, while an entire harness shop has been established to make hundreds of saddles such as were used in the days of the Old Testament. The entire force of a wig-making establishment are busy preparing historically correct hirsute accessories.

Where the city of Rameses II will be established has not yet been decided upon. Assistant Director Culben Tate and Cameraman Bert Glennon and Edward S. Curtis have scoured all of western America in search of country similar in appearance to the deserts of Egypt and the Holy Land.

Decision is still pending as to the cast who will play out the ancient and modern episodes of De Mille's undertaking.

Mary Anderson who plays an important role in Victor Fisher's all-star production, "Youth Triumphant," now being filmed at the Hollywood Studios.

"Backbone" Premiere at N. Y. Capitol

"BACKBONE," the first Distinctive Pictures Corporation's production to be distributed by Goldwyn, will have its metropolitan premiere at the Capitol Theatre, New York, next week. This is a picturization of the Clarence Budington Kelland story of the same title which ran serially in the "Saturday Evening Post." Edward Sloman directed it for Distinctive.

Alfred Lunt, stage star, makes his screen debut in "Backbone" as one of the two stars. The other is Edith Roberts who has appeared in many photoplays.

Other well-known players in "Backbone" are William B. Mack, George MacQuarrie, Frank Evans, James Doyle, L. E. LaCroix, Charles Fang, Frank Hagney, Marion Abbott, J. W. Johnson, Hugh Huntley, William Walcott and Adolf Millar. The continuity was prepared by Charles Whittaker.

Doug's "Robin Hood" in European Capitals

"Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" is now in the third month of its run at the Salle Navarrais, Paris, where it has broken all previous records for box-office receipts, attendance and length of run for any motion picture production ever before presented in Paris, it is said.

The Douglas Fairbanks production has been showing five weeks at the Theatre de la Monnaie, Brussels, an unprecedented run for that Belgian city, with indications that the engagement will extend until well into the summer.

Since March 25th the Fairbanks masterpiece has been filling the big Palladium theatre at Stockholm at every performance. On April 6th the production was shown at the Royal Palace, Madrid, before King Alfonso of Spain and the royal family previous to the commencement of a run at the Theatre Cataluna, Barcelona.

"Silas Marner" Helps Student Fund

Another was added to its long list of presentations in educational institutions when the Associated Exhibitors feature, "Silas Marner," was given in the High School auditorium in Springfield, Mass., recently. The showings, which were both afternoon and evening, were under the auspices of the freshman class of the High School.

The adaptation of George Eliot's masterpiece had been so highly recommended by the teachers and had proved such a delight to pupils themselves that the students wanted their parents and friends also to see it and incidentally hit upon this method of increasing the class funds. According to reports to Associated Exhibitors the two special entertainments proved a complete success in both respects.

New Warner Productions Under Way Soon

THREE productions will shortly be started by the Warner Brothers at the coast studios and these will be the forerunners of the scheduled series of eighteen for the coming season, according to an announcement. The three productions include "Broadway After Dark," "Lucretia Lombard" and "The Gold Diggers."

"Broadway After Dark" has been adapted for the screen from the stage play of the same name by Edmund Goulding. No definite announcement is made regarding the player cast for the feature role, but it is intimated that Marie Prevost is admirably suited for the part.

"Lucretia Lombard," a Harry Rapf production, will enable Irene Rich to play the first feature role in her screen career. Actual filming is expected to start about the first of May.

"The Gold Diggers" is an adaptation of David Belasco's stage success. Hope Hampton has been engaged to portray the leading role. The continuity written by Grant Carpenter has received the personal approval of Mr. Belasco. Harry Beaumont, will direct the feature.

"Girl Who Came Back" Reports Favorable

The reports received by Al Lichtman from his franchise holders on "The Girl Who Came Back," the next Preferred release, are unanimous in stressing the realism achieved by Tom Forman in translating this famous prison drama to the films, according to the Lichtman offices. B. P. Schulberg, who personally supervises the production of Preferred Pictures, assigned Forman to direct the Blaney play reassured by the success of the same director with "The City of Silent Men," Tom Meighan's vehicle.

The Lichtman franchise holders are agreed that Forman has come several paces nearer perfection with "The Girl Who Came Back" since with the aid of his cameraman, Harry Perry, he has achieved a number of photographic effects that offered no solution at the time "The City of Silent Men" was produced.

"Luck" is Published by Music House

T. B. Harms have published the new fox-trot "Luck," based on the Johnny Hines melo-comedy of the same title. The number, composed by Leon De Costa, is already said to have made a hit in New York, where it is being played by many of the well known orchestras. It is an effective tie-up with the C. C. Burr feature and should prove of decided value to all exhibitors playing the picture.

Critics Approve "Bright Shawl"

N. Y. Reviewers Praise Picture as Well Mounted Colorful Romance

"THE BRIGHT SHAWL," starring Richard Barthelmess, was presented this week at the Strand Theatre, New York. This First National release won commendation from the trade and newspaper reviewers as a well told, colorful romance.

Speaking editorially the MOTION PICTURE NEWS states: "Allow us to give the retort courteous to First National and Inspiration for their exceptionally fine production 'The Bright Shawl' which might be an enlarged miniature so suggestive is it of a quaint old romance of yesterday. . . . A story, written by an expert story-teller (Joseph Hergesheimer) has been given to men thoroughly grounded in their art. The result is the production perfect."

The reviewer in the Moving Picture World concludes his analysis with the paragraph: "From every standpoint it is a remarkably well-balanced production, high in interest and entertainment value, unusually artistic and one which takes rank with the year's finest pictures."

The Film Daily is enthusiastic over the impressive coloring given the story. "The picture is always vivid in atmosphere," writes the critic, "The settings are colorful and not only the interiors but the exteriors as well, are a treat to the eye. Pictorial appeal in this is far-reaching and always pleasing. . . . Richard Barthelmess puts his best into the portrayal of Charles Abbott, the American, and adds another to his list of successful characterizations. Dorothy Gish is refreshing in the part of the Andalusian dancer, and gives one of the best performances of her career."

The reception accorded by the New York newspaper critics was unusual inasmuch as several of the reviewers each singled out different members of the supporting cast for special laudatory mention. P. W. Gallico in the Daily News remarked the acting of Jetta Goudal, who played the part of the Chinese spy. In speaking of the picture, Mr. Gallico writes: "The latter part of the picture has plenty of stirring action, including a thrilling duel between the American adventurer and DeVaca."

Robert Sherwood in The New York Herald made special mention of Anders Randolph, playing the "heavy" and the World described Mary Astor and William Powell as "two young comers."

Snow's Big Game Picture Is Hit

Syracuse Highly Approves Universal's
"Hunting Big Game in Africa"

THE question whether or not such feature films as "Hunting Big Game in Africa," H. A. Snow's adventure film now being released by Universal, would be as popular in medium sized cities and towns as it has been in New York, Philadelphia, Boston and similar centers, was definitely settled this week when the aforementioned picture was screened in the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y.

The unqualified praise given to Snow's big game picture by the press is said to establish a precedent in Syracuse for critic enthusiasm.

The Syracuse Herald was especially loud in its praise of "Hunting Big Game in Africa."

"The Strand this week has the greatest motion pictures yet taken of wild life, a collection that Roosevelt would have called 'Bully!' or something equally enthusiastic and explosive. 'Hunting Big Game in Africa' is some of the greatest camera reporting ever done," wrote the Herald reviewer.

"There's a liberal education in African natural history in these pictures. There's a deal more kick in the show than in hectic scenes of softly garmented studio lovers swapping camera kisses in travesty of passion."

"Real men underwent peril and hardship to get these pictures and cameras among them show them at work. They are modest about it and the captions hardly mention difficulty or danger. One glimpse is your money's worth when a pig-eyed, erectile-eared killer elephant, a bull with seven-foot tusks and 30-inch feet, carrying his two tons of murderous meat on a death charge at the camera, with his herd behind him trampling down trees like a terrible storm."

"The writer remembers very distinctly that as a child he pored over the story of Stanley's explorations in Africa in the search for the missionary Livingston," wrote the Journal critic. "Also, how those old, vivid, cheap prints did thrill his soul to the depths, and that he registered a vow that if ever fortune made it possible for him to do so he would see that wonderful country."

"He believes now that he has gotten as close to that country as there will be any need, at least to know its flora and fauna."

C.B.C. Features Passed Without Cutting

That intelligent production, editing, thought, and foresight can produce a "censor-proof" picture is proved by the decision given this week by the National Board of review, on the two current C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation productions, "Temptation" and "Her Accidental Husband."

Both these features were viewed by the Board this week, and both of them were passed one hundred per cent, without a single cut, change, or alteration in scene or title.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" Has Boston Runs

WHAT is considered by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to be one of the most unusual bookings on a film attraction has been secured by L. J. Hacking, Branch Manager of the Hodkinson Corporation in Boston, Mass.

The Whaling Film Corporation made arrangements for Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships" to play the Selwyn Theatre, Boston, Mass., before the matter of distribution had been placed in the hands of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. This Elmer Clifton production played the Selwyn to capacity business for several weeks, it is said.

Following the acquisition of "Down to the Sea in Ships" by the Hodkinson Corporation a two weeks' booking in Boston was secured at the Park Theatre. Now it is reported from Boston that the Gordon Circuit of theatres has booked this production for an indefinite run over their entire circuit. Inasmuch as this is three distinct runs in the business section of Boston, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation feels that "Down to the Sea in Ships" has earned itself the distinction of being of such an unusual appeal as to make a booking of this nature possible.

Buster Keaton Popular in South Africa

Buster Keaton's laugh provoking tendencies are appreciated in every portion of the globe. Southern Africa is the latest far-away land to succumb to the solemn faced comedian, as is proved by a recent announcement of First National Pictures. Eleven of his First National comedies have been sold to the International Variety and Theatrical Agency, Inc., agents for the African Films, Ltd., for the territory of Africa lying south of the equator.

The pictures are "My Wife's Relations," "Blacksmith," "The Pale Face," "The Cops," "The Frozen North," "The Electric House," "Day Dreams," "The Balloonatic," "The Love Next," "The Playhouse" and "The Boat."

Century Comedy Titles Are Changed

Julius and Abe Stern announce the following title changes in their most recently finished Century Comedies:

"The Orphan," Baby Peggy's last two-reel comedy, is to be known as "Nobody's Darling."

"Sky High," Harry Edwards' Century Comedy, is now titled "Down to Earth." The cast is composed of Marjorie Marcel, Joen Bonner, Jack Earle and Billy Engle.

"Hay, Hay!" Fred Spencer's second starring comedy for Century, is now called "Spring Fever." Lois Boyd and Henry Murdock support Spencer.

Long "Covered Wagon" Run Predicted

Sid Grauman predicts that James Cruze's Paramount production "The Covered Wagon," will run at least eight months at his Egyptian theatre in Hollywood, where the picture had its West Coast premiere, April 10. This information was conveyed to S. R. Kent in a wire received from O. V. Tragardh, Paramount branch manager in Los Angeles who stated that the gross receipts for the first eleven performances, starting with the opening Tuesday evening and including Saturday night, were $18,785.75.

The capacity of the Egyptian is 1,741, and with two shows a day the house is now practically sold out for three weeks in advance, it is said.

Canadian Cities See "Souls For Sale"

Canadian fans are not being neglected insofar as early key city showings of Goldwyn's Rupert Hughes picture of Hollywood life, "Souls for Sale," is concerned.

It is being shown this week in first run theatres in the three largest cities in Canada—Toronto, Winnipeg and Montreal, with other important bookings to follow immediately.

"Souls for Sale" did two tremendous weeks at the Capitol theatre, New York, and is booked for the Strand in Brooklyn next week. A statement from Goldwyn says that exhibitors throughout the country are manifesting the greatest eagerness to get the picture at the earliest possible date.

Scotch Trot for "Man from Glengarry"

In order to give exhibitors an exploitation opportunity in promoting the Ernest Shipman production, "The Man from Glengarry," the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that they have secured the services of Milt Hagen and Menlo Mayfield, writers of a score of popular song successes, who have written a special "Scotch Trot" ballad in conjunction with the picture.

Special tie-ups will be arranged and music dealers in all sections of the country will have all details ready for a comprehensive advertising tie-up as soon as the picture is booked in that particular territory, it is said.

Burr Starts Campaign For Features

An extensive advertising campaign has begun in the Southern and Canadian territory on the two C. C. Burr features, "Secrets of Paris" and "The Last Hour," which it is expected will do much to stimulate bookings on these two features.

It is just another of the promises that C. C. Burr made, and which he is keeping, to back up in every possible way both exchanges and exhibitors. Already a campaign in magazines of national circulation on "Secrets of Paris" and "The Last Hour" has been put over.

A trio of scenes from Norma Talmadge's new production for First National release, titled "Within the Law."

High Tribute For "Jacqueline"

Maine Lawmakers Commend Arrow Production Following Special Showing

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, President of Arrow Film Corporation, is in receipt of a letter of which he is justly proud, being, as it is, a remarkable tribute to their Pine Tree Special, "Jacqueline, or Blazing Barriers," from a man who is specially qualified to know whereof he speaks.

A few days ago Ex-governor Millikin of Pine Tree Pictures, showed this latest James Oliver Curwood-Dell Henderson production before the members of the House of Representatives in Augusta, Maine, and shortly after the showing the Honorable Frank H. Holley, Speaker of the House, wrote Mr. Milliken in part as follows:

"Having had several years experience as an exhibitor of pictures, and believing that I have some idea of what constitutes a real picture, I cannot resist the temptation of writing you this note in which I wish to express my appreciation of what I believe to be the finest picture I have ever seen upon the screen, and I allude now to your picture 'Jacqueline' or 'Blazing Barriers,' which you showed at the State House recently.

You will readily understand why I might be impressed by the wonderful forest fire scene. Living as I do, within seventy-six miles of the Canadian boundary, a forest fire is nothing new to me, but a forest fire reproduced in a picture as vividly as that which appears in "Blazing Barriers" is certainly worthy of admiration of any man who knows anything of forest fires and pictures."

"Jacqueline, or Blazing Barriers" received its world premiere presentation in Paterson, New Jersey, a few weeks ago, and will shortly be generally released throughout the country.

"Children of Dust" is Being Edited

"Children of Dust," produced by Arthur S. Jacobs and directed by Frank Borzage for First National release, is now receiving its final editing, according to word received this week from Los Angeles. Borzage, the young director of "Humoresque," completed the filming of this production, which is the screen version of the magazine story "Terwilliger," last week, and the editing is being rushed for early shipment of the print to New York.

In addition to Johnnie Walker, Pauline Garon, Lloyd Hughes, George Nichols and Bert Woodruff, three of the best known youngsters of filmdom will appear in "Children of Dust." They are Frankie Lee, Josephine Adair and Newton Hall.

Agnes Christine Johnston and Frank Dazey prepared "Children of Dust" for the screen from Tristram Tupper's story "Terwilliger," which was first published in Metro-politan Magazine.

Equity Reports More Foreign Deals

Further evidence of their intention to have "all decks cleared" in preparation for their big drive on the forthcoming Daniel Carson Goodman "Special," was demonstrated at the office of Equity Pictures Corporation during the past week when a block of subjects was sold to two foreign buyers for two distinct territories.

The first sale was made with the Cuban Film Company for the territory of Cuba and the second sale was closed with Chipman Limited for the territory of Brazil and includes the territorial rights on "What No Man Knows" and "Wordly Madonna," Clara Kimball Young releases still open for that territory.

Washington Approves "Wonders of Sea"

On the occasion of the premiere performance in Washington of J. E. Williamson's undersea picture, "Wonders of the Sea" at Crandall's Metropolitan theatre, Sunday, April 15, newspaper reviewers commended the picture.

The Washington Times said: "Wonders of the Sea" is no misnomer, as the J. E. Williamson Corporation must have realized in releasing this amazing revelation of the hidden mysteries of the deep. Adequate power to describe is lacking; words fail to betray the fantastic beauty. What has been locked in the vaulted caverns of the boundless waters now is unfolded in a stupefying panorama of grandeur. The picture is a masterpiece of modern photography, unrivaled and unexcelled. The photographer, Mr. J. Rescher, has accomplished an exceptional piece of work."

Campaign Book Out for "Alice Adams"

A campaign book whose artistic cover, though of larger dimensions, bears the appearance of that of the Booth Tarkington novel, is being distributed by Associated Exhibitors in connection with the release of its current feature, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams." In its twenty-four pages, more than 11 by 13 inches, the work contains, besides a number of other interesting features, a complete catalogue of material which Associated has prepared for use by exhibitors, and an unusually wide range of suggestions for exploitation projects.

"Captain Applejack" Is in Production

Fred Niblo started his second production, "Captain Applejack," under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices at noon of April 2.

Interiors in magnificent sets are being made now. In a fortnight the pirate sequence will begin and Niblo will hoist his pennant as admiral of a square-rigged fleet and go scudding through sun-splashed seas.

At that time Barbara La Marr, Robert McKim and Otto Hoffman will have begun their roles in the story. "Captain Applejack," written by Walter Hackett, has been a tremendous stage success.

"Playing It Wild."

Power Company Outlines Plans

Projector Organization Executives Discuss Policies for Coming Year

POLICIES and plans of the Nicholas Power Company for the coming year were outlined at a dinner given by President Carl to the executive and office staff of the company on Thursday evening, April 19th, at the Transportation Club, Biltmore Hotel, New York.

These dinners held at the Transportation Club are annual events and have proved very successful as the company's plans are freely and fully discussed so that everyone present will clearly understand just what is to be done and can thus contribute his share toward properly carrying out the plans formulated.

Mr. Earl stated that last year had been an excellent one but 1923 was proving even better, and it was evident that the general prosperity of the country is unquestionably having a favorable influence upon the cinema machinery industry.

Herbert Griffin, General Sales Manager, discussed the question of production with Mr. Goggin, Works Manager, and the latter gave a strong assurance that quality would be maintained and the output increased to meet all requirements. S. R. Burns, Secretary of the company, discussed financial conditions and recommended caution but agreed with Mr. Earl regarding his satisfaction with present conditions and the excellent prospects for good business during the coming year.

Lester Bowen, Designing Engineer of the Nicholas Power Company, took up in a general way the demand for better projection which has come with improved conditions, and promised that the company would do its part in answering the requirements of progressive exhibitors for new and better equipment.

P. A. McGuire, Advertising Manager, pointed out that Power's projectors were the most widely advertised motion picture machines on the market and expressed his opinion that the company's liberal advertising policy during the dull period had been to some degree responsible for the prosperity the company is now enjoying. M. D. O'Brien, Travelling Representative, W. Kron, Purchasing Agent, A. R. Schulze, of the Technical Department, A. E. Meyer, Export Manager, N. L. Wrede and C. L. Jones, of the Service Department, and F. T. Haller and J. Zack of the Cashier's Department, and E. T. Farrell spoke briefly regarding their particular phase of the company's activities.

Mid-West Critics Praise "Brass"

Warner Feature Dealing with Divorce Wins Commendation of Reviewers

THE Warner Brothers' picturization of Charles G. Norris' novel, "Brass," a Harry Rapf production directed by Sidney Franklin, is reported as having received the plaudits of the mid-western newspaper critics during its presentation at the Capitol theatre, Cincinnati.

The Post said: "'Brass' is the most human picture of the new year. All the characters are very real persons, and you feel you have a personal interest in them. The cast is a whiz."

The Enquirer said: "'Brass' has moments of intense emotional suspense, made all the keener by a cast of players who understand the fine points of acting and who have sufficient intelligence to express subtle thought rather than the broad gesticulations of mediocre actors."

In Louisville, Ky., where the feature played at the Alamo theatre, the local daily prior to the showing of the picture published expressions of opinion by the public on the question of marriage and divorce, offering prizes for the best answers to "Are divorces too easy?" Newspaper tie-ups along similar lines have been carried on by other theatres that have played the Warner picture, and they are said to have aided in boosting the box-office receipts.

"Brass" is described as dealing with marriage and divorce with a lofty intention, portraying naked modern life without pretense or disguise. The leading roles are played by Monte Blue and Marie Prevost, and among other members of the cast are Harry Myers, Irene Rich, Frank Keenan, Cyril Chadwick and Fat O'Malley. The picture was adapted for the screen by Julien Josephson.

Selznick Gets "Monkey's Paw"

Distributing Corporation Will Handle Picture in U. S., Canada and Australia

FOLLOWING closely on the announcement that it is to distribute "Rupert of Hentzau" comes the statement from the Selznick Distributing Corporation that it has acquired through outright purchase, the Manning Haynes production, "The Monkey's Paw," which is an adaptation of the story of that name by the famous author W. W. Jacobs whose stories and novels have been read by millions in the past twenty years.

Commenting on the new deal of his organization, W. C. J. Doolittle said: "We have purchased the rights for 'The Monkey's Paw' for the United States, Canada and Australia. In the latter country we maintain our own exchanges and general organization. I feel certain that this production is going to be tremendously popular and a fine box office picture. The story is most unusual, departing entirely from the hackneyed, stereotyped plots too often seen upon the screen. It is stories like 'The Monkey's Paw' which aid materially in persuading our great supporting public that the motion picture is still very much worth while and has not exhausted its great possibilities.

"Theatregoers will remember the stage version of this drama as enacted by Cyril Maude some years ago when it created a distinct sensation.

"Masters of Men" Has Special Showing

The exhibitors of the state of Connecticut had a special showing of Vitagraph's "Masters of Men" at Poli's Palace theatre, New Haven, through arrangements made by the New York Exchange. "Masters of Men," when given as a pre-release showing, was acclaimed by all critics.

"Bill of Divorcement" Triumphs

Philly, Baltimore, Washington, Ap- prove Associated Exhibitors' Feature

CONSTANCE BINNEY in "A Bill of Divorcement," an Associated Exhibitors success of the present spring, played full week's runs last week in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and, according to all reports, scored a triumph in each. The large crowds attending and the commendatory reviews of the critics were the more notable because each of these cities had seen the original stage play of the same name, in which Allan Pollock added to his fame.

The Philadelphia Record said: "'A Bill of Divorcement,' which was a stage success, has been converted into a dramatic and appealing motion picture. Constance Binney stars in the picture, which is at the Arcadia this week. Her splendid acting, and that of a first rate cast, and a gripping story united to make one of the most satisfying films shown recently."

The North American said: "'A Bill of Divorcement' pleased the Arcadia throngs. Constance Binney is seen in a role very different from those in which she is usually seen."

The Inquirer said: "Constance Binney achieves one of her most notable screen successes in the role of a girl who has never seen her father because he has been placed in an asylum before her birth. Miss Binney is delightful, while the support is excellent."

The Washington opening was at Julian Brylawski's Cosmos. The Star described Miss Binney as "charming" and the dramatic work throughout as "clever and meritorious," while the other papers also published enthusiastic reviews. In Baltimore, too, where the engagement was played at Nixon's Victoria, the praise was unanimous, it is said.

Burr Child Star Wins High Praise

Little Russell Griffin continues to be singled out for compliments on his ability as a screen actor and in addition is gaining more and more recognition from the public, according to the C. C. Burr offices.

Last week Russell was the guest of Col. Jacob Ruppert at the opening of the massive Yankee baseball stadium, where he was taken down on the playing field and introduced to and photographed with such notables as Judge K. M. Landis, the high commissioner of baseball; Babe Ruth, the Sultan of Swat; Bob Shawkey, who pitched the Yanks to their first victory in the new park; Chick Fewster, the first man to toe the plate in the big stadium, and many others.

Directors under whom Russell Griffin has lately worked are enthusiastic in their praise of C. C. Burr's five-year-old star. Plans are in the making at present to star Russell in a series of pictures to be sponsored by C. C. Burr.

Projection Is "Presentation" Just Like Specialties

Phase That Materially Adds or Detracts to Theatre's Popularity

Articles by Lee S. Ferguson

PROJECTION is presentation just the same as specialties are presentation." And, as most every up-to-the-minute exhibitor and showman will agree, Hyman (Brooklyn Mark Strand) says a long story in a few words.

To start at the beginning, Hyman has never lost sight of the fact that without projection and the projection machine there would be no motion pictures today. Just like the motor in a motor car, "projection" is what makes the pictures go. No pictures—no show. It has been my experience that some exhibitors pay slight heed to their projection department, in some cases even considering it a necessary evil. They will not argue much about paying a stiff price for a motion picture, but they will threaten to shoot the projectionist and hold out on his pay envelope if that worthy wishes to buy a $2 article for the projection booth. These exhibitors would not think of buying a high price motor car and putting into it an inferior motor and then tell the chauffeur to run her without gas, but they sometimes have a fine theatre and good pictures and nothing much in the projection room with which to present a first class form of entertainment.

Uses the Best of Equipment

The Brooklyn Mark Strand is equipped for projection just the same as it is equipped for everything else—in the best manner possible. There are three Simplex Projectors and everything that goes with them, including flood and spot lights. These machines are kept in excellent shape every minute, and experts are retained to see that they are always capable of turning out the best in them. Being good machines in the first place, care is about all that is required to keep them in trim, but if anything is needed for the projection room, it must be secured at once. At this theatre the projection room is not considered a necessary evil, but is looked upon as a most important asset. Improvement in projection is probably the prime cause of the motion picture theatre of today occupying the lofty place it does in the hearts of millions. In the old days of poor projection, when it was punishment to keep your eyes open while the film was flickering and doing the shimmy on the screen, master minds started planning to improve projection, and it has advanced right in step with the production of pictures. It is only some of the exhibitors who have not advanced, and if they do not present their

THE importance of projection has been exploited to exhibitors through these columns continuously over an extended period of time. Now comes a strong endorsement from a thoroughly up-to-date exhibitor, stating that projection is "presentation" in the first sense of the word. Expressing this opinion more elaborately, the proper screen presentation of the picture is the essential basis around which the completed show must be constructed.

Nothing is to be gained through the attainment of proper atmosphere by prologues and lighting for a special feature providing the picture itself is not shown to the audience through the very criterion of projection. Lee S. Ferguson, who has been describing, through these columns, the special stage effects secured by Hyman, is himself a well known exhibitor and thoroughly seconds Hyman's expression on the importance of projection to the motion picture theatre.

In the future continued articles on stage presentations and lighting will be published in this department with the additional feature of supplementing photographs and drawings.

shows with up-to-date projection equipment, manned by projectionists who are not only mechanical but use their heads as well, their public is apt to be the first to get sore about it and turn their attention to other theatres.

Projection at Top Notch Efficiency

To keep the projection booth at the top notch of efficiency, Hyman has a chief projectionists and four experts under him. The chief receives all orders and sees they are put into effect. It is the chief projectionists's duty to rehearse with the complete show each Sunday morning, and to get the first performances started right. The operation synchronizes with the performance, and is timed not only to the minute but to the second. Mark Strand patrons never have to give a thought to the projection room, because every performance runs so smoothly that I dare say many of the audience do not even know there is a projection room. It is only with faulty equipment, not enough equipment or poor handling that an audience becomes aware of the motivating power behind the picture. It should be the desire of every showman to have his theatre well known for perfect projection as well as for excellence otherwise.

It's a good investment and carries out the true statement that "projection is presentation."

I would like to take a few lines now to revert back to another "hobby" of Hyman's—and that is lighting. Recently an all-vocal overture was presented, using excerpts from the opera "Rigoletto." The first part, following a brief orchestral introduction, was "La Donna e Mobile," for tenor. The second and final part was the quartette, "Bella Figlia dell' Amore" (Fairest Daughter of the Graces) for tenor, soprano, contralto and basso.

Arrangement for Lighting

This overture was given with the artists in evening dress, in front of the new silver cyclorama which has already been introduced in these articles. The cyclorama was lighted as follows: two arc spots on one side, medium green, and two on the other side, orange; green footlights on three-quarters; blue borders; two deep blue box lamps at either side of the stage; one top spotlight, orange, and another light blue; one bottom spotlight, medium green, and the other amber (these four spots thrown on curtain from behind, and were one-half). A Kliegl flood of deep violet was thrown on the orchestra from the booth. One huge, transparent window was medium blue and the other pink. Two rose pink entrance spots were focused on the ceiling. The soloists were lighted by two light blue overhead spots and two light pink spots from either side.

This lighting arrangement and combination brought the new curtain out in splendid manner, and lent a beautiful background without in any way detracting from the singers.

At another place in this same program a specially staged "desert" scene served as an atmosphere for the Bedouin Love Song, sung by basso in sheik costume and assisted by a dancer in harem garb. The back drop was neutral blue, in front of which was Arah tent and palm trees. Stars shone through from the sky of the back drop. Soft lights played on the palms and the tent, and all other detail was submerged. A surf effect played on the back drop near the stage floor, giving the effect of a small body of water, rippling in the moonlight. As a night effect, it was one of the best that has yet come to the writer's notice. As the song came to a close the dancer was folded into the sheik's arms and the curtains were quickly drawn.

De Forest Taking Phono-Film to Paris

Dr. Lee de Forest, whose phono-film or talking motion picture invention has been on the program of the Rivoli theatre for the past week today announced that he had accepted an invitation of the Gaumont and Pathé interests to take his invention to Paris for a public demonstration. Dr. de Forest will sail next Wednesday on the steamship "Paris," and return in less than six weeks time in order to continue the development of his phono-film for the use of theatres in this country on a commercial basis.

He will be accompanied abroad by Hugo Riesenfeld of the Rialto theatre, who has been associated with the development of the phono-film for screen use.

Permanent studio quarters have been engaged by the Phono-film Company for the making of talking pictures at 318 East 48th street, New York City.

Liggett Theatre Completed by May 15

Madison, Kans.—The new Liggett theatre under construction will be completed about May 15.

This theatre will be modern in every respect, and will have one of the most up-to-date projection rooms in the state. The cost of same to be about $50,000.

Gem Theatre To Be Remodelled

Guy M. Shriner, who recently purchased the Gem Theatre of Kansas City, from Hugo A. Brecklein, will remodel the house. The building which is on a lot 50 x 137, will be extended back about forty feet and a balcony added. The two improvements will increase the seating capacity of the house to 1,400.—True.

A theatre incorporating beauty and comfort though relatively inexpensive in construction. This view also serves as an illustration of the narrow type house

Carlisle Will Have New Theatre

A new $100,000 motion picture theatre is to be erected on West High Street, Carlisle, Pa., on a part of the R. E. Shearer property, according to reports in circulation in that city. Nick Eeonium, of Carlisle and James Bellehas and Constantine Popp, both of Harrisburg, recently purchased the property and it is stated work on the theatre will be started this summer. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,200. Above the theatre proper will be apartments and rooms for storage purposes.—Berghaus.

Structure Soon Completed

The Athol, Mass., Amusement Company, has announced that the corporation's new playhouse, which is being remodeled from the Opera House, is expected to be ready for occupancy October 1st. The entrance to the building will face South Street. A canopy, 16 feet wide, will extend over the sidewalk and will be brilliantly illuminated at night. The floor of the entrance will be tiled and the walls finished and trimmed in marble. The floor aisles and stairway will be covered with rubber, while the entire floor of the house will be covered with battleship linoleum. Plans call for a women's rest and men's smoking room. New seats will be installed and there will be no posts to obstruct the view of the stage. The old interior will be torn out entirely and the new floor will rest on solid concrete piers. Remodeling the upper part of the block has been completed. This gives six new apartments of three and four rooms each, all of which have been rented.—Agard.

Boller & Boller Planning New House

A contract has been let by Dr. W. O. Thompson of Dodge City, Kans., for the construction of a $40,000 motion picture house in Dodge City, to be ready for opening about September under the management of W. H. Harpole. The new theatre, with a seating capacity of about 600, will be the finest house of its size in Western Kansas. Boller & Boller of Kansas City are the architects.—True.

Try-It To Be Replaced

Henry L. Spann, Buffalo architect, has completed plans for a new motion picture theatre on the site of the present Try-It, owned by J. D. Parmelee, who is erecting the new house. The Try-It is located at 177 Military Road.—Taylor.

SIMPLIFIED ELECTRICITY for PROJECTIONISTS

Alternating Current Circuits

LESSON IV., PART II.

Phase Relations

THE voltage and current relations of the ordinary alternating circuit are very much different from those found in a direct current circuit. In studying these relations, the wave diagrams described in Lesson IV., Part I. will be found very useful and should be accorded a careful study.

Resistance

If an alternating voltage E_a , (the subscript a means applied voltage) is applied across a resistance, R (Fig. 32A), a current will be caused to flow through the circuit so formed. This current will alternate in perfect synchronism with the voltage, meaning that when the voltage is zero, the current will also be zero and when the voltage is greatest, the current will also be greatest, in strict agreement with Ohm's Law ($E = IR$). The wave form of the applied voltage, E_a and the resulting current, I_r , will be as shown in Fig. 32B. Such a current is said to be in phase with the voltage. To use a rather crude example, a line of prisoners doing the "Lockstep" might be said to be "in phase" with each other. Their movements are, or at least should be, in synchronism. Another method of indicating that the current is in phase with the voltage is shown in Fig. 32C. Thus, at exactly 12 o'clock the two hands on your "Ingersoll" are in phase, since the hour hand is exactly on top of the minute hand.

According to Kirchoff's law of series circuit, the applied voltage E_a , will be entirely taken up by the I_r drop across the resistance R .

Reactance

Thus far our study of alternating currents has been comparatively simple and no doubt of little interest to the projectionist even pretending to know anything about electricity. We now come to a stumbling block, however, which is a serious obstacle to the average person. This is reactance.

Ask the average electrician what reactance is and he will quickly reply, "A form of resistance." Ask him to explain it and the answer will most likely be "Explain it? You can't explain it, it just is, that's all."

It is true that reactance is a form of resistance. It is resistance peculiar to electric circuits where, and only while, the current is changing. That is, while it is increasing or decreasing. This does not necessarily confine its existence to alternating current circuits where the current is always changing. It is present, for a moment, in direct current circuits immediately after the switch has been opened or closed. Indeed, it is this momentary reactance which permits one to throw small, direct-current motors directly on the line by limiting the current for the instant necessary for the armature to pick up speed. This the armature does instantly because of its light weight. After the armature once begins to turn over, it is then the generator action or "back voltage" which limits the current to the proper value necessary to drive the motor and its load. Of course, the resistance of the armature also helps limit the starting current since the armature resistance of a small motor is greater than that of a large one. This will be explained more fully later on.

Inductive Reactance

It will be recalled, from a preceding article (Lesson II, Part III.) that whenever current, which is flowing through a conductor, is changing a voltage is induced which causes a current to flow in such a direction as to oppose the change in current producing it. This is called self-induction and it is this property in any given alternating current circuit (called inductance), in addition to the frequency which determines the reactance.

Now this voltage of self-induction (written

E_{si} must be overcome before current can be forced through the circuit. That is, the voltage applied across a circuit must be high enough to neutralize the voltage of self-induction and also have enough left over in order to overcome the resistance of the circuit. Suppose we forget the resistance for the time being and assume that the voltage of self-induction alone is acting. Now the inductance of a circuit acts as a drag on the current and causes it to fall behind the voltage which is driving it. Suppose we take the spiral spring from the roller of an ordinary window shade and fasten one end of it to any object such as a piece of iron and then place this iron on a table. If we try to pull the iron across the table by means of the spring, we will find that the spring stretches until a point is reached where the iron is also pulled along.

This is just what happens in the case of inductance in a circuit. The pull on the spring is the voltage, the iron is the current and the spring is the inductance. The iron does not move until the pull has been applied and the spring has been stretched. There is a lag between the pull exerted and the movement of the iron. So also in the circuit. The current lags the voltage and where no resistance is present this lag is 90° or $\frac{1}{4}$ cycle. That is, the current in a pure inductive circuit lags the applied voltage by 90° .

Now we just said a short while ago that all of the applied voltage is used to neutralize the voltage of self-induction so this voltage must be equal and opposite to the applied voltage. This is shown in Fig. 33-B while C of the same figure shows the other method of indicating the relations mentioned once before. According to this figure, when the applied voltage is greatest, the current is zero and when the voltage is zero, the current has its greatest value.

So far we have spoken of inductance and not reactance. The latter depends upon two things: the inductance of a circuit, which, under a given set of conditions is constant, and the frequency of the current. Obviously, the faster the current changes the greater will be self-induced voltage and hence the greater will be the applied voltage necessary to neutralize it. The formula for reactance, X , is as follows:

The voltage necessary to neutralize the self-induced voltage is called the reactive drop and (Continued on page 2202) is written I_x similar to the resistance drop of a circuit which is written I_r . Since the circuit shown in Fig. 33-A is a pure inductive one, all of the applied voltage is taken up as a reactive, or I_x , drop.

We can see from the above formula that since the inductance of a circuit is constant the reactance varies directly as the frequency, meaning that as the frequency is raised the reactance is also raised, and vice versa. It is for this reason that 25 cycles is used for long distance transmission lines in preference to 60 cycle, since I_x drop with the former frequency is only 5/12 that of the latter. For local work, however, 60 cycle current is used since this involves lighter and hence less costly machinery.

Reactance, or "choke" coils are connected in series with power transmission lines, just outside of the power station to protect the machinery from lightning which may strike the wires. The frequency of lightning is in the neighborhood of 500,000 cycles per second and when such a flash strikes the transmission wires, the reactance is raised to such a high value as to cause an enormous I_x drop which prevents the lightning current from entering the building. Instead, it passes through a "lightning arrestor" and then into the ground. Many trolley cars have such coils mounted on their roofs, for the same purpose. Large reactance coils of heavy copper wire are also used in central stations to limit the short circuit current of generators. In this case, the frequency does not change, but the tremendous current due to the short circuit causes such a large I_x drop that the current is reduced to a safe value which the apparatus can carry.

Non-Inductive Resistance

There may be times when practically pure resistance is desired in an alternating current circuit such as in special kinds of resistance coils. Since the statement was made that reactance is present in all circuits where the current is changing it may be puzzling to some persons to see how such resistances are obtained. Fig. 34 shows the method. A loop of wire of the proper length is made and then coiled up to form the resistance. The two wires that form the loop are placed as close together as possible and so very little space is left for the formation of the necessary magnetic field around each wire. Hence, this field is small and the resulting inductance is negligible.

Condensive Reactance

It was just shown that inductive reactance causes the current to lag the applied voltage by 90°. There is another kind, called condensive reactance which has just the opposite effect and causes the current to lead the applied voltage by 90°. If two plates of any metal, such as copper, be separated by an insulating material, such as air, a device called a condenser will be formed which is capable of storing up electrical energy. If a direct voltage is now applied across these two plates, current will flow from the plate connected to the plus wire, to the plate connected to the minus wire, until the plate is charged. If the voltage is now reversed, current will flow in the opposite direction until the plates are discharged and will continue to flow until the plates are charged in the opposite direction (have the opposite sign). If the applied voltage is alternating the current will also be alternating.

Now the amount of charge in a condenser depends upon two things: the capacity (which is determined by the construction of the condenser, and the voltage. Since the voltage is the only thing that changes, it can be said that the charge depends upon the voltage, so as the voltage increases the charge increases and vice versa. Fig. 35 shows the wave forms in a pure condensive circuit. It will be seen that at 90° the voltage, and hence the charge Q, is not changing, so the current must be zero. Between 0° and 90° the charge is increasing so the current between these

Cullen Landis Engaged for "The Alibi"

Work is beginning at the Hollywood studios of Vitagraph on the coming special production, "The Alibi," an original story by C. Graham Baker. Cullen Landis, has been engaged for one of the important leading roles.

Landis played Dick Halpin in "Masters of Men," the youth who ran away to sea under a cloud, and who developed into a man in the brutal school of a sailing ship's fore-castle and as an enlisted man in the United States Navy. The sincerity of this young actor's impersonation impressed President Albert E. Smith, of Vitagraph, who personally is supervising the selection of the cast for "The Alibi." Mr. Smith went to Hollywood about three weeks ago.

United Artists Releases Endorsed by Women

THREE feature pictures released by United Artists Corporation have won full indorsement by three groups of women in Illinois and Chicago as productions "for the high-school age and over."

These pictures are Mary Pickford's brand new production of "Tess of the Storm Country" and Charles Ray's "The Girl I Loved" and the same star's "The Tailor Made Man."

The organizations indorsing them were the joint committee for better films from the Illinois Council of Parent-Teacher associations, the Illinois League of Women Voters and the Woman's City Club of Chicago.

Mack Sennett's "Suzanna," starring Mabel Normand and released by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, also was indorsed by these groups as affording clean and wholesome recreation for the family.

Goldwyn Finishes Three Features

Photography Completed on "Spoilers," "Three Wise Fools" and "Red Lights"

PHOTOGRAPHY has now been completed on three more pictures at the Goldwyn studios. This is in addition to "The Eternal Three," the Marshall Neilan production, which went into the editing and titling rooms last week.

Lambert Hillyer completed photography on Jesse D. Hampton's new screen version of Rex Beach's Alaskan novel, "The Spoilers," which contains a notable cast—Milton Sills, Anna Q. Nilsson, Barbara Bedford, Wallace MacDonald, John Elliott, Robert Edeson, Noah Beery, Mitchell Lewis, Ford Sterling, Robert McKim, Louise Fazenda, Kate Price, Gordon Russell, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Alec Francis, Sam de Grasse and others.

King Vidor is through with the photography on the picturization of Austin Strong's famous stage success, "Three Wise Fools," and will begin the editing and titling at once. In the cast of this picture are Claude Gillingwater, Alec Francis, William H. Crane, John Sainpolis, Eleanor Boardman, Brinsley Shaw, William Haines, Martha Mattox, Frederick Esmelton, Fred J. Butler, Zasu Pitts, Lucine Littlefield, Creighton Hale, Craig Biddle, Jr., and Raymond Hatton.

Clarence Badger is the third director who has completed photography on a Goldwyn production. "Red Lights," the film which he has been making from an Edward E. Rose mystery play is now being edited. In its cast are Marie Prevost, Raymond Griffith, Johnnie Walker, Alice Lake, Dagmar Godowsky, William Worthington, Frank Elliott, Lionel Belmore, Jean Harsholt, George Read, Charles H. West and Charles B. Murphy.

Hodkinson Plans Boston Premiere

Elaborate Arrangements Made for Opening of "Affairs of Lady Hamilton"

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that the Richard Oswald Production, "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," will have its premiere in Boston, Mass., at the Park theatre on Sunday, April 29. The engagement is indefinite.

The officials of the Hodkinson Corporation are very sanguine that new sales records will be set as soon as this production gets under way.

In order to forestall any possibilities of the smallest details being left undone the Hodkinson Corporation has sent Louis R. Brager to Boston to attend to all details of a very comprehensive exploitation campaign. Mr. Brager has just completed a long engagement with the First National Exploitation Department, which he represented with signal success in the Des Moines territory. Previously Brager was District Director of Exploitation for Metro in the Middle West.

Inasmuch as this is a drama of life authentically depicting the life and love of one of England's greatest characters, it is felt by the producers that motion picture audiences the world over will find unusual interest in it. "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" was produced by Richard Oswald for the Sterling Pictures Corporation and distributed by Hodkinson.

"Girl I Loved" Pleases Philly

Charles Ray's Latest Vehicle Wins Approval of Public and Critics

CHARLES RAY'S latest photoplay, "The Girl I Loved," registered a distinct hit when shown at the Aldine theatre, Philadelphia, under release by United Artists Corporation. The picture played to good business and won the approval of public and reviewers, it is reported.

"Charles Ray registers in one of his greatest film successes," said the critic for the Inquirer. "Never before has the portrayal of simple country characters attained such a measure of dramatic force and realistic simplicity."

"Love has not changed with time, and in this story we have that impelling force of life presented in a most attractive way," said the reviewer for the Record.

"'The Girl I Love' is a most unexpected photoplay," said the writer for the Public Ledger. "It is full of pain that has no ending in illogical joy and it is a most amazingly well done interpretation of the poem."

"Charles Ray gives a touching and artistic portrayal of a highly sensitive and sentimental hero," said the critic for the North American.

New Exploitation for "Temptation"

In line with their determination to issue exploitation novelties on their features that shall be in every way distinctive and worthy of a first-run production, the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has prepared a beautiful four-page rotogravure insert on "Temptation."

The insert is full newspaper size, the entire four pages showing scenes from "Temptation" laid out with decorative art work to bring out their full value, with a space at the top for imprinting the name of the franchise holder or exhibitor, depending on their use.

"Accidental Husband" Booked in S. F.

C. B. C. FILM SALES CORPORATION product is in receipt of word that "Her Accidental Husband," the Belasco production which that company is distributing, will have its West Coast premiere at the big Granada theatre in San Francisco.

The Granada is one of the biggest theatres in the country and only pictures of first-class caliber are booked. According to wires received by C. B. C. from the coast they were extremely enthusiastic over this production, which was directed by Dallas M. Fitzgerald. Lois Zellner wrote the story.

The Granada premiere will have special importance and interest in that San Francisco is the home city of Edward Belasco, who is the brother of David Belasco, and heads up Belasco Productions, Inc. It is announced that Mr. Belasco will be guest of honor at the opening. This is to be preceded by a big dinner, which will be given for him in San Francisco.

Veteran of Rhine Army Joins DeMille

Captain Alfred Barton, six years with the American Army of Occupation in Europe, has shaken from his feet the dust of Coblenz in favor of the sidewalks of Hollywood. Barton, military aide to General Henry T. Allen of the Army of Occupation, left Germany the middle of February after a service which started in June, 1917. Recently he has been connected with the Inter-Allied Rhineland High Commission.

Captain Barton, a Philadelphian by birth, is to make Los Angeles his permanent home. An architect and a writer of operettas by profession, he has been signed by Cecil B. DeMille to assist Paul Iribe, his art director. Barton was immediately set to work on details connected with DeMille's forthcoming production for Paramount of a film version of the Ten Commandments.

New Records Claimed for "Safety Last"

Harold Lloyd's "Safety Last" seven-reeler of thrills and laughter has already earned its page in motion picture history as a maker of new box office records, it is claimed. This is the nature of Pathe's direct reports from exhibitors in the big and average cities from coast to coast. A sample telegram to this effect is quoted from Manager C. W. Diebel, of the Liberty theatre, Youngstown, O.

"'Safety Last' smashed all previous opening records by nearly five hundred dollars, establishing a record that will probably stand for many moons."

The Hal Roach studios, where Harold Lloyd is at work on his next multiple-reel release, reports his receipt of hundreds of letters and telegrams of congratulation.

Camera to Screen

UT of three hundred or more pretentious motion pictures that will be made for the season of 1923-1924, twenty-five or thirty will stand out conspicuously. The future alone will reveal the producers whose names will be registered upon this roll of screen honor, but it is a matter of considerable pride of the STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES to recall that many of the past years best pictures went through our plant from camera to screen.

ITH the continually increasing number of prominent producers depending upon us for complete laboratory service, we are looking forward to an even greater contribution to the screen successes of this year. These producers know that a picture to be among the best, must be well photographed.

HAT'S why they rely upon the STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES for daily service and release prints. Experience has taught them that our service gives them more for their money and that distributors and exhibitors are better satisfied with STANDARD PRINTS.

"The COVERED WAGON"

A JAMES CRUZE PRODUCTION

THOSE who were charged with the making of "The Covered Wagon" had a full realization of their opportunity to record a phase of American life which is fast becoming extinct. Such a picture could not be made a few years from now.

A fortune was spent in making the picture, and all the great Paramount resources were called on to make it the greatest theatrical attraction in all history.

Further FACTS on the next page.

"The COVERED WAGON"

The Great Love Story

NO spectacle, however vast, can appeal unless it has genuine heart-interest. And in "The Covered Wagon" the spectacle is the background of one of the most beautiful and appealing love stories ever told. Heart appeal, pathos, comedy, romance—every emotional value that life itself possesses—all this is the story of "The Covered Wagon."

The great cast enacting the principal roles includes J. Warren Kerrigan, Lois Wilson, Charles Ogle, Ernest Torrence, Alan Hale, Tully Marshall, Guy Oliver, Ethel Wales, and John Fox.

A Rising Young Man Named Hearst

A Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation

It is easy to see why the International News Reel is far and away the best in the world.

It is easy to see why it is next to impossible for any other news reel to keep up with it.

The answer is told in two words—Hearst Organization.

Now you may not agree with Hearst in some of his public policies, nor in his politics, but whether you do or do not, you must admit that he is one of the busiest and most tireless organizers in the whole business world.

Northcliffe, though one of the greatest publishers in the world, never even attempted such a world-wide organizing job as Hearst has been tackling successfully during the past few years.

Hearst owns and controls so many newspapers that he can hardly walk down Main street in any large city without bumping into Hearst editors, Hearst reporters, Hearst artists, Hearst cartoonists, Hearst news experts.

Hearst has so many magazines that he keeps armies of paper mills worked to a pulp to supply him with raw materials on which to print his periodicals.

Some of his publishing efforts were raw at first. Some of them lost fortunes. But he never quit organizing. He gathered the best brains and the best talent from the four corners of the earth and he organized, organized, organized them into highly efficient working units.

So it was only natural that when he jumped into the moving picture business, his first thought was to organize the business of making news reels. He has an abiding faith in the idea that if you add brains to money the result is results. He dumped brains and money into the business of organizing news reels.

The International News Reel is the result. It is a moving picture digest of the thousands of brains that work for Hearst—news-brains, brains that know what the people want and how they want it.

Any theatre not showing the International News Reel is losing the direct benefit of the most highly organized news gathering outfit in the history of the world's affairs. Why take a second or third best when you can get the International?

This Hearst chap is a rising young man.

Thrills You've Never Sights You've Never

H. A. Snow's Hunting Big Game in Africa

Can you imagine paying $30,000 for nine reels of a big game hunt in Africa? Well, I paid that amount after I sat in our own projection room and witnessed H. A. Snow's "Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera." And you realize, of course, that there must be something very unusual in such a picture to draw forth that amount of money.

What struck me about it was that this wasn't a hunt—it was a continuous battle. Mr. Snow went to unheard of lengths to secure such pictures as had never been made. He wanted to show wild animals in action—rhinos, lions, elephants and leopards goaded into excess of fury and snapped at the very height of their rage. He got all he wanted and that's why I paid his price.

If you want to see a picture that will thrill you to the very core and give your children a better idea of jungle life than they could possibly get in any other way, find out immediately where this picture will be shown in your community and take your whole family.

By the way, have you seen Universal's great feature pictures, "The Abyssmal Brute" and "Bambi"? Don't miss them. And watch for the latest series of those delightful "Les Denny" Pushover stories, starring Reginald Denny. Write me a letter and tell me what you think of these or any other Universal pictures you've seen recently.

President

Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera

Universal has just secured what I earnestly believe to be the most remarkable wild animal moving pictures that have ever been made. And I am sure, when you see them, you will agree with me. They were taken by H. A. Snow on the expedition fathered and financed by the Oakland (Cal.) Museum of Natural History, and are entitled "H. A. Snow's Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera."

Realizing that there has been a great deal of sameness in most of the animal pictures shown heretofore, Mr. Snow followed his own plan of surprising the beasts in their lairs and snapping them when they charged and leaped. Naturally he had many hair-breadth escapes and many of them show on the films. Can you imagine elephants and lions plunging right at you from the jungle and thick? Yet that's what these pictures show.

On one occasion a rhinoceros, wild with rage, smashed the camera and everything else except the film-box. He only fell after being literally filled with lead. The pictures show him close up and when I saw them I fairly trembled with excitement. I never dreamed that any but a mad-man would have the nerve to stand in front of such angry beasts and turn the handle of a camera.

For three months, these pictures, playing at the Lyric Theatre, New York City, at prices ranging up to $1.65 per seat, proved a rare treat for over two hundred thousand men, women and children. I urge you with all my heart to go, with your family, and see these wonderful pictures. Then, write me your impressions.

Carl Laemmle
President

"'The Shriek of Araby,' elaborately featuring Ben Turpin, is splendid entertainment," says the M. P. World. "Mack Sennett has staged one of the best feature length comedies of the year.

"Burlesque comedy, when well played, is generally sure-fire, and with Ben Turpin in the role of the 'Shriek' this picture burlesquing shiek films is bound to make a big hit.

"The comedy is broad, but free from any taint of vulgarity, and is corking good entertainment. Laugh follows laugh.

"Ben Turpin is immense as the 'Shriek' and has never done better work."

"Unusual Pulling Power," Says Exhibitor to Fellow Exhibitors

Here is what J. M. Root, manager of the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, writes of Charles Ray's "The Girl I Loved," in a letter "To My Fellow Exhibitors" when the picture was in the fifth week of its run—

"Charles Ray's wonderful new United Artists' picture, 'The Girl I Loved,' reveals a new Ray of magnificent acting power in a new kind of story, presented beautifully in a new way.

Draws With All Classes, Especially Among Women

"I want to testify to its unusual pulling power with all classes, but especially as a 'woman's picture,' and recommend it as something that will give you prestige with the play-going public if you show it.

"Mr. Ray, who is an old friend of mine, is naturally proud of the greatest thing he has ever done and showed me some of the letters that have come to him unsought.

"A film must be exceptional when people go home and write letters about it"

We have Retained the Services of a Group of Leading Theatre Architects. These Services, for Purposes of Consultations, Are Offered by Us, Free of Charge, to Anyone with a Theatre Project.

Do you know what a fair charge would be for the equivalent of these services, if you secured them otherwise? Are you aware that such a charge, according to usual rules of practice, would be a considerable percentage of the entire cost of your operation? However, through our having arranged for the services to be rendered simultaneously for a large number of theatre projects, the cost to us for the services for each project is made much less.

Our offer places the benefits of the experiences of allied interests, concerned in the building and equipping of hundreds of theatres at your disposal. These interests include everything conceivably connected with the supplying of anything for theatres.

We attach to our offer no obligations of any kind upon your part. We can do this because we are supported as a clearing house by certain producing theatre interests who want no more from us than facts. With your consent we merely tell them what you may want that they may have. Each one of them has other channels, than through our offices, through which to reach you. Our architects are not expected to act for these producing interests.

They can act, therefore, in strict accordance with all the ethics of their profession. They are obligated to serve us only as getters of right information. They are expected by us to act the same as they would if retained by you, and paid by you, instead of us.

This is a Personal Suggestion and Invitation to You to Use the Services Offered in Whatever Way You May Think You Can Use Them Best. They can be rendered in association with any architect you may select; or, if you wish, we will cooperate with you in selecting an associate architect. The work of making the general drawings and specifications for any theatre can be provided by such an associate with good results through this arrangement.

We aim to save you money, time and worry through checking against mistakes. This checking extends beyond the scope of problems belonging to architects. IT GOES INTO QUESTIONS OF ADEQUATE SERVICE AS TO INTENDED FILM SUPPLY. It seeks to leave no stone untouched whose turning might help your enterprise.

No matter where your project is; what shape it's in; how big or small; write us about it. We shall be interested.

PRODUCTION

"Cold Chills" Sure-Enough Comedy Jack White's Funmaker Gives Louise Fazenda a Real Chance to Show Her Speed as a Comedian

Within the last hour we have seen Educational's "Cold Chills," a two-part comedy produced by Jack White. Putting the thing in a nutshell, it is our firm belief no better broad comedy of its length has been made within a year—and it may be added we are struggling to speak with conservatism. The comedy is funny, extremely so, in every department—in conception, in execution, in titling—and as a whole. It is frankly slapstick, just one smash after another, and yet of so novel and hilarious a character as to extract frequent outbursts of mirth from antipathetic womankind. And if after that there be any severer test of slapstick we know it not.

We are not going to try to describe "Cold Chills" with any attempt at adequacy. We will say this, though: Louise Fazenda comes into her own. There is not a minute when she is not in the picture. And right there with her, under the direction of Del Lord and Robert Kerr, are Harry Gribbon and Otto Fries and the whole untamed and untamable crew of Jack White, not for a moment forgetting Photographer McGill.

Louise comes on the scene as a Swedish maid brought into the country with the Joneses, about to land from the steamer after a trip abroad. Also trying to land is Diamond Dick, portrayed by Harry Gribbon. His smooth departure is interrupted by two revenue men, who have recognized him. In the turmoil resulting from his attempted capture Dick lands in a trunk and is carried to the Jones home. All the ensuing riot follows upon the attempt of Dick to escape from the house and of the efforts of a revenue man to discover if his belief that Dick is hiding in the Jones home is correct. There's abundance of evidence that some disturbing element is disrupting the tranquillity of an ordinarily well regulated family.

Prosaic enough, you will agree. But not so is it as we see it on the screen. There it is one laugh after another. G. B.

"WITHIN THE LAW"

A role unique and distinctive — her first opportunity to portray the fire, passion and revenge of a woman scorned and persecuted.
Personally directed by Frank Lloyd

Never Has She Been More Superb Than in This Great American Drama

Branded as a criminal.

Innocent, they threw her into a cell.

"You will pay for every day I spend in jail."

"Tell me you didn't kill him."

"I've got your police record."

"Don't do it. They'll frame you."

NORMA TALMADGE, in her new series of greater pictures, has had a wide variety of stories varying in character, time and country. In "Smilin' Through" her art brought happy tears; in "The Eternal Flame" she sounded the depths of a woman's heart; in "The Voice from the Minaret" she searched the soul of a wife whose heart rejected the bonds imposed by a wedding ring.

In her newest production she gives to the screen a de luxe interpretation of a great American play, a role of fire and passion, of revenge and love. Never has she been more superb.

Through the directorial genius of Frank Lloyd, who has directed all but one of Miss Talmadge's new series, the finish and artistry of the production has been made of the finest. Mr. Lloyd's keen understanding of character, his knowledge of dramatic force, together with Miss Talmadge's great art of interpreting the human heart, has made this what we consider one of First National's biggest productions, both in artistry and from the standpoint of the box-office.

Presented by Joseph M. Schenck; Adapted by Frances Marion from the stage play by Bayard Veiller; Photography by Antonio Gaudio and Norbert Brodin; Stills photographed by Shirley Vance Martin.

VENGEANCE OF THE DEEP

Harrison's says: The underwater scenes, revealing the wonders of the sea, are fascinating; so are the tropical views made on the spot. The descent of the divers into the sea is thrilling. It should give satisfaction.

Film Daily says: Has splendid underwater sequences and effective thrills. Should please many. This novelty will give you plenty to talk about and something to make promises for. A title that can be finely exploited.

The World says: You should please all the fans with this one. A constant effect of novelty. The attack of a shark on a diver and the closing of a giant clam are sensations. The picture is real and genuine. It was made under the sea and not in a tank.

Trade Review says: An unusual romance with colorful backgrounds. It would be unjust to class it as a South Sea island picture. The deep sea diving, undersea gardens, graceful natives riding surfboards are splendid. The picture gives the utmost thrills.

The News says: Put this picture down as thrilling. A crisp romantic melodrama sure to excite the interest of anyone in search of adventure. The story gets away from the beaten track and is sure to be well received.

The Telegraph says: Decidedly novel. When we see the man-eating shark swimming in the direction of the diver we fear that the screen is going to lose an actor. It is a wholly satisfying picture and should enjoy a real success.

"What a Wife Learned"

First National Presents Thomas H. Ince
Attraction of Great Appeal
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Thomas H. Ince has achieved in this a box-office attraction of unquestionable power. "What a Wife Learned" is a production with one who appreciates good drama. It has a stirring theme produced not only artistically but, with a commanding sense of showmanship values.

In considering its box-office worth, the names of the three principals should count substantially. John Bowers, Marguerite De La Motte and Milton Sills compose a love triangle built upon an absorbing situation. Their performance individually and as a unit is a strong attraction worthy of featuring.

With the exception of the remarkable flood scenes in the climax, the action is not melodramatic. The story of a woman whose band and herself is depicted with a realism that to many will be the picture's greatest appeal. Mr. Ince has handled his characters with fine skill. He has recognized the finer contrasts and has shown so marked an understanding of each one that the sympathy of the observer is never for a moment one-sided. Also there is an attention to detail and bits of humor that are charming.

John Bowers demonstrates his ability to a striking degree. He plays a Westerner with dominant primitive qualities, and still with an overpowering emotional sincerity that invests the character with great human appeal. He has several scenes of mental conflict that are exceptionally well done. In some of these Milton Sills is his antagonist, and both actors show a dramatic force that gets a splendid effect. Marguerite De La Motte is charming and unusually gifted. The settings are chosen with excellent taste. The breaking of the dam is a thrilling spectacle, splendidly photographed, and involving tremendous suspense in the survival of the two rivals who are caught in the current. This closes the film with highly dramatic effect.

Every Keaton Comedy is a Knockout!

Moving Picture World

"The Love Nest"

(First National—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this comedy sad-faced Buster Keaton is shown meeting with all sorts of ludicrous adventures on the high seas. It is one of the very finest of his recent pictures and should please audiences everywhere. It is chock full of humorous incidents and quite a large portion is in the nature of a burlesque of "virile sea stories." Buster's experiences aboard the whaling ship are screamingly funny as well as unusual and are executed with the many unique touches for which he is well known. Laughable also are his experiences aboard a deep-sea target which is being shelled by a squadron of warships. There is an excellent "climax," where it is shown that Buster's wonderful trip was all a dream and his motor boat has never been untied from the dock.—C. S. S.

Cincinnati Post

Buster Keaton is immense in "The Balloonatic." Here is a comedy artist who pulls more new gags than Chaplin. He certainly holds rank with Charley and Harold Lloyd themselves. There is a laugh a minute. All at the Capitol, where a pleasing musical program by Theodore Hahn Jr.'s Orchestra is not the least entertaining feature.

...what she is called do—look attractive. Buster Keaton is nothing short of superb in "The Frozen North." This comedy is a conglomerate satire of the screen dramas of the "great open spaces." Robert W. Service, the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, the William S. Hart and Eric von Stroheim types of villains—all of the Western and Northwestern stuff is here with a vengeance.

KEATON, TWO-GUN MAN.

Keaton plays the part of a two-gun bad man, holding up a barroom, bullying his wife and pursuing the mate of a neighbor. He first appears out of a subway kiosk in the centre of a great stretch of snowy table-land. When he sets out across the waste after his alluring prey he mounts a sled fashioned from the body of a Ford car. The camera is then "panned" forward to the dogs. These animals include tiny fox terriers, poodles, a dachshund—twelve or fifteen varieties without a single Eskimo dog. The sight of this variegated collection of pups dragging the sled is superlatively ludicrous. Keaton's struggle with the woman is a gem. She is taller and heavier than the villain, and in her efforts to protect her honor, she gives him a frightful pummeling. The New Leather Pushers also demands attention.

Candidates

WE are certainly happy over the line-up of candidates for the presidency of the national exhibitor organization. Whoever is chosen, the association seems certain to have an able and broad-minded leader.

We like the platform of W. A. Steffes as sturdily outlined by his campaign committee. He means business. And we like the business-like platform of J. C. Ritter of Michigan. Joseph Mogler of Missouri and F. J. McWilliams of Wisconsin, two other announced candidates, are outstanding types of successful exhibitors devoted to their own calling and to organization work.

Steffes and Ritter are responsible for two of the strongest state units in the country. They are builders, known by their deeds.

We have known Al Steffes since exhibitor organization began. And we subscribe to the following excellent and complete estimate of him just received in a letter: "Steffes has a very interesting personality and under an aggressive exterior he has a keen mind and marked ability. He has developed a great deal during the past three years and while he still has all his old fighting spirit he takes today a very constructive and common-sense view of exhibitor-distributor relations and other matters of vital interest to the business. He will prove an asset to the League and the industry at large."

J. C. Ritter is backed solidly and with remarkable enthusiasm by every film man in the state of Michigan and it is significant that ex-changemen are as loud in their praise of his character and ability as are exhibitors; and exhibitors from small towns are as keen for him as the big city showmen. He was a successful merchant in Detroit before he became an exhibitor and he brought with him to this field the sound principles and practices of an older retail business. He is a square dealer and demands a square deal in return. He believes in organization; Michigan is proof enough of that fact and that he has organization ability to an exceptional degree. We understand that C. A. Lick of Arkansas, Blair McElroy of Chicago and, maybe, some other state favorites may be nominated. The line forms to the right and a mighty sane and safe line-up it is.

It is all decidedly hopeful; indicative of the fact that men with business interests at stake are stepping forward with the solemn intention of getting under an organization office yoke to the end of protecting their own and the other fellow's investment.

Big problems loom up ahead this year. One alone—the admission tax—is heavy enough. And only business-like leadership of a business organization will successfully settle such vital matters as this.

There is no campaign mud-slinging this year. Organization, it is good to see, has passed beyond the more youthful stage of petty politics. It may be truly said that the office is seeking the man. A man can no longer get the office and stick it in his pocket. The post of leadership is not something to be selfishly acquired but rather to be unselfishly accepted. Whoever the man is he has a year's big work cut out for him.

And still another hopeful sign. To be elected President of the League today it is not necessary to indulge in trade anarchism, to hurl defiance at every other branch of the industry. Every business exhibitor today looks askance at the soap-box orator who would curry favor through these threadbare and despicable arguments. The exhibitor can fully protect himself—through organized effort—without demolishing those other branches upon which he is necessarily dependent. And every sensible man knows this.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

THE Motion Picture Arts Congress which is planned to be held in New York June 7th and 8th, should forever silence the critics of the silent drama who are ever declaring that Art cannot be expressed on the screen. A movement is on foot to corral all the leading European and American novelists, dramatists and artists who will formulate a set of principles for the artistic development of motion pictures.

It is the ambition of the sponsors to guide picture producers in discharging their obligations toward the cultural development of the millions of people all over the world who rely upon the screen for their principal recreation. One of the features of the congress will be the announcement by Adolph Zukor of a series of prizes amounting to several thousand dollars which he will offer "to those elements contributing most to the motion picture's artistic development during the year."

JOSEPH CONRAD, the greatest chronicler of sea stories that ever lived, has come to the United States for a brief visit. This gifted author who followed the sea for twenty years before he took up the task of writing (and it is a laborious task for him) is an example of that modesty which always characterizes men who are really superior. He frankly states that he is not a literary man—that he does little reading and could not be called a man of culture.

It is this humble modesty, this humility which stamps him as a superior figure. All the big ones are like that. Being such a master of words—being such a keen philosopher, it is difficult to translate his works into vivid action. His "Victory," however, was screened and it made a compelling photoplay. Hail to Joseph Conrad! His American friends and readers are legion.

SOL LESSER, vice-president of West Coast Theatres, Inc., one of the largest circuits of theatres in the United States, has left for Los Angeles after spending three weeks in New York. Mike Gore, president of the corporation, accompanied him.

HARRY SCOTT has been appointed manager of distribution by J. D. Williams for Ritz Carlton Pictures and it is one of those cases where congratulations are due all around. When an exchange manager is as well-liked by exhibitors as Harry Scott is—you never hear any but good words of him—and where he is also in demand by the distributors there isn't much more to be said about him as a good and efficient executive. He held down the job of exchange manager for First National in Detroit for four years—that's a long tenure of office in this business; and for the past six months he has been polishing off in the metropolis as New York exchange manager for Educational.

PAT ARGUST, manager of the Rialto theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo., has an ingenious turn of mind. His initiative has inspired him to work out a plan of Interstate Co-operation with the theatres in the territory from which the Colorado city draws most of its summer guests. Since it is essentially a tourist town the idea certainly looks feasible.

Mr. Argust writes to Stanley Chambers of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kansas, advising him that he is interested enough in the Palace patrons to see that they are served as courteously and graciously away from home as they are at home.

He submits a plan which includes a nicely made slide which can be run at the leisure of the manager during June and July, worded as follows: "We are just as interested in you when you are away from home as when you are at home. If you are going to Colorado Springs, Colorado, this summer, ask us for a Guest's Card. It will admit you as our guest to the Rialto theatre there, where you find the same high class pictures and service that you find at this theatre."

This is real co-operation and we venture the opinion that it will be adopted elsewhere.

WE are sorry to record the fact that Mrs. Mary Brandt, mother of Joe Brandt and Al Brandt (C. B. C.) passed away last Friday. Funeral services were held on Sunday, April 28th.

PRECEDED by a snappy introduction from Harry Reich-enbach, Police Commissioner Richard Enright of New York gave a masterful talk on "New York's Finest" before the A. M. P. A. last Thursday. At the conclusion of his address John Flinn proposed him for honorary membership in the A. M. P. A. Commissioner Enright appealed for help from motion pictures in solving New York's great transit problems.

THE other night during the A. M. P. A.'s Naked Truth Dinner at the Biltmore, George B. Gallup, the genial doctor of publicity and advertising for Hodkinson, registered keen disappointment, passing up course after course so that he might enjoy a filet mignon or a fried chicken a la Maryland—and they never appeared during the parade of the dishes. The clams served as an appetizer, and so did the celery and olives, but George B.'s palate was not tickled by the fish course, nor the salad, nor the jellied meat patty. Not until the ice-cream was served did he realize that he had missed his supper. Now we know why George B. writes such meaty publicity matter. He likes substantial food. The moral of this tale is: Never pass up anything at a banquet, but the speeches.

A STERLING tribute to A Rising Young Man Named Hearst has been paid by Carl Laemmle who says it is easy to see why the International news reel is far and away the best in the world—because of the Hearst Organization. The editor when he takes up anything sees it through to a finish. One item in the article is especially important in emphasizing Mr. Hearst's stick-to-itiveness. We quote Mr. Laemmle: "Some of his publishing efforts were raw at first. Some of them lost fortunes. But he never quit organizing. He gathered the best brains and the best talent from the four corners of the earth and he organized, organized, organized them into highly efficient working units."

William Randolph Hearst is truly an organizer. No one can disagree with Mr. Laemmle on that point. His newspapers had hard sledding at first but he stuck to his guns until he had them in a very prosperous condition. It is inevitable that his picture activities will soar because of his close application to make Cosmopolitan productions successful as well as his genius for organization. Mr. Hearst is in pictures to put them over. There is no question that he will be richly rewarded.

WELL, well if those elusive Russian crown jewels haven't bobbed up again! Part of them have been loaned to Jackie Coogan and the boy wonder will wear the Czarevitch's ring in his forthcoming expression, "Long Live the King." If you would doubt the authenticity of these baubles write young John's press agent who will send you duplicates of consular letters from the late emperor's representatives in London and Paris.

RUTH ROLAND, the Pathe serial star, arrived in New York the other day by steamer from New Orleans. Like Madge Bellamy, she is here in the interests of the Los Angeles celebration.

THE A. M. P. A.'s annual dinner and entertainment, the Naked Truth, went off in tip top shape. The members and guests assembled early and waxed enthusiastic over the fine turn-out. The Biltmore grand ballroom was packed to capacity and among those who indulged in some royal hand-shaking and found delight in being there were Bill Yearsley, Pat Parsons, John Lynch, Joe Dannenberg, John Flinn, Harry Reichenbach, who acted as master of ceremonies, E. Lloyd Sheldon, Julian Johnson, Allan Dwan, Tom Meighan, Antonio Moreno, Sidney Olcott, Maurice Costello, Bob Welsh, William A. Johnston, Forest Halsey, Henry Hobart, Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, Ernest Shipman, Billy Brandt, John D. Williams, Elmer Pearson, Irving Lesser, John Spargo, Clem Deneker, Charles McCarthy, Al Lichtman, Paul Lazarus, Vivian Moses, Charles E. Moyer, Jim Loughborough, Victor Shapiro, Irving Greene, John F. Chalmers and divers and sundry others.

The boys put on a rattling good entertainment which ranged all the way from a novel take-off of the Twelve Immortals which featured the Christmas issue of the NEWS, to an amusing film burlesque of the boys gathering for the big affair. Toastmaster and general announcer, Reichenbach, was in good form and delivered some nifty wise cracks which did not spare Lichtman's publicity men, Marcus Loew, Dannenberg and several others. He engaged in repartee with a huge idol and the show was on.

The acts included "The Land of Haze," satirizing Will Hays through words and music, a monologue by Clem Deneker, an amusing take-off of a star's personal appearance by Charles Einfeld, a two-in-one act featuring Toot and Kin-nem with Messrs Crooker and Shapiro, a burlesque and a film Potash and Perlmutter partnership, a couple of professional acts and a climax which presented a bit of tomfoolery at the expense of "The Covered Wagon." The members of the A. M. P. A. worked good and hard to give their guests a treat. Those who participated in furnishing the entertainment have the congratulations of the NEWS.

IT'S no mean cast that James Cruze has assembled for his next one, "Hollywood." The director will appear as an actor after a long retirement, and the others include Tom Meighan, Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Betty Compson, Leatrice Joy, Walter Hiers, Lila Lee, Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett, Nita Naldi, Warren Kerrigan, Elliot Dexter, Charles Ogle, Lois Wilson, Mary Astor, Hope Hampton, Will Rogers, Gertrude Astor, Laurence Wheat, Ben Turpin, Kalla Pasha and Jim Finlayson. Boy, page the other lots!

MARY and Doug have been invited to help dedicate the new Reserve Officers' Flying Field at Santa Monica, Cal. The invitation came from the clouds and was tucked away inside a bomb which was dropped by an "Ace" as he flew over the P.-F. studios.

THOMAS BEDDING, who has done considerable continuity and originals for the screen, writes us from Philadelphia, and serves us a terrific indictment of the screen.

Mr. Bedding would damn the the entire industry because the artistic sponsors, who are always in the minority in any form of art expression, are not permitted to display their gifts. He has evidently forgotten the slogan of that keen showman, George M. Cohan who once remarked: "Give the public what it wants!"

The motion picture industry is too colossal to indict. He should remember that commerce rules the world whether it applies to business or art. He should remember, too, that when Art has expressed itself through such media as "The Birth of a Nation," "The Four Horsemen," "The Covered Wagon," "Robin Hood," "The Miracle Man," to mention a few, the public has enthusiastically received them.

Kipling in a moment of frenzied hate during the war came out on record "that the entire German nation should be exterminated as a menace to society." You can't get rid of a vast population with hateful gestures. As far as the screen is concerned there are not enough Tarkingtons, Ades, Griffiths, Belascos, Ingrams, Hopkins, and other artists to supply the demand.

For every Rolls-Royce, Locomobile, Pierce-Arrow and Packard that is sold there are thousands of Fords which can only be bought by the common "peepul." It is the common "peepul" who make the cheap fiction magazine popular. It is the common "peepul" who patronize the screen. The men who control it are trying to serve them with the pictures they want.

It is fine to have ideals, but self-preservation comes first. And all of us are on earth to buy shoes for ourselves and the babies. And we send our wives or sweethearts to the pictures. And they seem to enjoy them. Patrons go to pictures to enjoy an evening or waste an evening. There are very few who can tell a Rembrandt from an imitation; there are very few who can differentiate Art from that which is often substituted for it.

FIRST NATIONAL is giving a luncheon at the Ritz-Carlton, this Friday, in honor of George Fitzmaurice, Montague Glass and Clarence Badger. Mr. Fitzmaurice is leaving for Italy to make exterior scenes for one of Hall Caine's stories. Mr. Badger is about to start producing "Potash and Perlmutter."

NEW YORK'S loss is to be Los Angeles' gain. Which means that R. H. Burnside, for many years in charge of staging the mammoth spectacle at the New York Hippodrome, has gone to the West Coast for his preliminary work in connection with the staging of the American Historical Revue at the Motion Picture Exposition, from July 2d to August 4th, on the hundredth anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine. Charles H. Christie, chairman of the executive committee of the M. P. P. A., arrived in New York last week and promptly closed with Mr. Burnside. A luncheon was given on Friday of last week at the Biltmore, attended by trade and newspaper representatives, at which short talks were made by Mr. Christie, Mr. Burnside, Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the T. O. C. C., Ruth Roland, and others.

Ritter Supporters Promise Action

Strong Delegation Will Support Michigan Candidate at Chicago Convention

THE Michigan delegation for Chicago are intent on seeing that every exhibitor in the country knows about James C. Ritter, of Detroit, Michigan's candidate for National president.

Reservations have been made for an entire floor at the Hotel Sherman, and Michigan will establish an office and temporary headquarters there during the convention. Indications are that about one hundred exhibitors and their wives will be present. Last year Michigan sent forty-five to Washington, even though the distance from Detroit was great.

In addition, the Michigan delegation will leave Detroit on two special cars over the Michigan Central Railroad.

That Michigan intends backing its candidate to the limit is best explained through the action taken at the last meeting of the board of directors, at which time it was decided to organize a Ritter for President Club and hold a mass meeting on May 2 to lay plans to insure the election of their candidate at Chicago.

Backed by a record for accomplishment second to none and with the actual knowledge gained through successful experience in his own state, the universal opinion in Michigan is that Mr. Ritter has done it there and can do it nationally if given a functioning board of directors and adequate financial support.

This will be the first year that Michigan has taken an active part in a national convention, and its activity has been brought about this year by the realization that the convention at Chicago is going to be of vital importance. That same reason, the vital need of efficient national organization, prompted the Michigan organization to insist that Mr. Ritter be a candidate, although to him it will mean a great personal and financial sacrifice.

Mr. Ritter has made it plain, however, that unless the exhibitors at Chicago make some move to provide more finances than were gathered into the national fold last year it would be impossible for him or anyone else to put over what is waiting for the exhibitors of the country to accomplish.

Court Holds Knickerbocker Site Sale Legal

CHIEF JUSTICE McCOY of the District Supreme Court on Thursday last, sustained the motion of the Knickerbocker Theatre Company to dismiss suits of William J. Forsyth and other legal representatives of the victims, requesting the setting aside of the sale of the Knickerbocker site to Harry M. Crandall.

This theatre property was sold at auction in April of last year to Mr. Crandall for the sum of $177,500. Plaintiffs aver that they are creditors and therefore such sale is in derogation of their rights. The court, however, held that they must first secure judgments against the company before they can acquire a standing in equity. Attorney Wilton J. Lambert appeared as Crandall counsel for company.

Plaintiffs are given twenty days to amend their bill. This represents a partial gain for the Crandall interests, in the long series of titles; the legal aftermath of the disaster.

Some of the high spots in Mr. Ritter's complete platform are:

"Let's make a membership to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America an asset and not a liability.

"We are confident that it is possible to return in cash to the exhibitors of this country fully twice the amount they will have to pay to support the organization. We have done that very thing in Michigan.

"Michigan's candidate isn't criticising what has or has not been done, but making a sincere effort to institute a plan through which more can be accomplished.

"Organization can be made to pay its members in dollars and cents.

"What's organization business is everyone's business. Let's not have any star chamber sessions.

"If confidence is established then finances will come, for the two go hand in hand."

U. S. Decision Made on Reissued Films

The Federal Trade Commission has rendered a decision in the case of the American Film Company, Chicago, related to reissued pictures under new titles, when a reissued motion picture is advertised for exhibition under a name other than originally used, the advertising matter must clearly indicate both the new and old name in equally prominent type.

The Commission investigation disclosed contracts by respondent with a number of exhibitors of such reissued and re-titled films the new names being different from those under which they were formerly exploited. Advertising "paper" to herald such pictures carried the name in large type, the old name in small letters being prefixed by "adapted from" or "formerly" with the inconspicuous original title. Further, no mention of reissued product was covered in contracts or by respondents agent verbally, it is said.

Such methods of the American Film Company were declared unfair to competitors and deceived both exhibitors who were thus served with reissues and the public who were misled into the belief that such pictures were first run pictures.

Syria Consul Reports U.S Pictures Popular

Vice-Consul I. Loder Park at Beirut, Syria, reports that Constantinople has about 30 poorly appointed motion picture theatres, seating from 300 to 1,200 patrons each. Admissions range from 15 to 50 cents. American pictures are popular, dominating the field in fact, but are chiefly copies, re-captioned in French for the local public, and secured for the most part from London and Paris distributors.

Public interest seems satisfied with these reprints, although new films might do very well, if introduced consistently. Mr. Loder thinks there is promise of considerable business in the Asia Minor field, the Greek Islands, Palestine, Smyrna, and Syria. Over 50 per cent. of all films shown in Syria are American production, obtained from agents in Constantinople, Alexandria, or Paris. They are principally second-hand films imported on a rental basis.

M.P.T.O. Kansas Starts on Membership Drive

With $5,000 in the treasury of the M. P. T. O. Kansas, subscribed at the recent convention, C. E. Cook, business manager of the organization, will leave next week for a tour over the state on a drive for 100 more members within the next ninety days. Following the national convention at Chicago, Mr. Cook, who will attend the Chicago meeting, will return direct to the Kansas territory and begin where he leaves off in the membership drive.

The fixed price of $53 for membership in the Kansas body has been done away with. In the future the membership fee will be fixed by the exhibitor himself, payable in one or more assessments. Theatre insurance is another project of the larger type to be taken up by the Kansas association in the near future. The organization will co-operate with some insurance company in writing up insurance for exhibitors of the state.

Death Halts Plans For Vignola Reception

Fifty friends of Robert G. Vignola were guests of Marion Davies aboard William Randolph Hearst's steam yacht, Oneida, which went to Quarantine station, New York Harbor, last Friday to welcome the director returning on the Aquitania from a five months' tour of the world. Arrangements had been made to take Mr. Vignola off at Quarantine, tender him a luncheon on the yacht and bring him into New York, but the plans could not be carried through when it was learned at the last moment that Mr. Vignola's father had died just before embarking on the ship and that the director and his sister who accompanied him were in mourning.

Darkened Theatre Liability Up For Decision

Whether or not the darkening of a theatre during a performance places liability on the owners for injury to a patron will be the point at issue in a few weeks in a suit filed by Mrs. Anna Homeyer, 74 years old, against the Park-Presidio Theatre Company, San Francisco, for $7,000 damages.

Mrs. Homeyer alleges she stumbled and injured herself while walking down the aisle of the Coliseum Theatre while a picture was being shown.

Prominent Film Men Favor Shorter Features

Stand of Motion Picture News for Fewer Long Pictures Receives Many Endorsements

THE editorial in the April 21st issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS on long features, followed by another editorial, "Overdoing the Special," in the issue of April 28th, which were the opening broadsides in a campaign for more short features by the NEWS, have brought an immediate response from film men throughout the country.

Opinions seem to be divided as to just where the responsibility lies, but there is a strong sentiment in evidence for fewer features in seven, eight and nine reels.

J. D. Williams, formerly of First National, now President and General Manager of Ritz-Carlton Pictures, Inc., says:

"Your editorial in the April 21st issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, treating on the length of features, was of great interest to me, and without doubt should be equally interesting to the entire trade.

"Having just returned from a tour of the Middle West and the Eastern sections of the country, I find the general sentiment among the exhibitors is 100% in favor of shorter features, with the exception, of course, of such big features as 'Robin Hood,' 'The Covered Wagon,' and a few others, for they fully realize that in these instances, the pictures are real outstanding features.

"There perhaps will not be more than forty real, outstanding box-office attractions produced this coming season by all the various producing companies. The exhibitors will necessarily have to have hundreds of features in order to keep their theatres open, and they will have to have the opportunity of supporting their programs with short reel comedies, scenics and weeklies, in order to give their patrons diversified entertainment, so that in case they do not happen to like the feature itself, the balance of the program pleases and they leave the theatre satisfied.

"As a result of having talked with the different exhibitors, it is my firm belief that unless the producers shorten the length of their features, they will drive millions away from the Picture theatre. On account of the seriousness of this matter, something should be done regarding it. I note that nearly every Trade Journal in the business has printed editorials on this subject, yet I cannot see that anything has so far been accomplished that will bring about the much needed remedy.

"Why don't you feel out the sentiments of the bigger exhibitors in the country, ascertaining from them just what they want, and then submitting their opinions to the producers, with the idea of showing the latter how really serious this matter is? The trade is greatly indebted to you for giving this matter so much publicity, and I want to assure you that if there is anything at all that I can do to help you along these lines, please do not hesitate to call on me, as I will be more than glad to be of whatever assistance I can."

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the New York Mark Strand theatre, has this to say:

"I can not impress upon you too strongly the urgent need of shorter feature pictures. Our audiences are continually complaining of the extreme length of all our features. This is not merely a personal opinion but has been strongly borne out by the result of a canvas we held amongst our patrons.

"When we do get a picture that is a real

New Companies Are Joining Hays Organization

NEW members are continually joining the organization headed by Will Hays. Among the latest concerns who have been added to the list are the following: Bray Productions, Inc., J. R. Bray; Christie Film Co., Inc.; Principal Pictures Corp., Sol Lesser; Distinctive Pictures Corp., Arthur S. Friend.

draw, it is generally so long that an exhibitor does not do the business with it that he should.

"The extreme length of feature pictures have cut down our programs to such an extent that the public is beginning to complain that our shows are lacking in variety. Audiences today insist upon short features and a diversified bill of entertainment and unless it is given to them it is going to hurt business considerably.

"I hope producers will realize this as soon as possible, as it surely would be a great relief to the exhibitors throughout the country to get pictures that run from an hour to an hour and ten minutes.

"Your efforts are in the right direction and will be of great help to every exhibitor throughout the country.

"You are to be congratulated for your efforts in behalf of shorter features and I hope that you will bring this message home to the producers."

That the same holds true in smaller cities is shown by this communication from L. J. Jacobs, manager of the Delft and Strand theatres, Escanaba, Mich.:

"Won't you kindly use the influence of your publication in such a way, as to impress upon the producer the hardships that are being worked upon the exhibitor, by excess length of pictures.

"Present-day picture lengths are going to do one of two things: either compel the exhibitor to one show a night, or compel him to eliminate fillers, and this last mentioned is going to hurt the business, as I find my patrons do not care to watch nothing but a feature, and on the other hand, I don't consider it good business.

"Many of these seven, eight and nine thousand-foot attractions could be cut to six, and greatly improved in so doing."

Willard Fait, Jr., manager of the Eastman theatre, Rochester, N. Y., expresses the following opinion:

"Please accept the thanks of one suffering exhibitor for your editorial of April 21, especially that part which refers to over-long feature productions.

"It has gotten so that it is absolutely impossible to play a two-reel subject of any nature on the present feature program.

"Salesmen claim that they can not sell features unless they are in seven, eight or nine reels. Evidently the industry needs new salesmen.

"However, we do not feel that this is the trouble. We feel that the present over-length of pictures is the exaggerated ego of the directors rather than the fault of the sales organizations.

"The situation has become so serious that

I personally have contemplated trying to form an organization of fifty or sixty first-run exhibitors in this country, binding ourselves to refuse to look at productions of over a certain length. I fully realize that this is radical and we would probably miss the opportunity of playing some good pictures, but considering all that has been said on the subject and the little action that is being taken by the producers to remedy the trouble, some drastic action is necessary.

"There is also a danger in the present policy of some producers to remake pictures that were popular six, seven or eight years ago. There are some pictures, I admit, that do justify it. However, I believe that they are the exception rather than the rule."

Albany F. I. L. M. Club Is Reorganized

After a period of several months' inactivity the Albany F. I. L. M. Club has reorganized and is again functioning with every exchange in Albany represented. At a meeting held last week, C. R. Halligan, manager of the Universal exchange in Albany, was re-elected president of the club, the other officers being vice-president, Frank Bruner, manager of the Pathe exchange; treasurer, Grover S. Woodard, manager of the Fox, and secretary, Miss Marie Wheeler, local manager for Merit, who was re-elected. The club was organized about five years ago, Mr. Halligan having the distinction of having served as president during the entire time, with the exception of one year when Bert Moran, now manager of the Pathe branch in Pittsburgh, was the head.

The club will meet each Monday from now on, at the Pathe exchange. It is hoped, however, that eventually the club will occupy quarters of its own. One of the first matters which will receive consideration, will be the return of mutilated film by exhibitors. This has become more and more aggravating to the exchanges in Albany, and there is a possibility that a plan in vogue in Washington and Atlanta, will be followed out in the territory served by the Albany exchanges. This calls for the hiring of an expert from the operators' union, who would travel over the territory and personally inspect all projection machines.

Cleveland Exhibs Not Likely to Attend Convention

It looks as if Cleveland's exhibitors will not be officially represented at the coming national exhibitors' convention to be held in Chicago as the local unit of motion picture theatre-owners is not affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. President Sydney Cohen of the M. P. T. O. of A. extended an invitation to the Cleveland exhibitors to be present at the national gathering, and the executive committee of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in their response signified their readiness to send a delegation provided that the Cleveland delegates would be permitted to sit in at the business meetings. As only members of the M. P. T. O. of A. are eligible to take part in such meetings according to the rules of the national convention, the attendance of a Cleveland delegation is considered unlikely.

Steffes Campaign Committee Busy Propaganda Shows Hot Fight Will Be Waged For Candidates at Chicago Convention

THE W. A. Steffes campaign committee is going to make a hot fight for its candidate at the coming Chicago convention of the M. P. T. O. A. This is evidenced by its continued activity. This committee is composed of the following: H. H. Sryer, chairman; Joe Friedman, D. W. Chamberlain, Theo. L. Hays and L. Rubenstein.

From their headquarters the following has been sent out: "ON TO CHICAGO!"

This is the by-word of every independent exhibitor in America. The coming national convention (May 19th to 25th) will be the most momentous in the history of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"Big things, issues that mean much to the independent motion picture theatre owner will be discussed and much constructive work should and must be accomplished.

"Sydney S. Cohen, who has served as the chief executive of the national organization, faithfully and well, with many personal sacrifices during the past three years, has definitely announced his intention to retire.

"The election of his successor is of great importance, as the character, ability and forcefulness of the man selected will necessarily measure the possibilities of accomplishment. Adequate financing, more intensive application of exhibitor force under correlated effort will bespeak greater accomplishment, the solving and correction of the big problems and evils of the industry.

"Reconciliation should be made of all existing differences within the industry so as to present a solid front, nation-wide in spirit, influence and desire for achievement.

"Minnesota, second to no state, in organization spirit and progressive accomplishment, offers as a candidate the favorite son of exhibitor organization in the northwest in the person of W. A. Steffes.

"Fighting Al Steffes, pioneer among those who have fought for state organization and national correlation, whose record for accomplishment, for loyalty is unquestioned and unparalleled. This man has repeatedly thrown down the gauntlet to opposing forces, no matter who or what they might be, to serve the interest and defend the investments of the small exhibitor.

"For three years a member of the board of directors and during all that time, prominent in every activity and development of the national body, Mr. Steffes is qualified admirably to assume and intelligently and capably perform the duties involved, with the responsibility of the chief executive of exhibitor national organization.

"We of Minnesota believe that in Mr. W. A. Steffes is represented the personality, the intelligence, the experience, the courage, the judgment and forcefulness to guide the ship of national organization safely during the coming year, with the assurance of application, energy and initiative that will mark an era in national organization achievement.

"We invite and solicit the support and cooperation of all those who desire to see our national organization fostered and developed into a concrete body of material strength and of constructive benefit to the exhibiting body of this country and to the industry as a whole."

Crandall Forms Ball League Among Neighborhood Boys

Harry M. Crandall, owner of the Crandall theatres in Washington, D. C., and vicinity, has taken another forward step in promoting direct contact with his public by the organization of the Crandall Baseball League, comprised of teams representing Crandall's Savoy, Avenue Grand, York and Apollo theatres, located in four widely remote residential sections of the national capital.

The teams representing the four houses are recruited from lads living in the immediate neighborhood of each theatre. The maximum age limit has been set at sixteen years. Each team has been fully uniformed and equipped by Mr. Crandall. Each house has been assessed $125 to be divided into cash prizes to the winner and runner-up of the first sixty-game series and to the player having the best individual averages in each position. The grand prize for the league pennant winner will be $250; second prize, $100, the balance of the $500 purse to be split up into the individual awards.

The games are played at the Union Station Plaza diamond and usually attract a large crowd. The Crandall League's season extends practically through the entire summer with a regular schedule of two games a week.

Exhibitors Cash Supports Michigan M.P.T.O.

The Michigan M. P. T. O. have taken some exception to statements made to the effect that it was easy for Michigan to get money and that the organization was supported by advertising tie-ups, etc. According to H. M. Richey, general manager, the association is being supported by exhibitors in cash because of the fact that it has brought itself through its insurance service to exhibitors, and its varied accomplishments to prove its real value to members. Moneys that are being raised through advertising tie-ups are being laid aside for a reserve fund. There are about 400 theatre owners supporting the organization with cash.

Court Hears Arguments on Censorship

THE COURT OF APPEALS, of New York State, at Albany, has again heard arguments on the constitutionality of the law in so far as the New York State Motion Picture Commission's right to censor news reels is concerned. The appeal was taken by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., from a fairly recent decision of the Appellate Division, which upheld the law. Attorney Frederick R. Coudert appeared for Pathe, while Attorney Arthur E. Rose represented the Motion Picture Commission.

Admission Tax Returns for March Shows Increase

In a report covering the month of March of the present year made public by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a total of $6,700,335 was shown to have been collected from the tax on admissions during the month. As the figures for the month of February, 1923, aggregated $5,284,528, the return for March shows an increase of $823,000. The special tax derived from museums, theatres, circuses and similar enterprises reached the sum of $15,926, while special taxes for February collected from the same sources amounted to $19,835. The total receipts collected from all sources amounted to $377,947,233.

In the following table are shown the totals for the months from September, 1922, to March, 1923, as compared with the figures for the corresponding months during 1921 and 1922:

September	$4,789,391	$6,123,082
October	5,396,461	6,415,680
November	5,484,790	6,995,338

N. Y. Exhibitors' State Convention Postponed

The New York exhibitors' state convention, which had been planned for May 8, 9, and 10, has been postponed. This action was taken because of the fact that present legislative activities in Albany will keep exhibitor leaders busy up until about May 4. The national convention, set for May 19-26 in Chicago, will subsequently engage considerable attention, so it has been decided to put off the state convention until some time after the Chicago gathering.

This Week to Decide Fate of N. Y. Censorship

THIS week at Albany will decide the fate of motion picture censorship in New York state. The legislature will adjourn next Friday. Whether or not the bill calling for the repeal of the present law will go to a vote in the assembly is a question which the days to come must decide. There was a report last week that the bill might go to a vote in the assembly almost any moment, following the injection of George Eastman, of Rochester and William L. Ward, of Westchester, into the situation, and the possibility of nine Republican votes being cast with the Democrats in calling for the repeal of the present law.

The days passed, however, without any outward action being taken in the matter. There are two conflicting reports current at the State Capitol. One of these is to the effect that the bill will never be reported out of committee in the assembly before adjournment, while another is that the bill will be reported out and go to a vote some time during the closing hours.

Commission Charges Eastman Film Monopoly

U. S. Complaint Alleges Conspiracy in Restraint of Competition

THE Federal Trade Commission has issued a formal complaint against Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y.; George Eastman, president of the Eastman Kodak Company; Jules E. Brulatour, a distributor of films, New York City; the Allied Laboratories Association, Inc., New York City, and the following members of the association: The Burton Holmes Lectures, Inc., Chicago; The Craftsmen Film Laboratory, Inc., New York City; Kinetograph Company of America, Inc., New York City; Cromlow Film Laboratories, Inc., New York City; Palisades Film Laboratories, Inc., Palisades, N. J.; Claremont Film Laboratory, Inc., New York City; Film Developing Corporation, New York City; Evans Film Manufacturing Company, Inc., New York City; Republic Laboratories, Inc., New York City; Lyman H. Howe Film Company, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Rex Laboratory, Inc., Cliffside, N. J.; Tremont Film Laboratories, Inc., New York City; Mark Dintenfass, Hudson Heights, N. J., and the Erbograp Company, New York City. Thirty days are allowed for the filing of an answer to the complaint; thereafter the case will come on for trial.

The complaint contains averment of a conspiracy among these respondents, as result of which it is charged the Eastman Company has acquired a virtual monopoly in the manufacture and sale of cinematograph film in the United States; that competition in the manufacture and sale of prints of motion picture film has been hindered and in some instances eliminated, and that the prices of positive prints sold to producers of motion pictures throughout the United States has been fixed and standardized.

Eastman Kodak Company, the complaint states, is the largest manufacturer of cinematograph film in the world, and up to March, 1920, manufactured and sold approximately 94 per cent. of all the cinematograph film used in the United States and manufactured and sold approximately 96 per cent. of all the cinematograph film produced in the United States. Between March, 1920, and September, 1921, due to competition by American importers of cinematograph film manufactured in foreign countries, the sales by the Eastman Company decreased to approximately 81 per cent. of the total sales in the United States.

Allied Laboratories Association, Inc., the complaint states, is a non-trading corporation, organized under the laws of New York, its membership being limited to persons, firms or corporations engaged in manufacturing and selling "prints" of motion pictures.

Details of the practices challenged in the complaint which form the basis of the commission's charge that the respondents are using unfair methods of competition, in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, may be summarized as follows:

It is charged that the Eastman Company and its president, George Eastman, during 1919 induced the respondent Jules E. Brulatour to construct two manufacturing laboratories for manufacturing positive prints, one known as the G. M. Laboratories, Long Island City, and the other known as the San-Jacq Laboratories, at Ft. Lee, N. J. These two

Report of Triangle Shows Prosperity

THE TRIANGLE FILM CORPORATION has issued the following statement:

"Since issuing our statement as of March 31, 1923, a number of our stockholders have requested some details relative to what has been accomplished by the present executives since coming into office early in 1918, at which time there was an indebtedness of $2,680,000.

"As a result of the operation since January of 1918 all of the indebtedness has been paid and all of the securities released from pledge. Federal tax assessments in excess of $150,000 and applicable to the period prior to 1918 have also been paid.

"January of 1919 Triangle started re-issuing in their original form some of the old pictures, and has continued this plan up to the present time. During this period (January, 1919 to March, 1923), Triangle has received from these re-issues approximately $1,000,000.

"With the exception of the possible liabilities indicated in the footnote in our statement of March 31st, the Triangle Film Corporation has no current liabilities. In addition to this the stock liability of the corporation has been reduced by approximately 257,540 shares."

laboratories, together with a third laboratory known as Paragon, Inc., Ft. Lee, N. J., were then operated by respondent Brulatour at the direction of the Eastman Company as separate and distinct enterprises, without disclosing their true ownership. In the operation of these laboratories respondent Brulatour, it is charged, supplied to various producers of motion pictures positive prints at prices far below those at which competitive manufacturing laboratories could supply such prints.

In supplying competitors of the Eastman Company with cinematograph film, it is charged that the Eastman Company caused the respondent Brulatour to delay deliveries of film, and in some instances to shut off the supply of these competing manufacturing laboratories. It is also charged that the Eastman Company caused respondent Brulatour to discriminate as between those laboratories who confined their purchases to the Eastman Company and those laboratories which purchase film of other manufacturers. This was done by extending to the customers of the Eastman Company long terms of credit, which was denied to the others. The purpose, it is alleged, was to coerce the various competing laboratories not controlled by the respondents into confining their purchases to cinematograph film manufactured by Eastman.

Subsequently, in 1921, it is charged the Eastman Company caused the three laboratories mentioned above to be transferred and assigned to the Eastman Company, and immediately thereafter publicly announced to the trade the purchase of these laboratories, which it already owned, and that it intended to operate same. This was done, it is alleged, for the purpose of coercing competing manufacturing laboratories to refrain from making further purchases of cinematograph film manufactured by others than the Eastman Company.

The threat by Eastman to operate the three manufacturing laboratories above named, it is charged, induced and coerced the respondent Allied Laboratories Association, Inc., and its members to join with Eastman and Brulatour in the conspiracy, with the result that in September, 1921, an agreement was reached whereby the Eastman Company agreed to close the three manufacturing laboratories in consideration of which the association members agreed to confine their purchases of cinematograph film to film manufactured in the United States, and to refuse to purchase any cinematograph film from American importers of foreign made film. It was understood, the complaint recites, that the Eastman Company would keep its three manufacturing laboratories in working order and would re-open and operate such laboratories in competition with the Association members should any of the members again purchase or use in their plants cinematograph films imported from foreign countries.

By reason of this agreement, the complaint states, the Association and its members have confined their purchases of cinematograph film to film manufactured by the Eastman Company and have exploited the fact that no other film is used in their laboratories. A further charge is made that various members of the Association have falsely announced to the trade from time to time that cinematograph film produced by competitors of the Eastman Company could not be used to good advantage. The further statement is made in the complaint that members of the Association have consistently sought to coerce outside manufacturing laboratories to become members of the Association and to agree to purchase cinematograph film from the Eastman Company and to refuse to purchase from the Eastman Company's competitors.

Though its vice-president, James S. Havens, the Eastman Kodak Company issued a brief statement answering the charges filed against the company. In it he said that his company was desirous of lending every cooperation to the Trade Commission and of its readiness to comply with any directions issued in the matter.

Mrs. Wallace Reid to Attend Anti-Drug Parley

A coast dispatch advises that Mrs. Dorothy Davenport Reid, accompanied by Adele Rogers St. Johns, left Los Angeles on Saturday, April 28, for Washington, D. C., to attend the International Anti-Narcotic Conference, which will be held in the national capital from May 2 to May 4. The last scenes for Mrs. Reid's picturization of her anti-drug subject were completed prior to her departure. As announced elsewhere, this picture, entitled "Human Wreckage," has been acquired by F. B. O. for distribution.

Harmony Marks Virginia Convention

Eugene T. Crall of Newport News Named as New President of Organization

DEPARTING from their usual custom of meeting within the state, the Virginia exhibitors, held their 1923 convention at the Arlington hotel, Washington, D. C., April 23. Billed to be a two-day affair, it was over in a few hours. In an unusually harmonious assembly, Eugene T. Crall of Newport News, Va., was elected president. Mr. Crall succeeds Jake Wells of Richmond. E. D. Heins of Roanoke, was elected Vice-President and Harry Bernstein of Richmond was re-elected Secretary-Treasurer. The following were chosen for the Executive Committee: J. Weinberg, Lexington, Va.; John Pryor, of Danville; and Jake Wells of Richmond.

The selection of Mr. Crall as president of the organization is a tribute to the successful execution of his duties as chairman of the committee on arrangements for the convention, and is taken as presaging a more vigorous stand on vital issues.

Among the nearly thirty Virginian amusement purveyors registered at the Arlington or noted in the convention roster, were: F. W. Twyman, Charlottesville; Ben Pitts, of Fredericksburg; J. L. Frey, Culpepper; E. B. Ross, Leesburg; E. D. Heins, Roanoke; J. Hamilton, Martinsville; S. P. Levine, Norfolk and Newport News; H. Rubin, Petersburg; C. M. Casey, Lynchburg; W. E. Harris, Petersburg (theaters Petersburg and Hopewell); his manager, Hopewell; Jake Wells, Richmond; Jack Reville, Richmond; H. Carry Nichols, Petersburg and Portsmouth; Hy Weinberg, Lexington; John Pryor, Danville; S. M. Sack, Clifton Forge; H. W. Robertson, Covington; M. E. Harsen, Norfolk; and William Gorden, of Newport News.

The thanks of the convention were extended to local managers for proffered entertainment that could not be availed of and also to E. A. Sherwood, manager of Harry Crandall's Exhibitors Film Service, for the services of his secretary as recording secretary of the convention.

In his retiring address Mr. Wells spoke of the need for re-organization and refinancing of the Virginia M. P. T. O. A., and of the necessity of applying the quietus to the prohibitory sheet-music tax collected by the music publishers. He mentioned the numerous legislative skirmishes in counties, towns, cities and at Richmond to protect the industry from unfair competition and restrictive legislation. The censors at Richmond were praised for their co-operation and fairness as well as their liberal interpretation of their power. Carnivals had been kept from injuring the exhibitors through the action of the organization in community and state.

It is understood $2,500 is in the treasury as the result of voluntary contributions from the State's theatre owners. Members desiring to visit the National M. P. T. O. A. at Chicago will be given credentials as delegates provided that they finance themselves.

N. Y. Child Admission Bill Passes Senate

Following a discussion in which both Senator Walker, majority leader, and Clayton R. Lusk, Republican minority leader, spoke in favor of the measure, the Antin bill, relating to the admission of children to motion picture theatres in New York City, has passed the Senate. The vote was 36 to 13. The bill now goes to the Assembly, and while it is rumored that it will meet with some opposition in the lower house it is expected that it will be reported out of rules committee and come up for vote before the close of the session.

The bill would permit the admission of children to motion picture theatres in New York City, between the ages of eight and sixteen years, up until 6 P. M. It provides, however, that they must be in charge of a matron and placed in a section convenient to a fire escape, as well as certain other conditions. The bill, if passed, would take effect immediately.

Music Suits Filed Against Virginia Theatres

A DISPATCH from Lynchburg, Va., in Monday night's Washington Star caused considerable exhibitor interest, as the Virginia Exhibitors were in session here, at the time the report was filed. Eight suits were filed in the Federal District court there the preceding Saturday, by New York music publishers or copyright owners against as many Virginia theatres, alleged to have made improper use of copyright music early this year. Damages were asked for in each bill, the minimum demand being for $250. The suits were:

M. Whitmark & Sons, New York vs. C. K. Becroft of the Wytheville Opera House of that town, for the song "Tripoli"; J. H. Remick & Co. vs. J. D. Amos, Norton, Va., song "Tomorrow"; Waterson, Berlin & Snyder Co., N. Y. C. vs. J. W. Hamilton, Hamilton Theatre, Martinsville, song, "You Gave Me Your Heart"; Jerome H. Remick & Co., N. Y. C., vs. National Theatre Corporation, Roanoke, song, "Ain't We Got Fun"; J. H. Remick vs. J. O. Stephenson, Marion theatre, "Caroline in the Air"; Leo Feist, Inc., of N. Y. C., vs. J. R. Taylor of the Grand theatre, Appalachia, song, "Peggy O'Neill"; Waterson, Berlin & Snyder vs. J. R. Taylor, Amuzu theatre, Big Stone Cap, song, "For Me and My Gal"; Leo Feist, Inc., vs. National theatre, Roanoke, song, "Toot-Toot-Toot-sie."

Decision on these cases is awaited as the verdict will be binding on exhibitor and publisher until the copyright section of the patent laws is revised.

Wisconsin M.P.T.O. Wins Sunday Opening

Victory calculated to warm the heart of every member of the Wisconsin M. P. T. O. was announced Wednesday, April 25, when the Wisconsin assembly voted to legalize Sunday baseball, movies, dances and other amusements, in engrossing the Grahm bill to amend the Wisconsin blue laws. The vote was 51 to 42.

The Grahm bill was killed by the lower house a week ago, but the assembly moved to reconsider the vote later. The motion for reconsideration carried 55 to 38.

The Grahm bill originally proposed to amend the blue laws only in regard to motion picture and theatrical exhibits, but an amendment was adopted by the assembly to also legalize Sunday baseball, dances, and other diversions.

The fight for the bill was led by Assemblyman F. J. Peterson, of Milwaukee, who declared the blue laws a farce.

Universal Treasurer Mourns Death of Mother

Mrs. S. J. Goldstein, mother of E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of the Universal Pictures Corporation, died last week in her home at 220 West Ninety-eighth Street, New York City. She had suffered with heart trouble for many years, although her illness had been acute but a few days. Funeral services were held Friday, April 27.

Mrs. Goldstein's death is mourned by a host of friends, including many motion picture people, especially in New York and Pittsburgh. She formerly resided in Pittsburgh, but changed her residence to New York several years ago when her son became an official in the Universal organization. Her husband survives her.

New Parcel Post Form for Mailing Films

THE post office department has adopted a new form to facilitate the shipment of film by parcel post. In it is urged that patrons who ship films should be requested to obtain and use address labels provided.

These labels have a space in the upper left-hand corner for the return address, and the lower right-hand corner is reserved for address only, leaving ample space in the upper right-hand corner for the postage stamps and a legible post mark.

The use of these forms will aid materially in the transmission of pictures.

Federal Investigation of Famous Continues

Goldwyn, Connick, Greene, Rowland, Rothafel,
Plunkett, Atkinson, Among Witnesses

THE hearing on the Federal Trade Commission charges against the Famous Players group continued this week in New York City, the taking of testimony centering chiefly about the early history of the company and the first run situation in the key cities of the United States.

Those testifying included H. D. H. Connick, former chairman of the corporation's finance committee and representative of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. in the negotiations that led to the $10,000,000 refinancing plan in 1919; Tarkington Baker, formerly with Famous Players; Walter E. Greene; Samuel Goldwyn, Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National; Samuel Rothafel; Joseph Plunkett; Frederick Gage, sales manager of American Releasing, and W. E. Atkinson of Metro.

Connick was on the stand last Friday. He was subjected to rigorous cross examination by Robert T. Swaine for the respondents, in which the latter sought to show that the public was the ultimate consumer and that the acquisition of theatres by a producer is the efficient way of doing business.

Swaine also brought out, by questions, that while Famous Players was seeking to make the whole process from story to public efficient, First National, formed of exhibitors, was beginning at the theatre and working back to the scenario.

With regard to the situation between Famous Players and First National, as he knew it, Connick characterized it as a case of "dog eat dog."

When Connick was asked whether Famous Players did not stand in the same relation to the industry as Caruso once did to the opera world, the witness answered:

"God Almighty had a lot to do with making Caruso, but not with making Famous Players."

"Yes, but God Almighty made the individuals in Famous Players," Swaine declared.

"He did," replied Connick, "but he didn't put them there."

After stating, under cross examination, that First National in 1921 had several thousand franchise holders and important key city theatres, most of the houses, however, being small, Connick admitted that Zukor's idea was that pictures should be shown in high-class surroundings, but contended that he also wanted to get theatres in order to make more money.

On direct examination he told of various theatre acquisitions while he was with the company, and also of the survey he made of Famous Players for Kuhn, Loeb & Co. He characterized the $10,000,000 refinancing scheme as a preferred stock issue of $10,000,000, disposed of to the underwriters to be redistributed to the public.

The report of his survey was then introduced, and his attention called to a section headed "Selling Product Direct to the People."

"What was the purpose of this refinancing scheme?" queried Attorney Farrington, who conducted the Government examination.

"The whole purpose was to get money to go into the exhibiting end of the business," Connick answered.

He said he had innumerable conferences with Zukor on this subject, Zukor's idea being the acquisition of a number of important theatres in important key cities, so that the Fa-

Goldwyn Manager Robbed of Payroll on Coast

H. E. EDINGTON, business manager at the Goldwyn studios, Los Angeles, was held up at his home and robbed of $2,500 of the company's funds which he was taking from the studios to the bank. The money represented a payroll which was to be delivered to the employees on Saturday afternoon. As a result of the robbery workers at the studio were temporarily deprived of funds, according to the dispatch from the West Coast containing the report.

Famous Players would get first runs "without fail."

On the question of competition, Connick declared Zukor did not fear any company except First National, which was then growing "very rapidly." Famous Players, he said, acquired 30 to 35 per cent stock interest in the Stanley Company; had previously formed Southern Enterprises with S. A. Lynch; Southern Enterprises in turn had bought an interest in the Saenger Amusement Co.; and in New England, while Connick was with Famous Players, the latter bought 50 per cent interest in the Black Circuit.

Farrington then returned to questions about First National, and Connick declared discussions of a "working arrangement" between Famous and First National were constantly going on. Connick then described conferences at which he and Zukor were present when it was proposed to form a separate corporation to handle the foreign pictures controlled by Messrs. Rachman and Blumenthal.

"Who was to head this corporation?" asked Farrington.

"J. D. Williams," the witness answered.

The corporation was to be financed by Famous Players, he declared, but Williams did not accept the offer.

Asked whether he had any knowledge of a proposition made by Zukor to buy Williams' stock in First National, he said "No." Connick then described a meeting held with several First National franchise holders, including Nathan Gordon, A. H. Blank, Jules Mastbaum, H. O. Schwalbe, Sam Katz, and Robert Lieber.

Zukor's idea, according to Connick, was that First National and Famous Players should work together and quit bidding against each other for stars and stories. The final result of the conference, he declared, was that it "just disintegrated."

Asked whether any favors were shown to Loew in the booking of pictures, the witness said the Famous Players sales department tried to sell films to all interests. He denied any partiality was shown Loew.

Attorney Farrington then pressed further on Zukor's object and asked whether he wanted to dominate the industry. This brought an objection from Robert T. Swaine, of respondents' counsel, which was sustained. The witness finally said Zukor thought Famous Players already dominated the industry and the acquisition of key theatres would make the situation permanent.

The M. P. T. O. A. agreement with Zukor on theatre acquisition was taken up, and the witness stated that acquisition went on after the agreement was made.

Asked what would be the effect on a producer-distributor if a substantial section of domestic territory was closed to him, Connick said he would have a hard time unless he could increase his sales elsewhere to offset it. He found during his investigation, he said, that foreign sales equaled the corporation's entire profits, and that this was also true of other film concerns.

Theatres were built, or interests acquired in houses, in Atlanta, St. Louis, New Orleans, Detroit, Dallas, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver, Terre Haute, Baltimore, Cleveland and Buffalo during Connick's connection with the company, or just prior to it, he said.

Property was bought in Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, according to Connick, but no building was done because of "hard times." The English Hotel site in Indianapolis was obtained under long lease; and attempts made to acquire houses in Portland, Ore., Chicago, and other cities, he testified.

On cross-examination, Connick was asked by Robert T. Swaine, for the defense, if it wasn't true that the producer had to get his pictures before the people, to which the witness assented. Then Swaine asked if the theater wasn't a facility just as the laboratory or projection machine and had to be high-class if all the links in the chain from studio to screen were to be complete. Connick agreed, but said the obtaining of a site for a theatre differed from the same operation in the case of a shoe-store.

He explained this by saying that there were only a few desirable theater sites in the large cities and "if you got the best one you blocked off almost anybody else," thereby controlling the first-run situation in those towns.

There was no session on Saturday. The two witnesses on Monday were Tarkington Baker and Walter E. Greene, both formerly identified with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Interesting details concerning the formation of Select, Artaft and Realart were testified to by Greene.

Select, he said, was organized in 1917 with Famous Players owning one-half interest and L. J. Selznick the other half. Subsequently, Selznick bought the F. P. L. interest.

Greene, whose testimony occupied most of the day, told of the "friction" which arose between the Zukor and Lasky units and the Hodkinson-Paramount regime. He covered much of the ground previously taken up in the evidence given by Al Lichtman.

He described a meeting which he said occurred at the Hotel Astor with Zukor, Elek Ludvig, Arthur S. Friend, William A. Sherry, Hiram Abrams, James Steele and himself present, at which an agreement was drawn up and signed. It was introduced in evidence and concerned getting 50 per cent. interest in Paramount for Zukor and Lasky.

Subsequently, he testified, two other agreements were signed bearing on the same matter. The removal of W. W. Hodkinson as president of Paramount followed.

Greene said Artaft was formed, in 1916, to distribute the Mary Pickford pictures originally; other star productions were added. He testified that it was sought to create the impression that Artercraft was a separate corporation.

Asked whether he, as president of Artercraft, held conferences with Zukor, he replied that he discussed Artercraft policy frequently with the latter.

"The finances were furnished by Famous Players-Lasky," said Greene.

Zukor, he explained, also arranged the Fairbanks, Cohan and Griffith contracts. The Elsie Ferguson contract was handled by Lasky. Greene was then asked about "the difficulty" in selling the Pickford pictures to the Stanley Company. Stanley Mastbaum, he said, contended that Artercraft was a subsidiary of F. P.-L. and the Pickford pictures should continue to go through Paramount. Greene said he argued with Mastbaum as to the independence of Artercraft. The Stanley company finally booked the pictures.

"No special inducements on price were offered Stanley as far as I know," he added. Questioned about the disposition of Hodgkinson's stock in Paramount, he declared it was sold to S. A. Lynch and subsequently sold by Lynch to Zukor. "Famous Players-Lasky acquired all the Paramount stock in the latter part of 1916," said Greene.

Following the consolidation of the Paramount-Artercraft exchanges in 1919, Greene stated, he became the managing director of distribution for F. P.-L.

The first he heard of theater acquisitions, he said, was in the early part of 1917, when E. Mandelbaum, who had started the Stillman in Cleveland got into "financial difficulties" and was given assistance by Famous.

Acquisition of first-run theaters was discussed in directors' meetings in 1917-18, after a franchise plan had been abandoned. The deal for the Rialto and Rivoli was arranged through Felix Kahn, brother of Otto H. Kahn, said Greene.

Just before he left Famous, Lynch and Zukor discussed the Southern Enterprises deal in his presence, the witness went on. Lynch was willing to put up $500,000, if F. P.-L. would put up an equal amount. Zukor took it to the board of directors "or the executive committee" with the result that the corporation was formed, the witness declared. Lynch also wanted to go into the Kansas City and St. Louis territory, he added.

The part played by Zukor in the formation of Select Pictures Corp. was then revealed, according to the testimony. Greene said F. P.-L. formed the company jointly with L. J. Selznick in 1917, each having a half interest. "Famous Players-Lasky had considerable to say about the Select policies," the witness said.

Objections to this line of questioning were then raised by Prather McDonald for the respondents, who declared that Select was not mentioned in the complaint. Marvin Farrington, for the Government, was sustained when he argued that the general allegations covered the point.

A year later, said Greene, Selznick bought the half interest owned by F. P.-L. and the formation of Realart immediately followed. Realart had independent offices; and Arthur S. Kane, Morris Kohn and Jack Woody, who had previously been employed by Select, went to Realart, the witness explained.

Baker was the other witness of the day. He was told in detail of being engaged by F. P.-L. to go to India to handle with Frank Meyer the Famous Players' Indian project, which he said was financed by E. D. Sassoon & Co. of Bombay. Zukor's plan, according to Baker, was that the company was not only to produce pictures in India and market F. P.-L. American pictures there, but also to acquire theatres in the principal cities.

He quoted Walter Wanger, then F. P.-L. production manager, as saying that the Indian concern would follow the same theatre policy as F. P.-L. in America—"to control the theatrical situation." Plans were made to purchase circuits in India, said the witness, but the whole plan was finally called off, when he received a cable from Zukor to come home in March, 1921.

Zukor had previously described the Indian enterprise to him as part of a large plan by which he wanted to make F. P.-L. "the leading company" abroad as well as in America. From March to June, 1921, Baker testified he made an investigation of the "pedagogic picture" situation for Wanger. He talked with Bullitt, then manager of the Famous scenario department, and he favored the idea, but Zukor, Connick and Lasky opposed it.

Baker then said a plan for "amalgamation" between F. P.-L. and Metro came up at a luncheon attended by himself, Wanger, Meyer and Emil Shauer. Robert T. Swaine, for the defense, objected to this as rank hearsay testimony and he was sustained.

Asked what would be the effect if F. P.-L. went into his field—meaning educational—Baker said it would put him out of business. This answer was objected to but the objection was overruled.

When he was asked why he didn't make features, Baker explained that he wanted to make only the best, and "with the theatre situation as it is at present, he had advised his board of directors against it." Independents with one picture, he said, were up against a stone wall. On cross-examination Baker was given a severe grilling by the Famous Players' lawyers.

He had offered through an intermediary, to produce a picture based on an original story by Booth Tarkington, he said. This proposition was made to First National, he said. He also "spoke" to R. H. Cochrane Universal, the witness declared, but made no attempts to market the idea to Fox, Famous Players or Metro.

"You say a producer with only one or two pictures a year has no chance. Fairbanks makes only a few a year and he is successful, isn't he?" asked McDonald. Baker admitted that he was. "If a picture is excellent it will be shown, won't it?" persisted McDonald, but Baker said that was not entirely the case.

Richard A. Rowland took the stand on Tuesday. He stated that he understood that First National and Southern Enterprises had made a working agreement in 1922, and agreed to produce it, although he said he had not been directly connected with it.

Reference to this so-called deal, made during the cross-examination of Goldwyn, provoked a bitter wrangle between opposing. Goldwyn was asked by Marvin Farrington, for the Government, what the effect would be on the other producers in view of the "agreement" between the Lynch circuit and First National.

"Very simple," answered Goldwyn. "The theatres would naturally play First National pictures first, and others if any open time was left."

Robert T. Swaine declared the defense would not admit any such contract existed: if it did, it might merely be such a booking contract as was made with Southern Enterprises by other companies. Elek J. Ludvig said he never heard of such an agreement.

The standing of various companies as to quality pictures during the past several years was taken up, with the Famous Players' counsel stressing heavily the excellence of F. P.-L., First National, Goldwyn, United Artists, and Metro.

There were 3,500 franchise and sub-franchise holders in First National in 1919, he estimated, less than 5 per cent. of whom owned first-run theatres. Today, he said, there were 2,200, with the same percentage of first-runs.

Regarding the cancellation of franchises by the exhibitor he said "it could be done on six months' notice, if all the pictures had been played or paid for and all bills settled in full." He reviewed in detail the history of Metro from its inception until he left the company in 1922.

One of the high lights of Goldwyn's testimony was his story of an attempted merger of Famous Players Film Co. and the Lasky Feature Play Co. with Triangle. This was initiated at the time the producers in Paramount were having trouble with W. W. Hodgkinson, and the plan contemplated also the merging of Paramount Pictures Corp. with Triangle, he declared.

Goldwyn also told of his resignation from Famous Players. Friction developed between he and Zukor, he declared, and Lasky sided with Zukor. He stated that he had left Goldwyn twice, but now owned more Goldwyn stock than when he got out.

On the acquisition of theatres by the Goldwyn corporation, the witness said in 1921 the company acquired 50 per cent. interest in 30 houses throughout the country.

"Famous Players began to get hold of the theatre situation in 1919-1920," he declared. "And with the number of First National franchise holders growing, we found it very difficult for Goldwyn to get showings in key cities. The capitalization of the Goldwyn company was increased in order to acquire theatres."

On cross-examination, the witness said he considered key city showings indispensable for the success of high-grade pictures. "The importance of Broadway in the first-run situation is not as great now as a year ago," he thought.

"I don't think it good business for a producer to own theatres," the witness declared. "The motion picture industry is young and I don't think it advisable for any producer to dominate the theatre situation. If the producer can get his pictures played without owning theatres, it is better to do so. It is more advisable to have the two things separate and apart. The only reason Goldwyn acquired interest in theatres was because it couldn't otherwise get into the key cities."

Rothafel stated that the Capitol was owned by the Moredall Realty Co., with Goldwyn holding an interest in the theatre, but how large he didn't know.

A lengthy cross-examination of the witness was then begun by Robert T. Swaine. Rothafel traced his career in the business from

"Naked Truth" Dinner at Biltmore Big Success

Annual Social Function of A. M. P. A. Draws
S. R. O. Crowd—Elaborate Program Given

THE annual Associated Motion Picture Advertisers' banquet was held at the Biltmore hotel, New York, Saturday evening, April 28th. As in previous years, the function was billed as "The Naked Truth" dinner, with a rehearsed program given by members of the A. M. P. A. featured.

In attendance were approximately five hundred prominent people of the motion picture industry, all of whom are willing to testify to an enjoyable evening. Among the guests were several stars and players, including Thomas Meighan, Antonio Moreno and "Ham" Hamilton. Practically all the executives residing in New York were present and numbers of out-of-town people came in for the event.

The entertainment part of the program was billed as follows:

SCENE 1.—Interior, Biltmore Cascades Room.
Medium full shot. Iris up.

On a scene representing pandemonium, the Royal Palm Orchestra furnishing music. The star, Lena Ghenster, and Director Louis Reinhardt of the Green Room Club are seen wandering about. A lot of extras in dress suits meander in from time to time. Dissolve into SCENE 5.—Interior, Motion Picture Hall of Fame. Long shot.

The "Hall of Fame" imitated the MOTION PICTURE NEWS "Hall of Fame" featured in the Christmas number. Twelve people connected with the industry in various capacities were caricatured on the screen by means of stereoptican slides. The selection was satirical.

Penn. Legislature Prohibits Daylight Saving

The Pennsylvania Legislature at Harrisburg on April 25 passed finally the Derrick anti-daylight saving bill, which prohibits any municipality of the state from passing any local law establishing any except Standard time as the legal time. The measure, which previously had passed the Senate by a wide margin, went through the House by a vote of 115 to 74. This left it up to Governor Gifford Pinchot to sign or veto the bill. At this writing he had not yet acted on the measure and there was doubt as to what his attitude would be, though the general impression is that he will approve the proposed law rather than alienate the support of the farmer members of the Legislature, who were solid for it and whose aid he needs in putting through his own administration measures on other subjects.

While this law, if ultimately receiving the Governor's approval, prohibits the legal establishment of daylight saving time, the measure contains no penalties for violation, and daylight saving becomes effective on May 1 in some of the larger cities of the state—notably Philadelphia and Pittsburgh—without any legislation formally establishing it. This is because a large number of interests favoring it have decided to change the clock regardless of formal legal sanction.

Emerson Hough, Author of "Covered Wagon," Dead

Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon," passed away at an Evanston hospital Monday morning following an operation for stomach trouble performed last Friday.

Mr. Hough, who was the foremost contemporary writer of American historical fiction, attended the opening performance of "The Covered Wagon" at the Woods Theatre in Chicago a week ago Sunday. It was there that he saw the picture version of his story for the first time, and from the stage of the theatre he told the audience of his keen delight in the manner in which his work had been transferred to the screen by Director Cruze and his assistants.

Committee Reports Good Progress

Public Relations Body Reports Accomplishments to Will Hays Organization

THE committee on Public Relations, which last summer affiliated with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has just submitted to Will Hays a summary of the work done. This committee is composed of heads of approximately sixty national organizations with Colonel Jason Joy as its executive secretary.

During its existence the committee has established a wide range of contacts both within and without the industry. It is in a position to reflect in a general way the reactions of the public as represented by the sixty national organizations, the feeling toward pictures and in the same general way it is in a position to acquaint the public with the purpose of the industry to produce the kind of pictures that the American people want. Such an exchange of information between the public and the industry affords great possibilities for better mutual understanding and co-operation.

Following is the brief resume of the facts pertaining to the affairs of the committee to date, as prepared by Jason S. Joy and submitted to the Hays organization:

"Invited by Mr. Will Hays to organize June 22, 1922.

"Executive Secretary appointed and functioning Sept. 1st.

"Committee is composed of 78 members of 62 national organizations, with an estimated combined membership of 60,000,000.

"An Executive Committee composed of 29 members of 17 national organizations with an estimated combined membership of 11,000,000.

"The Committee acts as a channel of communication between the public and the industry, submitting comments, criticisms, and suggestions to the industry, and telling the public of the problems and developments of the industry and about commendable pictures.

"There have been held 11 meetings of the Committee.

"128 pictures have been reviewed by national organizations for the purpose of listing them for the benefit of their members.

"The Executive Secretary's correspondence amounts to 35,652 letters.

"The Executive Secretary has held approximately 500 conferences with representatives of organizations.

"Approximately 385,000 copies of literature have been mailed."

The Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America

at a meeting held March 27 adopted a resolution thanking the Committee of Public Relations for its splendid work and expressing a determination to continue in their efforts to make better and better pictures to the exclusion of every other consideration.

To Acquaint F. I. L. M. Clubs with Uniform Contracts

Part of the plan of the present trip of Charles C. Pettijohn and Lloyd D. Willis of the Will Hays organization is to acquaint F. I. L. M. Clubs and Boards of Trade with the operation of the uniform contract and the arbitration system.

An attempt is being made to nationalize all exchange men's organizations and to carry out the new arbitration scheme on a country-wide basis. It is planned to have all decisions made by various local bodies on which both exhibitors and exchangers will have equal representation. When these local bodies cannot satisfactorily arrange difficulties it is planned to have a court of appeal which will sit in New York and hand out final decisions.

N. Y. State Censorship Bill Up Before Assembly

A WIRE from Albany late Thursday states that the motion picture censorship law still may be repealed in New York State in spite of the fact that earlier reports were to the effect that the rules committee of the Assembly had decided not to report out the bill.

Thursday's calendar in the Assembly carried the measure calling for the repeal of the censorship law and it appears at the time of going to press that the bill will come out before the lower house sometime Thursday night.

A hot fight is expected with the result in doubt.

Industry Wins Friend in Jacksonville Mayor

John T. Alsop was elected Mayor of Jacksonville, Fla., on April 16, winning over Jett Bowden in one of the most hotly contested races in the history of the city and by one of the largest majorities ever polled. The principle issue of the race was Sunday operation of motion picture theatres.

Mr. Alsop has been associated with the Southern Enterprises since its formation and stood for election upon a platform one plank of which was given to the motion picture theatre. Mr. Bowden attacked the theatre interests from every angle and waged a bitter fight against his opponent on this count.

However, Mr. Alsop had the support of the best citizens of Jacksonville, including virtually every church there.

Seattle Headquarters For New Theatre Chain

Seattle is scheduled to be the headquarters for a new chain of motion picture theatres, according to an announcement made recently by B. E. Torgersen, president of the National Theatre association of Seattle.

A deal was recently closed by Mr. Torgersen with the Bankers Reserve Deposit company of Denver, whereby the Deposit company will guarantee all stock issued by the theatre association for the construction of its new houses, according to reports.

With the delivery of the negative of "Cordelia the Magnificent" to Metro, Clara Kimball Young brings her contract with that company to a conclusion. Four Universal Releases For May

Group Includes Features by Rawlinson, Gibson, Stewart and Gladys Walton

THE home office of Universal Pictures Corporation this week announced the schedule of releases for the month of May, a group embracing four features to be released one a week. The group includes five-reel features by Herbert Rawlinson, Gladys Walton, Hoot Gibson and Roy Stewart. They were made by such directors as Stuart Paton, King Baggot, Henry Lehrman and Herbert Blache.

The pictures, in the order of their release, are "Fools and Riches," a Rawlinson vehicle; "Crossed Wires," the latest Walton picture; "Double Dealing," a new Hoot Gibson feature, and "Burning Words," Roy Stewart's first Universal feature production.

"Fools and Riches," to be released May 7, was adapted from a Frederick Jackson story by Charles Kenyon and George C. Hull. Herbert Blache directed it. Rawlinson's cast includes Katherine Perry, Tolly Marshall, Doris Pawn, Arthur S. Hull and Nick de Ruiz. It is the story of a spendthrift scion of a self-made millionaire.

"Crossed Wires" shows Gladys Walton as a telephone operator. It was made from an original story by King Baggot, especially written for Miss Walton. Baggot also directed it. The supporting cast includes George Stewart, Tom Guise, Lillian Langdon, William Robert Daly, Kate Price and Eddie Gribbon. The story recounts the adventures of a "hello" girl who takes a fling at high society, with amusing although successful results. "Crossed Wires" will be released May 14.

The May 21 release is to be "Double Dealing," another Hoot Gibson special. Henry Lehrman wrote and directed it. Helen Ferguson, Betty Francisco, Eddie Gribbon, Gertrude Claire, Otto Hoffman, Frank Hayes and Jack Dillon are to be seen in Gibson's support. The story concerns a western small town "hick" who gets properly trimmed by a couple of "slickers" but who finally is awakened to his own dumbness and begins to step out.

The last May release on the Universal schedule is to be "Burning Words," starring Roy Stewart. It was written by Harrison Warren Jacobs. Stuart Paton, maker of such Universal Jewel successes as "Conflict," "Reputation" and "Bavu," directed it. Laura La Plante, Harold Goodwin, Edith Yorke, Alfred Fisher, William Welsh, Noble Johnson, Eve Southern, Harry Carter and George McDaniels are in the cast supporting Stewart, which is his initial offering on the Universal attraction schedule. The story is laid in the rugged frontier land of the Canadian Northwest and concerns the adventures of a mounted police officer.

Pre-Criticism Is Latest at Universal

"Pre-Criticism" is the latest at Universal City, with the arrival of James O. Spearing, for fifteen years dramatic critic on the New York Times.

Spearing will criticize the films at Universal before they're made. He'll read each story, furnish an unbiased criticism, just as he would for his newspaper, and will do the same while films are being rehearsed and photographed.

Through his criticisms, favorable or unfavorable, the company expects to gain many valuable hints. Under the direction of Homer A. Boushey, production manager, an elaborate schedule of production is being mapped out, with the New York writer as "constructive critic."

"You Can't Fool Your Wife," which appears on the Paramount release schedule.

New Mae Murray Pictures for Metro

Star Preparing to Start Work on Two Productions Following "French Doll"

FURTHER substantiation of the fact that Mae Murray will continue to make pictures for distribution by Metro Pictures Corporation was made this week by Miss Murray herself, who wired Nicholas M. Schenck that she was preparing to start work on two more productions to follow "The French Doll," a forthcoming fall release which is now being cut and titled on the coast. Before actual work starts on the new picture, however, Miss Murray will come to New York to conclude several business transactions which are now pending.

Miss Murray's denial of reports that she would leave the Metro banner follows Mr. Schenck's recent denial of an alleged announcement by M. H. Hoffman of the Tiffany and Truart productions, that at the termination of her present contract with Metro Miss Murray would make pictures for Tiffany for release through the State Rights market.

That Miss Murray has never considered a plan of this nature is clearly indicated by her present emphatic intention to continue making pictures for release by Metro.

As soon as she returns to Hollywood from her contemplated visit to New York, Miss Murray will start at once on a picture to be called "Conquest" by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgins. Following "Conquest" will come "Mlle. Midnight," a story by Edmund Goulding.

In a statement on behalf of Miss Murray, which since has been substantiated by Miss Murray herself, Mr. Schenck declared that the star is more than satisfied with the manner in which Metro has marketed her productions.

and feels that a great share of the credit for the success of the Murray attractions throughout the country is due to the releasing company.

Both "Conquest" and "Mlle. Midnight," which together with "The French Doll," are included in Metro's 1923-1924 schedule are said to be unusually suited to Miss Murray's type and personality. Sada Cowan, co-author of "Conquest" is one of the best known writers of today and has contributed a score of popular successes to the screen during the past two seasons.

Tiffany Truart Companies in New Headquarters

The home-offices of the Tiffany Productions, Inc., and the Truart Film Corporation have taken over a portion of the sixteenth floor of Loew's State Theatre Building, New York, to house the various departments of the New York headquarters of the above mentioned firms.

The working staff of the Tiffany-Truart has also been enlarged during the past month. John Weber, formerly connected with Equity, has been appointed assistant to the General Manager M. H. Hoffman, while Frank R. McGinniss, recently with Robertson-Cole, has been placed in charge of the accessory department. J. I. Angus was recently made comptroller, while Southard Brown, who has been connected for several years with the enterprises of which M. H. Hoffman has been the head, will have charge of the exploitation and publicity of the Tiffany-Truart organization.

Pathe Organizer Is Named Head of Company

The election of Paul Fuller as president places at the head of Pathe Exchange, Inc., the organizer of the company and a member of its directorate who has been continuously active in connection with its important financial and commercial affairs. This experience has made him thoroughly conversant with the details of the development of the motion picture industry in all its departments.

It was Mr. Fuller who, two years ago, conducted the negotiations which secured control of Pathe Exchange for its American stockholders and placed the company under wholly American management.

William Fellowes Morgan, the new member of the board of directors, has been an active figure in New York commercial life for more than thirty years. He is a member of the Merchants' Association and one of its former presidents. He is now president of the Brooklyn Bridge Freezing and Cold Storage Company, chairman of the Local Merchants' Refrigerating Company, director of the American Beet Sugar Company and of the Chemical National Bank.

Irene Rich Signs for Mary Pickford Vehicle

Irene Rich has been signed by Mary Pickford to play the role of queen in Miss Pickford's forthcoming screen romance of nineteenth century Spain, and in which the star producer has the role of Rosita, a street singer.

Miss Rich, whose notable work in the Charles G. Norris story, "Brass," recommended her for the part with Miss Pickford, takes the place of Clare Eames, well-known stage star of New York, who originally had been cast for the queen. Illness forced Miss Eames to retire from studio activity for the time being. Miss Rich will play opposite Holbrook Blinn, who will portray the king. The role will be one of the four most important in the production.

Sol Lesser in Conference with Bankers on Coast

SOL LESSER, vice-president of Associated First National Pictures, held a conference in Los Angeles on Monday of this week, April 30th, with A. P. Giannini, president of the Bank of Italy; Marco and Irving Hellman heads of the Hellman Bank; and Motley H. Flint of the Pacific Southwest Bank. Indications are that all First National productions in the future will be financed in Los Angeles, according to a wire received during the week from the West Coast.

These scenes are taken from the Hodkinson production, "The Critical Age," presented by Ernest Shipman.

Shipman Will Produce on Long Island

ERNEST SHIPMAN announced this week the launching of his latest enterprise—an organization to be known as the Long Island Cinema Corporation, for the making of big features on Long Island. The company has been incorporated at Albany with an authorized capitalization of $500,000 preferred and 10,000 shares, common, of no par value; and it is hastening its plans for the commencement of activities during the coming summer months.

The incorporation is the outgrowth of a two months' survey by bankers, realtors, leaders of community interests and members of the Long Island Association, backed by a movement calculated to challenge the leadership of California in the realm of picture making, and demonstrate that the "Sunrise Trail" of Long Island offers for this purpose the same advantages of the "Sunset Trail" of California.

It is the intention of the company to produce three pictures during the coming summer—one of the seacoast, one of Long Island society and one of rural life.

First National Moves to New Quarters

The First National home office, including executive offices, distribution, publicity, auditing and purchasing departments, is moving eastward and will be located on the eleventh floor of 383 Madison Avenue, at the corner of Forty-sixth Street, New York City. The offices at 6-8 West Forty-eighth Street, which have been the home of First National for the past five years, were abandoned this week.

Perfectly appointed projection rooms adjoining the offices will be a feature of the Madison Avenue offices. The new home of First National is conveniently located in the heart of the recently developed uptown business section.

Mary Alden and Harry T. Morey are featured in "The Empty Cradle," some views of which are given above. Truart Films is releasing this subject.

Goldwyn Release Schedule Is Heavy

President Godsol Announces Forty-nine for Distribution During Fiscal Year

FOLLOWING his arrival at the Culver City studios last Monday, F. J. Godsol, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announced that forty-nine pictures would be released during the next fiscal year. The Goldwyn studios will produce twenty-four; Cosmopolitan Productions will contribute fifteen and Distinctive Pictures Corporation will supply eight. Jesse D. Hampton's production of "The Spoilers," and Achievement Film Company's picturization of "The Magic Skin," directed by George D. Baker, will complete the program.

Mr. Godsol said that the big production schedule inaugurated by Goldwyn would be continued. He added that recent contracts signed with famous directors and actors have placed the company in a decidedly advantageous position, particularly now that the boom in the industry has caused all producers to look for talent.

"Upon assuming the presidency of the Goldwyn company a year ago," Mr. Godsol said, "it was my opinion that the day of the average picture was past, and that success for the company lay only in big outstanding pictures, costly to produce but which would be sought after by the exhibitors and the public.

"To this end we set about securing the most gifted directors, the best stories, the most brilliant acting, editorial and producing talent. We have completely reorganized our selling force and methods. I believe I can truthfully state that in one year we have accomplished all the foregoing, and that time has proved our policy correct."

Cast Selected for "Little Johnny Jones"

The members of the cast in support of Johnny Hines in Warner Brothers' "Little Johnny Jones," adapted from the George M. Cohan stage play, have been selected at the Warner coast studios. Production has been started under the direction of Arthur Rosson, who is assisted by Charles Hines.

The supporting cast includes Harry Myers, Windham Standing, Margaret Seddon, Herbert Prior, Molly Malone, George Webb, Mervyn LeRoy and Brownie, a dog. The scenario was written by Raymond Schrock and the cinematographic end is handled by Charles E. Gilson.

Miriam Cooper and Kenneth Harlan as they appear in "The Girl Who Came Back," a Tom Forman production for Preferred Pictures, scheduled for release via the Al Lichtman Corporation.

Morris Kohn Made Treasurer of Warner Bros.

On the eve of Harry M. Warner's departure for the Warner Brothers' Coast studios last week, it was announced that Morris Kohn has been made treasurer of the organization. Mr.

Kohn has taken over the executive reins, while Mr. Warner will speed the production schedule for the coming season.

Morris Kohn

In addition to his position of treasurer, Mr. Kohn has purchased the interests of the Warner Brothers in the W-B Film Exchange, New York, which will control the distribution of the new series of Warner releases in the New York State and Northern New Jersey territories. According to Mr. Warner the exchange was relinquished so that the organization can center its activities exclusively to production.

Charles S. Goetz, general manager of the W-B Film Exchange, since its inception, and who by the terms of the transaction has become a partner with Mr. Kohn in the exchange, will continue in the same capacity and personally supervise the sales of the pictures in the New York, Buffalo and Northern New Jersey territories.

Central America to See Pathe Product

Under a contract just made by Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Robert Wilcox & Co., the latter firm has distribution rights of all Pathe product in Central American countries, including Panama, Costa Rica, Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and Jamaica.

Among the first Pathe releases which the Wilcox Company will book in the countries named are some twenty standard features which have been showing continuously in this country.

Commission Continues Hearing Against Famous

his beginnings in Forest City, Pa., where his first theatre was a converted dance hall behind a bar room.

He came to New York in 1913 with a "different idea" from those usually followed in exhibition, and admitted to Swaine that some of the exhibitors thought his presentation ideas were "not altogether sane."

He said he developed the idea successively at the Strand, Rialto, Rivoli, and Capitol. Questioned about the formation of First National, of which he was the first president, Rothafel described its beginnings in the activity of the circuits.

Rothafel said the Capitol played practically all Goldwyns; and to Swaine, the witness explained that Goldwyn's purpose in operating the Capitol was to give their pictures the best possible showing in this territory, and also to introduce them in that way to the whole country.

The examination of Plunkett lasted only a few minutes. His evidence was concerned largely with identifying a list of pictures played at the Strand from its opening to date.

The next witness, Frederick Gage, sales manager of American Releasing, produced a list of films which, in his opinion, deserved first-runs in first-class theatres.

He named a dozen or more pictures which, he said, had been offered by his concern to the Capitol, Strand, Rialto and Rivoli, but all were declined on the ground that they did not measure up to standard or there was no "open time."

The last witness of the morning was W. E. Atkinson, vice-president and general manager of Metro, which company he said did not itself engage in the exhibition field. He produced a long list of pictures which he considered entitled to first-runs and also testified that Metro distributed films produced outside.

Also on cross-examination, Atkinson said Metro encountered no sales difficulty on account of First National "contracts with exhibitors" and no obstacles because of F. P.-L. selling policy.

W. L. Sherry, who was at one time vice-president of the old Paramount Corporation, testified on Wednesday. In 1915, he stated, he strongly favored merging Paramount with Famous Players. At that time, he estimated, he was worth $800,000.

Later, he said, he was urged by Mr. Zukor to put $125,000 into "Joan the Woman," a feature starring Geraldine Farrar.

"The picture never grossed over $50,000, if that, and I was obliged to borrow $100,000 from the Irving National Bank and to put up my Famous Players stock as collateral. I had to dispose of it at a great loss to pay the loan," Sherry testified.

He also claimed that he had been "cheated" out of a contract as manager of the New York district at a salary of $1,000 a week. This contract, he said, was offered to him following the acquisition by Famous Players-Lasky of the controlling interest in Paramount, when all directors of Paramount were offered positions with F. P.-L. as district managers. Sherry said that he was allowed a drawing account of $250 a week as New York manager and was later withdrawn and made head of the purchasing department. He was also to receive 2 per cent. of all gross sales in his district, he claimed, but he declared that this had never been fulfilled.

Producers to Cut Excess Footage

First National Yields to Demand For Shorter Features in New Productions

TWO prominent First National producers, Maurice Tourneur and Frank Borzage, have taken definite steps to keep down the footage of their pictures to a minimum, in accordance with the popular demand of exhibitors. Tourneur, who is now making "The Brass Bottle," and Borzage, now cutting and editing "Children of Dust," have both issued statements to the effect that they are taking every possible means to do away with any excess footage.

The outcry of exhibitors against the extra long feature has been particularly insistent recently and trade paper editors have called attention to the problem, which, they state, must be given immediate attention.

In speaking of the "Brass Bottle" Tourneur states, "If this picture goes above six reels it will be only because the story is such that the film could not possibly be made shorter."

Director Borzage and Producer Arthur H. Jacobs have promised that "Children of the Dust" will be entirely free of excess footage. "The long-drawn-out so-called feature is dead," states the youthful director of "Humoresque." "What the people want is honest-to-goodness stories, and any of the elastic eight- or nine-reel films could be shortened and the audiences would enjoy them more. 'Children of the Dust' will be told as compactly as possible. It has simple backgrounds, not simply lavish, overstuffed ballrooms."

"The Brass Bottle," which is now nearing completion at the United Studios, is adapted from F. Anstey's story and will mark Tourneur's initial comedy production.

Barbara La Marr is the latest addition to the cast, which includes Ernest Torrence, Harry Myers, Tully Marshall, Charlotte Merriam and other popular players.

Another feature in this production is the appearance of Tourneur as a screen actor.

This marks the director's first appearance in pictures since his acting days in France.

"Children of the Dust" is Borzage's initial production for First National. It was adapted to the screen by Agnes Christine Johnston from the Metropolitan Magazine story, "Terwilliger," by Tristram Tupper. In the cast are Johnnie Walker, Pauline Garon, Lloyd Hughes, Bert Woodruff, Frankie Lee, Josephine Adair and other important players.

Listen!

It has been unanimously acclaimed by every great New York critic as the dramatic gem of the year. Its poignant realism is unforgettably appealing—the vivid characterizations of its remarkable cast will live forever in your memory.

"I want YOU to see this picture," I agree unhesitatingly with the reviewer in the N. Y. Morning Telegraph, who says: "It is gratifying to be able to recommend 'DRIVEN' as one of the finest pictures we have ever seen!"

: : : : "THE CHECK-UP" : : : :

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third, the number who considered it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who considered it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

Teachers Are Shown "Trailing African Wild Animals"

Seattle, Wash.—Because of the educational angle of the picture, Manager H. B. Wright of the Strand theatre recently admitted all school teachers free of charge to performances of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's "Trailing African Wild Animals."

Letters were sent out to the teachers and educators of the city telling in a few pointed paragraphs all about the picture and urging that it be attended. The teachers were admitted at any time merely by applying at the box office and presenting their credentials.

Another idea used in the exploitation was the special morning matinee plan for children. The opening Saturday of the engagement, a special performance was given at 10 A. M. to which all children of the city were welcomed.

In the advertising, both newspaper and billboard, done for the "Trailing Big Game" picture, Manager Wright compared the film to a circus and advertised it as being "bigger than the biggest and best circus on earth."

The theatre lobby during the run was decorated to resemble an African jungle, and the effect was heightened by the use of stuffed animals, lion and tiger skins, African native spears and weapons and other tropical implements.

Contest Angle is Gotten in Co-operative "Flirt" Ad

GALVESTON, TEXAS.—Manager Charles E. Sasseen of the Queen theatre obtained a full-page tie-up with the Galveston merchants on "The Flirt."

The winner of this contest was to clip from each ad appearing on the page a part of the cut of Eileen Percy and to paste these pieces together to make a composite picture. This contest resulted in considerable publicity for the theatre and the management received numerous replies. The winners were announced at a later date in the newspapers, which again furnished additional publicity.

Two local book stores furnished window displays on the novel and also announced the picture at the Queen.

New Publicity Angle Found on "Voice from the Minaret"

SHREVEPORT, LA.—A new publicity angles on "The Voice From the Minaret" was found by the Saenger theatre which resulted in valuable newspaper space.

Sensing the religious background of the title, the theatre's press representative got busy and did some research work. He trailed "The Voice" back to antiquity and found out where it came from.

In this he had the cooperation of G. A. Haddad, owner and importer of Persian rugs in Shreveport, who knew the countries of the Near East from extensive travel and personal experience. Mr. Haddad was quoted by the Shreveport Journal in an extensive illustrated article on "The Origin of 'The Voice from the Minaret.'"

Resemblance Contest Used to Exploit "Tess"

DAYTON, Ohio—A Dayton girl recently won a prize of $20 in gold for looking more like Mary Pickford than any other girl in the city. And she had a lot of competition, at that, for 27 other girls qualified in this contest under the auspices of the Dayton Evening Herald, which ran this competition as part of an advance campaign for Miss Pickford's new production of "Tess of the Storm Country," booked by the State theatre, the theatre management joining in the tie-up.

Second place in the contest won an award of $15; third place, $10; fourth place, $5, and the next fifteen each received a pass for two to the State theatre to see "Tess of the Storm Country."

Face Powder Tie-Up Is Made on "Poor Men's Wives" Showing

Philadelphia, Pa.—When "Poor Men's Wives" opened at the Karlton theatre a distinctive exploitation tie-up was put over under the supervision of Ben Amsterdam, Al Lichtman franchise holder.

The tie-up was made possible through the co-operation of the Djer-Kiss Face Powder Company in New York. Mr. Amsterdam was supplied by them with 10,000 sample boxes of their product. The samples were tagged and labeled "Poor Men's Wives"—The Picture Beautiful, and were dated Karlton theatre, April 2 to 14.

A number of attractive young girls—all blondes—were engaged and arrayed in handsome costumes of white silk trimmed with gold. Their white caps bore the name of the feature, as did the baskets they carried. In advance of and during the run of the picture they took their places in front of the large houses of Philadelphia—the Aldine, the Stanton and the Karlton—as well as at other vantage points, where they distributed to the ladies the dainty boxes of face powder.

The stunt commanded so much public attention that it received comment in the news columns of the Philadelphia papers.

Entire Details of "Anti-Flirt" Week are Made Public

Washington, D. C.—Full details of the Anti-Flirt Week recently put over by Hattie K. Merrill, Universal exploiteress, and Ed. G. Evans, publicity director for the Rialto theatre, as an exploitation measure on "The Flirt," are now available, showing exactly how, as a Washington newspaper writer put it, "Washington was beautifully killed, stuffed, basted and done to a neat, golden brown."

Two weeks before "The Flirt" opened, Mr. Evans and Miss Merrill worked out a complete campaign that included an anti-flirt week the week before the play date of the picture. The first stunt was to get all the girls in the office together and organize an Anti-Flirt club. Changing Miss Merrill's name to Helen Brown, she elected herself secretary, and Miss Alice Reighly, cashier of the office, president; got up a list of ten flip "Don'ts of the Anti-Flirt Club" instead of rules, held a meeting at the home of Harry S. Brown, manager of the office, and proceeded to call the city editors of the newspapers and tell them that a group of Washington girls had organized a club to fight the masher and automobile flirt. She also stated that these girls were planning an anti-flirt week in which all the women's clubs and organizations would be asked to co-operate by discussing the subject of flirting during the anti-flirt week.

The editors bit, "hook, line and sinker." That day, at the meeting of the newly organ-

Donation of $10 Wins Space on "Glimpses of the Moon"

ERIE, PA.—Front page space for Bebe Daniels' picture was gotten in the local daily recently by the Columbia theatre at a cost of $10.

Erie is trying to raise a fund for a stadium and the Columbia theatre thought it the better part of patriotism to contribute $10. But with the aid of A-Mike Vogel, Paramount exploiter, they decided to turn the liberality into big publicity for "The Glimpses of the Moon."

Vogel framed it with a correspondent in the South to have a wire sent from Miami, Fla., where Miss Daniels is known to be, making a contribution and working the title and the theatre into the telegram.

The paper fell for it and printed a two-column cut of the Paramount star, together with a big story.

ized Anti-Flirt club, every paper was represented by a reporter and photographer. Banners, pennants and buttons, all bearing the slogan "Anti-Flirt Week" were previously made for the express purpose of having pictures taken with them, and the photographers fell for the idea nobly.

The 5:30 edition of every evening paper that day carried large photos of the girls and stories of the Anti-Flirt club on its front page. It was followed up the next day by the morning papers, and thereafter until the opening of the picture, publicity on the "Anti-Flirts" were carried daily in all of the Washington papers. The Evening Star, one of the most conservative papers in the country, bit so hard that in addition to the regular front page news story of the anti-flirt organization they carried a four-column cut of the "Anti-Flirt Club," following it up the next day with a cartoon about the anti-flirts by Berryman, the famous cartoonist, again on its front page.

As if this were not enough, Representative Manuel Herriek, congressman from Oklahoma, played right into the hands of the publicity hounds by sending in a letter to "Miss Helen Brown, Secretary," stating his approval of the movement and asking to address the girls at their next meeting. His invitation was grabbed up immediately and a "special meeting" was called at the home of "Miss Brown" for the purpose of hearing Mr. Herriek's views on the subject.

Department Store Gives Choice Window to "The Christian"

Wheeling, W. Va.—Despite the fact that the window space of department stores is in heavy demand for fashion displays the week before Easter, Goldwynner William N. Robson induced Stone & Thomas to give their best window to a display on "The Christian," in connection with its showing at the Court theatre.

The department store was sold on the idea through the big display which Robson obtained in Baltimore at the Hochschild, Kohn & Co. department store, which had been arranged by one of the best window dressers in the business, and where for the first time a well-known trimmer had not only mixed merchandise but placed books in an important window. Stone & Thomas followed suit by giving to "The Christian" the biggest book display that the store had ever made. Half a dozen other book stores in the business district of Wheeling also gave displays for "The Christian."

A tie-up was made with the educational authorities by which 5,000 souvenir book marks were distributed to pupils in the public schools.

"Safety Last" Is Tied Up with No Accident Week in Ads

Springfield, Mass.—The management of the Broadway theatre utilized an excellent angle in their advertising campaign on "Safety Last" when they tied up with No Accident Week.

These ads were introduced by the following proclamation:

"Hear ye! Hear ye! To the People of the City of Springfield: Whereas, His Honor, Edwin F. Leonard, Mayor of the City of Springfield, did proclaim the period from April 22 to April 28, inclusive, as 'No Accident Week,' and has called upon its citizens to render whole-hearted co-operation to this worthy cause, and that every man, woman and child observe the precept, 'Don't Get Hurt.'

"Now, therefore, the Broadway theatre summons you to appear for jury duty the week starting Sunday, April 22 (No Accident Week), to sit in judgment for one hour and fifteen minutes in the case of one Harold Lloyd, who is charged with disregarding His Honor's worthy proclamation and deliberately practices carelessness and subjects himself to thrilling and perilous undertakings and foolishly risks his life by his own acts and deeds in 'Safety Last.'"

Local pride is further appealed to with the line: "First time anywhere in Mass. (Springfield Sees It Before Boston.)"

Telephone Teaser Stunt is Worked on "Kick In"

FORT WORTH, TEXAS—Manager Barry Burke, of the Palace theatre, advertised "Kick In" with teaser ads reading: "Telephone Lamar 7278 before you 'Kick In.'"

These were scattered throughout the pages of the newspapers one week before play date. As a result of these teaser ads the Palace theatre's telephone was kept constantly busy by people who wanted to know what they were supposed to do before they "Kicked In." Mr. Burke instructed his employees to explain that "Kick In" was a wonderful picture and to advise everyone to see it at the Palace next week.

Special Lobby Display for "Money, Money, Money"

TAMPA, FLA.—Manager Frost, of the Strand theatre prepared a special lobby display on "Money, Money, Money," that looked very much like the real thing.

There were great sacks of money (at least it said money on the outside in big red letters), all stacked up against the windows of the box office. Fastened to wires, and suspended all over the lobby were bills, some of the yellowback, and some of the greenback variety. Hundreds of them, waving in the breeze. Though they were of the kind known as "stage money," but at the distance they looked like the real thing.

Novel Prologue and Lobby for "Bella Donna"

TAMPA, FLA.—John B. Carroll, manager of the Victory theatre, gave "Bella Donna" some effective advertising, a novel lobby and a prologue.

For his lobby he used an Arabian tent, of the red and white striped cloth, with life-sized cut-outs of the Egyptian Prince and Bella Donna in her Egyptian costume, inside the tent. Streamers and pennants were draped about the lobby, giving it the real desert caravan atmosphere.

For the prologue he had a special drop made of a desert scene. This was used for the background, with a handsome cut-out palm tree drop hung in front. Edward Kane, who has earned quite a reputation here for his voice, dressed in typical Egyptian costume and sang an Egyptian dream song. The lighting effects were special.

School Tie-Up Is Obtained in Campaign on "Lorna Doone"

Tampa, Fla.—Manager Robert C. Frost, of the Strand theatre, sold 200 tickets to the four high schools in the city to be used by them as special merit prizes for the week "Lorna Doone" was showing. On the day that the picture commenced, Mr. Frost went to each of the schools and secured permission from the principals to make a short talk at the chapel services about the picture. In this talk he stressed the story, mentioning that it was one of the classics and had probably been read by all the school children. He told them that the picture was a careful picturization of the book and followed it very closely. All of the school children in town were reached this way.

A book store tie-up was secured. Several weeks in advance this store ordered 200 copies of the book autographed by Madge Bellamy. They put on a big window display, and succeeded in selling all of the copies before the show opened, and were forced to reorder.

"Lost and Found" Showing Is Given Varied Campaign

New York, N. Y.—The exploitation campaign for the showing of "Lost and Found" at the Capitol theatre, conducted by Eddie Bonns, manager of exploitation for Goldwyn, and W. W. Ferguson, of the headquarters staff, centered upon a series of novel accessories.

A long herald, resembling a circus herald, printed on straw-colored paper, was used freely and proved a real business "go-getter." This herald was headed "1,000 Thrills in this photoplay of tropical beauty, romance, passion, mystery. The first genuine South Sea picture. Actual scenes taken on beautiful Tahiti, the paradise of nature's own garden." Circus style of wording was maintained throughout the herald, which was illustrated with cuts of a native girl dancing the Hula Hula and another of the heroine surprised while taking a dip in a shady inland pool.

"The White Flower" Tied Up with Hawaiian Tours

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. — Wayland H. Taylor, Paramount exploiter, executed a tie-up on "The White Flower" which may be copied by exhibitors in many cities in the western part of the United States, when he tied up the Matson Navigation Company, which operates the largest steamship line to the Hawaiian Islands where the picture was made.

This company got up a four-page folder illustrated in colors extolling the beauties of the great American territory and linking up with stills from the picture and distributed them to their extensive mailing list.

The company also printed up an announcement which was sent to every exhibitor in the 'Frisco and Los Angeles territories telling them how to link up with tours to the islands. Every one of the Matson agency windows were available to exhibitors.

Another novelty was a small leather change purse containing a small "pearl," two keys and two free admission tickets to the showing of "Lost and Found" at the Capitol. This purse was "Lost" in the shopping district and ads inserted in the "Lost" columns of the daily newspapers asking the finder to return the pearl and the keys to the manager of the theatre and to retain the tickets as a reward.

A small "Lost and Found" picture puzzle, printed on white paper about four by six inches, was distributed in shops and offices in the theatrical district. The first hundred persons to take the puzzle, with the lost girl correctly outlined, to the box office received free admission tickets.

Another accessory that was a distinct novelty and assured a careful reading was a Police Department report of missing persons blank, filled out with a description of a girl purporting to be Lorna Blackbird. A drawn portrait of Pauline Starke as Lorna was reproduced in one corner. Below the picture was the line, "For further particulars visit the Capitol theatre, beginning Sunday, March 18."

Newspaper Clippings Are Used on "Bella Donna" Ballyhoo

Erie, Pa.—Manager Nate Wagner, of the Perry theatre, and A-Mike Vogel, Paramount exploiter, sold Pola Negri first and "Bella Donna" incidentally in an unusual street ballyhoo which they prepared. They fixed over a four-panel three-sheet board and pasted up all the newspaper clippings of Pola Negri's arrival in America that could be found.

The usual place for such a display is the lobby, but they engaged a man to shoulder the box-like contrivance and walk through the streets. He stopped at various intersections, gave a little talk, and soon had a crowd trying to read the clippings.

The song, "Bella Donna," now in the music stores, brought six big windows for the theatre. Four windows were secured for the novel, and the managers of two of the stores were given fanfotos to hand out with each purchase.

Ties Up with Circus to Boost Competing Run of "Nero"

Macon, Ga.—Spark's Circus, which wintered in Macon, opened on the same day that "Nero" did at the Rialto. Manager Kingman knew what circus day in Macon would mean to business in his line, so to safeguard himself and to get the best out of the circus that he could, a tie-up was arranged with them.

A 15x6-foot banner was erected in the main tent over the bandstand and in full view of everybody. The ringmaster stopped the show and announced "Nero" as "Macon's greatest amusement value," and "one of the most spectacular productions in motion picture history." This announcement was made at both performances. An automobile with banners announcing the attraction, joined in the middle of the big parade; this advertised to easily 50,000 people. In the menagerie a one-sheet card, reading: "See this lion (or whatever the animal was) in Nero, etc.," was tacked on the animal cages.

Heralds on "Nero" were distributed to the crowds lined up to see the parade, the theatre was opened an hour early to catch the crowd between the parade and the circus, two other instances where he cashed in on the circus.

"Fighting Blood" is Gotten Onto Recruiting Posters

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—A tie-up with the U. S. Army recruiting service has resulted in valuable free billboard space for the Granada theatre on the "Fighting Blood" series.

The stunt put over by the theatre was to furnish the army recruiting station with one-sheets calling on the young men to display their "Fighting Blood" and join the army. The question of actual bill posting was taken over by the army authorities who put the sheets up on their own boards and a lot of other people's boards and the proposition being a patriotic one, the sheets stayed up on the other people's boards.

The wording of the sheet was done with apologies to K. C. B. and was written in the one line style.

Manager's Endorsement Used in "Safety Last" Ads

DETROIT, MICH.—The newspaper ads used by the Adams theatre on "Safety Last" included the following boxed announcement:

"I have seen every great comedy since motion pictures began. This is the best."
(Signed) John H. Kunsky."

Another wrinkle in the Adams' advertising displays was a boxed quotation of Harold Lloyd's telegram denying a critic's suggestion of "double exposure" as accounting for his big thrill stunts in the picture.

Match Books Used to Exploit "The Eternal Flame"

LONDON, ENGLAND.—American exploitation men were so busy using the three-foot candles to exploit "The Eternal Flame," that the fitness of matches apparently never occurred to them, but English exhibitors have grabbed the match idea as well to put over the picture. Small books of match sticks, the same as are given out at every cigar store, were distributed with "The Eternal Flame" on the stem of each match. Then to cap the climax the front cover read: "Matchless Norma Talmadge in 'The Eternal Flame.'"

The idea is especially adaptable if a space is left on the cover to print in the theatre's name and the play dates.

Fifty Women Given Passes in Stunt on "The Christian"

Mount Vernon, Wash.—An expensive exploitation stunt that created a lot of talk was used by Manager O. O. Ruth, of the Mission theatre, and Goldwynner L. W. Barelay for "The Christian."

A tie-up was made with the Golden Rule Department store. Fifty envelopes carrying "Christian" advertising and containing passes were placed on the counters of the Golden Rule. On each was the name of a woman picked at random from the directory. The Golden Rule in its newspaper advertising called attention to this, and invited women to come to the store, find their names and help themselves to the envelope designated for them.

Forty boys were given cards, carrying advertising on "The Christian," and space for 20 names and addresses. They distributed heralds, and each person receiving a herald signed the card, certifying that they had been notified of the coming of the picture. This put over not only the picture itself, but furnished a valuable mailing list for future use.

Manager Tom Weiss of the Alhambra theatre, Stamford, Conn., obtained this attractive millinery store window for "When Knighthood Was in Flower"

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"From the Windows of My House"

(Educational—One Reel)

THIS is a Robert Bruce scenic—one of the series of Wilderness Tales—that appeals to the imagination as well as to the eye. The basic theme of the subject is the search of a restless soul for an earthly habitat that will satisfy its innate craving for beauty, peace and contentment. The opening title establishes in the mind of the spectator what is at once the purpose and spirit of the subject. The pictorial groups that follow fall into three classes, each representative of a distinct type of setting. First are shown the mountains with their snow-capped peaks, their grotesque draperies of billowy clouds and their tall, straight trees bending to the storm blasts. But the restlessness of the wanderer finds no calm here. The windows of his house must overlook broad, fertile valleys. Bruce then treats the eye to glimpses of pretty lowland settings, "a nearby lake glistening in the sunlight," and the broad river coursing its way through the distant valley. But the fickle soul is still without rest. He must settle where he "can watch the great rollers crashing against the rocks." The onslaught of the ocean's tides against cliff and beach are then depicted in a series of beautiful photographic shots. The subtitles, highly appropriate and reflecting at times the touch of a genuine poet, are a feature of the reel. Here is a subject that will lend a note of dignity to any program.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Exit Stranger"

(Educational—Two Reels)

CLIFF BOWES and Virginia Vance take the principal roles in this subject, which has to do with the efforts of an irate father to remove his daughter from the attention of an ardent suitor and the equally persistent attempts of the latter to defeat father's plans. Most of the action takes place aboard a small steamer and consists principally in the pursuit of the hero by the officers and members of the crew. The chase leads the fugitive and his pursuers all over the decks of the vessel, down hatchways and ventilators, in and out of cabins, and up the ship's rigging. Cliff Bowes in the role of the suitor, who will not be denied a place at his lady's side, is called upon to demonstrate considerable acrobatic ability at times, though the action for the most part is stereotyped, as is to be expected in a subject whose footage is taken up so much by the chase element. A highlight of the action is a beautiful high dive made by Bowes from the bow of the vessel in his escape from the ship to join his sweetheart on the shore. There is nothing much of a novel appeal in this one as most of the gags and stunts have been seen before, but the action is decidedly fast and furious in spots, and Bowes and Miss Vance make the best of their opportunities. The former gets in some especially effective work. The titles for the most part are fair.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Wings of the Storm"

(Range Rider-Pathe—Two Reels)

THIS Leo Maloney western, written and directed by Maloney and Ford Beebe, tells a simple story of the range in a very interesting manner and shows Maloney off to the usual good advantage as the hero. It is replete with fast riding and action and moves along at a pace guaranteed to satisfy the most exacting.

Maloney is nothing if not heroic. He would be a welcome addition anywhere from where the west begins to where it ends. He acts convincingly, however, and his roles invariably carry a thrill.

As the ranger in this picture he masquerades as an escaped convict bearing a handcuff on one wrist. He is seeking to avenge the cowardly shooting of a friend, and through a hunch, of course, enters the abode of the cowardly outlaws. As they discover him in the blacksmith shop endeavoring to free himself from the horseshoe they readily make him one of the gang. The latter attempt to doublecross him and turn him up for the real murderer, thereby gaining the reward.

Through a clever ruse and by the assistance of the girl and the use of the telephone on a stormy night a thrilling climax is staged. Just as the murderer defiantly confesses his crime, on the discovery that Maloney is a ranger, and as it seems apparent the outlaws may collect the reward, the officers arrive and the hero cleverly clears himself and turns over the guilty gang. It's fairly exciting from start to finish.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"The Science of Life"

(Series of Twelve One Reelers—Bray)

"THE Science of Life" is the general title given to the Bray series of one-reel sex hygiene films which were made under the supervision of the Surgeon General of the U. S. Government Public Health Service. The subject should be on every exhibitor's program since it was designed as a course of visual instruction, the first ever produced, incidentally, covering general biology, communicable diseases, and personal hygiene. The Bray forces, the Surgeon General are his co-workers and the exhibitors who show "The Science of Life" are performing a real service toward the betterment of health of the human race. The subject has been treated so clearly that it will be understood by everyone who has reached the age of adolescence. Biology, for example, which sound so forbidding, is made as simple as "A B C," and as interesting as a good story.

The one reelers include "Personal Hygiene for Men," and "Personal Hygiene for Women," and naturally cannot be shown to mixed audiences. Sex questions are explained and visualized in a most comprehensive manner, showing as they do the functions of the different internal glands and organs. They also touch upon the various diseases and the result of children born of diseased parents. Special showings for men and for women should be of great benefit in distributing this sort of information.—LAURENCE REID.

"Traffic"

(Educational—Two Reels)

THE mishaps that befall a suburban commuter en route to his office in the morning is the subject-matter of this comedy. Jimmie Adams is seen in the role of the commuter. The exodus of the suburbanites dashing for the early special to the big city starts the action. In the big town the densely packed trolley-car is brought into play with Jimmie confronted by the task of getting a toe-hold on the overloaded trolley. Nothing original here: there is the same fat woman who takes up three ordinary seats, the same inept motorman who piles the passengers forward every time he stops the car abruptly, and the orthodox business of Jimmie hanging on by another passenger's suspenders until they snap.

The action picks up considerably when Jimmie is shown trying to cross a busy street and getting badly tangled up in the traffic that shoots by him on every side. An original touch is introduced here: Jimmie buys an odd-looking contrivance built of circular bands of heavy wire with a place in the center for the operator. Ensnared in this vehicular "push-ball" Jimmie undertakes to compete with the traffic. The result is that he is sent spinning hither and thither as car after car collides with the globe-like vehicle, which finally comes to ruin when squashed between tow autos.

Meanwhile at the office Jimmie's sweetheart (Virginia Vance) has been turning back the office clock to nine o'clock every half-hour to circumvent the boss, who has decreed Jimmie's discharge if he does not get in by the dot of nine. Jimmie arrives but is fired when the boss learns that it is five p. m. instead of nine a. m. He is taken back, however, on the condition that he is early every morning for a week. The fade-out shows him preparing to sleep on the top of his desk after directing central to ring him at six a. m.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"The Barnyard"

(Semon Comedy-Vitagraph—Two Reels)

AS usual this Larry Semon comedy is dependent upon lively action to put it over. This comedian does not believe in standing still and "The Barnyard" certainly keeps him on the jump with a sufficient supply of gags, some of which are fairly original. As the title indicates the comedy revolves around the rustic background where all the domestic animals are assembled. It is mostly slapstick with a deal of footage given up to showing a various group of characters receiving a coating of whitewash, raw eggs, paint, molasses, etc.

There is considerable tumbling as is customary with the star's style of high jinks. Some new gags are introduced in a pair of shoes which seemingly dance by themselves but which the motive power is supplied by the activities of white mice; and a duckling who gets "hooched" upon home-brew. The finish discloses a race between an aeroplane and an automobile which is quite thrilling. The star wrote the story and directed it. Should satisfy any program.—LAURENCE REID.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

"Fools and Riches"

Universal—1904 Feet
(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

SINCE this is a program picture and carries a weak, trite and obvious story one must not indict it as impossible. It will have its clientele in certain houses and despite its amateurish character there is doubtless some appeal in it for many picture patrons. But if one takes it seriously one is apt to be much disappointed since it is nothing but so much hokum put together to allow Herbert Rawlinson to walk or jog trot or ride from one scene to another. There are too many close-ups given him—and he still acts that awkwardness which has characterized his work the past season or two. The star has a habit of sticking his elbows out which does not make him appear at ease. He gives the impression of striving too hard to please instead of taking things in a natural manner.

The story thrusts him into a lively plot concerning a spendthrift son who is cured by his father in a novel way—the only novel note incidentally. He tosses twenty dollar gold pieces aside with careless abandon. His dad picks one up and buries it in the backyard and leaves a will which leaves him half his estate. When the boy's finances run short, he digs up the box, discovers the gold piece and a letter which informs him that the rest of his property had been earned since he has learned to appreciate the value of money. The old man also gives his compliments towards a little gold-digger who is in collusion with an oily villain to rid the youth of his gold. The letter says that probably he has given the pearl necklace to the girl, but it is only a cheap imitation of the original which may be found elsewhere.

The plot is burdened with incident concerning the fatal papers—and much evil villainy is abroad before the plot reaches its orthodox conclusion. There is even a fight staged between the hero and the arch-conspirator—and it is presented in a room full of company. Why must directors ever show up men in evening clothes indulging in the fisticuffs of a bar-room? Tully Marshall, who gives the best performance, has a short time in the picture, and Kathryn Perry, as the heroine who plays the ward of the old man, has little opportunity to do anything else but look pretty.

The Cast

Jimmy Dorgan.....Herbert Rawlinson
Nellie Blye.....Katherine Perry
John Dorgan.....Tully Marshall
Bernice Lorraine.....Doris Pawn
Dick McCann.....Arthur S. Hull
Frasconi.....Nickolai De Ruiz
By Frederick Jackson. Scenario by Charles Kenyon and George C. Hull. Directed by Herbert Blache.

The Story—Treats of the spendthrift son of a rich father who earned his fortune through steady application to hard work. The old man dies and leaves a legacy which does not prove to be as large as the son imagined. However, there is a string attached to the estate, for a letter advises him to dig in the soil of the back yard and get the box which contains the gold piece the youth threw away. He digs for it when he becomes broke and discovers that the other half of the fortune is awaiting him.

Classification—Character study of youth who learns to appreciate the value of money. Romance and adventure.

Production Highlights—The novel twist in the story when the old man hides the gold piece in the ground. The good staging.

Exploitation Angles—The title might come in for a teaser campaign. Also emphasize the value of money.

Drawing Power—Will possibly please in the cheaper program theatres.

A scene from Universal's forthcoming Jewel production of the Russian revolution, "Bavu," being directed by Stuart Paton.

"Spawn of the Desert"

Arrow—4500 Feet

THIS western is cut to a familiar pattern and is easily anticipated throughout the length of its action, but because it keeps moving at an adequate pace and furnishes a fair amount of suspense—and because the spectator must not demand too much from this type of story, it is certain to prove moderately interesting to the steady patron who must have picture entertainment at all costs.

"Spawn of the Desert" tells a tale of a wanderer who comes across a mysterious hermit in the desert. The latter is searching for the man who destroyed his home years before. The plot then guides the hero into the town where he encounters the bad man who presides over its destinies. There he meets and falls in love with the rascal's daughter. This complicates matters since he learns that the villain is the enemy of the hermit. The action becomes rather hectic here and furnishes its suspenseful moment when the bad man meets his death at the hands of the hermit. The girl proves to be the daughter of the old man and the young people are made happy.

William Fairbanks, who plays the role of the wanderer, acts in his customary vigorous manner and his support is competent enough. The story has been fairly well adapted so that the interest is well sustained. The idea may be familiar, yet it carries sufficient kick to please most of the boys and a few of the girls. The production has been staged right out in the open country, and the atmosphere is a point in its favor.

"The Lonely Road"

First National—5102 Feet
(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

IN spite of the fact that this is about the seventh time this plot has been put in screen form, Victor Schertzinger has directed this one into a fairly entertaining feature. It is unfortunate that Miss MacDonald has fallen victim to so many mediocre stories. This vehicle again discusses the subject taken up in "Money, Money, Money," a former film starring the beauty—only here it is from a trifle different angle.

"The Lonely Road," takes a lively wallop at husbands who "salt" all the coin for their own use, or use it for the happiness of everyone but their better halves. If you book this one and you should if your patrons like Miss MacDonald, go after the women and tell them that here is one they should insist that their hubby take them to see.

A new leading man is introduced here. There seems to have been a demand for new faces on the screen. Why? Well, be that as it may, here we have Orville Caldwell. As a screen player, he overdoes his work. Miss MacDonald is still given to posings, but puts over a bit of real acting toward the end of the picture. Eugenie Besserer contributes an appealing characterization as a village gossip with a big heart.

The production has been adequately mounted. There are moments dramatic now and then. Here we have a story starting out with a wedding instead of ending with it, although, to tell the truth, there is a wedding at each end. Two of the old folks "get spliced" just before the faedout. The battle between the husband and the physician is well done and there is some real heart appeal in the scenes in which the husband sees his folly in "beating up" the man who has saved his son from being a cripple for life. The interiors throughout are attractive. There are some good Christmas scenes. A fair MacDonald picture.

The Cast

Betty Austin.....Katherine MacDonald
Warren Wade.....Orville Caldwell
Leila Mead.....Kathleen Kirkham
Martha True.....Eugenie Besserer
Dr. Devereaux.....William Conklin
Uncle Billy.....James Neill
Stewart Bartley.....Frank Leigh
Hiram Wade.....Charles French

By Charles Logue. Scenario by Lois Zellner. Directed by Victor Schertzinger. Photographed by Joseph Brotherton.

The Story—Deals with lack of romance in the life of a woman for whom her husband never has any time—or money. An accident which threatens to cripple their son for life brings the husband to a realization of his shortcomings and in the end the wife takes charge of the exchequer. The son is cured by a noted specialist and all ends happily.

Classification—Some more of the eternal triangle material with a sermon for tight-wad husbands thrown in for good measure.

Production Highlights—The battle between the husband and the doctor when the former, jealous, rushes into the latter's home and finds his wife in the doctor's arms. The accident in which the child is injured.

Exploitation Angles—The title. The star. The usual style window display tieup on Miss MacDonald's gowns. Plaster signs with the title along the roads leading into town with the name of your theatre underneath. Get the women of prominence in your city to start a newspaper discussion on the advisability of eliminating the "gimme" part of a wife's career and then invite some of the ladies' clubs to the theatre for a private screening.

Drawing Power—Might go for a last half of the week run in the downtown houses.

"Temporary Marriage"

Sacramento-Principal Pictures—6500 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE problem of maintaining happiness in the home when a couple have approached or passed the dangerous age of forty and one or the other refuses to bow to the advancing years, but would keep alive the spark of romance is the theme of this picture which must be catalogued as an interesting domestic drama. What transpires in the action of the offering could reasonably happen except for the convenient touch of permitting an innocent youth to be arrested for murder without investigating the crime. The story is told in a compact way and as it progresses one feels the tension of the central situation when the youth is on trial to spare the name of his fiancée and her erring mother from having their names dragged through the mire of scandal and with the stigma of disgrace hanging over them.

Here we have the idle, restless wife and mother who selfishly pursues her whims toward keeping up appearances. She indicts her husband as a "slow poke" because he reconciles himself to the advancing years and leaves romance alone. The wife on the other hand indulges in a lot of beauty treatment and considerable flirtations. In other words she has reached the dangerous age of forty and refuses to admit that she is growing old. On the eve of divorce she is caught in a net of intrigue and before she is brought to her senses tragedy stalks across her path.

The picture is quite convincing and points a moral which will be appreciated by most every member of the household. You may call it the eternal triangle but the author has injected several novel touches and Lambert Hillyer, the director, has attended to the rest. He has staged an interesting climax which features a courtroom scene. It is the detail attendant upon the identity of the murderer which furnishes the suspense. The spectator may be able to put his hand on the culprit, but the many highlights in the prosecution of the case will hold his interest. Particularly good is the fine work of Tully Marshall as the outraged husband who defends the boy and saves his wife's honor after she has foolishly allowed herself to be intrigued. The jealous mistress of the philanderer confesses to the crime and the wife realizing that she can't turn back the years, is reconciled to her husband. The picture is well directed and staged and furnishes effective drama.

The Cast

By Gilbert Patten. Directed by Lambert Hillyer. Produced by Sacramento Film Corp. Released by Principal Pictures Corp.

The Story—Wife refuses to allow herself to grow old. She is provoked at her husband, whom she calls a "slow poke." She starts proceedings for a divorce and becomes intrigued in a scandal which ends in the murder of the man who would dishonor her. Her daughter's fiancée assumes the guilt and her husband defends him. He establishes his wife's innocence and solves the crime and the unhappy couple are reunited.

Classification—Domestic drama.

Production Highlights—The sterling work by Tully Marshall and Myrtle Steadman. The good direction. The excellent staging. The courtroom scene. The details of the murder.

Exploitation Angles—Picture lends itself to exploitation through theme and cast. Play up the players, and get out a campaign on title and theme, emphasizing the dangerous age of forty.

Drawing Power—Suitable for practically all first-run theatres. Should prove a good bet with feminine audiences.

"Trifling With Honor"

Universal-Jewel—7785 Feet

IT'S a neat character study which Universal offers in this magazine story by William Slavín McNutt, whose sport fiction has earned him a wide popularity. This is a different sort of crook redemption drama in that it doesn't rely so much upon a spiritual note or the element of pathos. Instead it merely shows a young jailbird determined to go straight without the strings of romance attached to him. Nevertheless there is a dominant romantic element interwoven in the story.

The picture opens with the convict being paroled and turning up in his cheap neighborhood to discover that his mother is dead. He sees the hearse passing down the street and after the landlord has dispossessed his father the hero takes a turn in the affair and assaults him. Thus he is arrested again and sentenced to prison as a menace to society. However, he escapes from the officers, and makes a getaway through his sweetheart furnishing him with the necessary money for railroad fare. Then he bobs up as a professional baseball player and becomes nationally famous through his ability to pound out home-runs. A news syndicate writes up his life and this compels him to go the straight and narrow. But his prowess with the bat and the fact that he is idealized by the youth of the land is sufficient to make him a figure of redemption.

For the purposes of conflict a party of gamblers would suggest that he throw a ball game or two. They have something on him and he knows it. Yet he plays the game square and in the climax when victory hangs upon his big bat he turns apparent defeat into complete victory by the nifty score of three to two. Trust a director to make the most of the situation—what with two men out, two on bases, the last half of the ninth and the home-run king at bat! The girl who he left five years previously comes back into his life and has sufficient confidence in his redemption to forgive him and renew her affection. And the hero returns to the judge who sentenced him and in a spirit of generosity allows him his freedom—declaring he is more valuable to the boys of the nation who idealize him rather than a convict behind prison bars.

The role is played by Rockcliffe Fellows, who is an excellent type for the character and he gives a first rate performance.

It is a well told story, admirably staged and directed, saturated with incident and capitably acted. But it needs to be shortened.

The Cast

Gas Pipe Kid } Rockcliffe Fellows
Bat Shugrue }
Ida Hunt.....Fritzi Ridgeway
Jimmy Hunt.....Buddy Messinger
Kelsey Lewis.....Hayden Stevenson
Judge Drury.....Emmett King
Warden.....William Welsh

The Kid's father.....William Robert Daly
Murray Jessop.....Jim Farley
Dud Adams.....Sydney De Grey
Jimmy, at eight years.....John Hutton
By William Slavín McNutt. Scenario by Frank Beresford and Raymond L. Schrock. Directed by Harry A. Pollard.

The Story—Treats of a young man, a product of slums, who is paroled from prison and rearrested upon the next day for assaulting the man who dispossessed his mother. He escapes from the officers and becomes nationally famous as a home-run hitter in baseball. The reporters write the story of his life and he goes straight. Efforts are made to blackmail him into being crooked, but he lives up to his honesty and wins back the affection of his old sweetheart.

Classification—Human interest story of a crook's reformation.

Production Highlights—The good types. The adaptability of Rockcliffe Fellows for the hero role. The baseball scene. The prison scene. The shots of the hero when he returns home.

Exploitation Angles—Good for all second-class downtown houses.

"The Ne'er-Do-Well"

Paramount—6500 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS picture does not measure up so high in entertainment values as some other releases of Tom Meighan's. It falls far short of "Back Home and Broke," which is the feature with which all of his other expressions must be compared. The trouble with "The Ne'er-Do-Well" is its obviousness—its episodic treatment and the fact that it sort of drags its way along without releasing much vitality or sparkle. In the first place the idea is really ancient, although Director Green has had the foresight to steer clear of introducing such obvious features as a South American revolution, although he has introduced some comic opera touches—such as the figure of the chief of police who is attired as if he was ready to go on with his dance.

Then again there is a romantic moment which is Pollyannaish—with Meighan and Lila Lee as a Panamanian senorita acting coyful around a huge tree—which resembles a stage property. The story is fairly well tied together but there isn't much plot. Meighan is simply the spendthrift son of a rich father who is shanghaied by his parent and sent to Panama to be moulded into a man. The pater has tired of his easy-going son whose chief delight is spending money and becoming liquored. After a good cabaret scene which carries some neat comedy, the youth gets intoxicated and awakes to find himself on the high seas. Then the picture subsequently shows him making good.

There is some comedy relief furnished by a blackface comedian, who has altogether too much latitude in the opus—and one scene is irritating because it presents an angry husband insulting the hero at a banquet. Men in evening clothes resorting to the habits of drunken delinquents in a saloon brawl does not smack of good taste. In the picture's favor is the star's easy performance, his scenes with Lila Lee and the authentic backgrounds—which have been collected at Panama. The atmosphere is perfect and it has been staged with an eye upon the local color.

But once in Panama City, the hero wanders about from one scene to another, getting a job or two, falling in love and finding himself vamped by the angry husband's wife who would divorce her spouse for his sake. The story has been often picturized under one disguise or another, but the author's name and the star's popularity will put it over.

The Cast

Kirk Anthony.....Thomas Meighan
Chiquita.....Lila Lee
Edith Cortlandt.....Gertrude Astor
Stephen Cortlandt.....John Milton
Andres Garavel.....Gus Weinberg
Ramon Alfarez.....Sid Smith
Clifford.....George O'Brien
Allen Allan.....Jules Cowles
Runnels.....Laurence Wheat
By Rex Beach. Scenario by Louis Stevens. Directed by Alfred Green.

The Story—Treats of a young spendthrift who is disowned by his father for his indolence. The parent causes him to be shanghaied and carried to Panama. The youth finds himself there, makes good in a railroad position and falls in love with general's daughter. Is forgiven by father and all ends well.

Classification—Romantic, adventure drama concerning spendthrift son who makes good.

Production Highlights—The authentic exteriors. The color and atmosphere. The good performance by cast. The cabaret scene.

Exploitation Angles—The fame of the book which has been widely read. The tie-up with bookdealers on Beach's novels. The star's popularity. The exteriors. The cabaret scene which could be duplicated if you care to go in for an extensive prologue.

Drawing Power—Celebrated novel and popular star will put it over everywhere. Good for any house whether in cities or small towns.

"Within the Law"

First National—8034 Feet

BAYARD VEILLER'S crook melodrama which established Jane Cowl as an emotional actress and which made a tremendous hit upon the stage has finally reached the screen as a Norma Talmadge vehicle and it is the best picture she has had in a long time. For one thing it has a real plot and its characters are genuine and it has been adapted and directed with emphasis ever placed upon its crackling action and suspense. From the moment that Mary Turner is railroaded to prison and emerges after a term of three years with vengeance against the man who had her sent up the river, it strikes deep at the emotions and keeps the spectator at strict attention.

There is keen sympathy for the pitiful figure of the shop girl who is wrongly accused of theft. There is disgust for the smug proprietor who had her sentenced as an example that others in his employment might keep to the straight and narrow. And when Mary comes forth and enters into a silent partnership with Aggie Lynch, who also went into retirement up the river, determined to mulct old men of their money through their foolish love letters—to keep within the law and make the hypocritical merchant pay and pay and pay, the spectator is with her.

This crook melodrama is flavored with typical local color as it pertains to the battle of wits between the crooks and the minions of the law. It is highly interesting—this incident, particularly the conflict that is waged between the wily inspector on one side and Mary Turner and Joe Garson on the other. The girl strikes pay dirt to be sure—strikes it through the son of the proprietor with whom she falls in love. Thus she has a bigger conflict on her hands—whether to give up her plan of vengeance or go through with it. The father realizes bitterly that they have taken away her number and that that she has taken his name—and the climax brings forth that Mary has a big heart as well as a nimble brain.

It is a splendid adaptation, identical with the stage version and fully as interesting in the skillful hands of Frank Lloyd, the director, and Norma Talmadge, the star. She has ample opportunities to demonstrate her emotional gifts even though she doesn't resort to tears as did Jane Cowl upon the stage. This acting throughout is excellent and more than excellent as contributed by Lew Cody as Joe Garson, the crook who loved the girl, but lost her. His confession of killing a stool pigeon is a real flash of talent. Another good portrayal is offered by DeWitt Jennings as the inspector. He looks genuine and is always in character. The picture is finely titled—each expression fitting the scenes and figures without over-stressing them.

The Cast

Mary Turner	Norma Talmadge
Joe Garson	Lew Cody
Dick Gilder	Jack Mulhall
Aggie Lynch	Eileen Percy
Edward Gilder	Joseph Kilgour
Demarest	Arthur S. Hull
Helen Morris	Helen Ferguson
Cassidy	Lincoln Plummer
General Hastings	Thomas Ricketts
Irwin	Lionel Belmore
English Eddie	Ward Crane
Darcy	Eddie Boland
Gilder's secretary	Catherine Murphy
Burke	DeWitt Jennings

By Bayard Veiller. Scenario by Frances Marion. Directed by Frank Lloyd.

The Story—Department store clerk is arrested for stealing and sentenced for three years, although she is innocent. She plans to ruin the proprietor who had her sent up the river. She serves her term and in her new freedom strikes it rich by always keeping just within the law. She strikes the man through his son, but at the last moment weakens.

Classification—Crook melodrama.

Production Highlights—The fine performances by Norma Talmadge, Lew Cody and DeWitt Jennings. The fine staging. The effective titles. The human appeal. The detail.

Leo Maloney in the Pathe two-reeler, "100 Per cent Nerve."

"The Rustle of Silk"

Paramount—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

"The Rustle of Silk" is an adaptation of Cosmo Hamilton's romance of a lady's maid who won the love of a member of Parliament. It is a picture of English life that has been made into an elaborate film play. Herbert Brenon's fine direction is noticeable throughout. Ouida Bergere and Sada Cowan have collaborated on the scenario which had it called for a happy ending would be flawless. The acting is excellent, with Anna Q. Nilsson coming close to grabbing the feminine honors through her work as the wife. Miss Compson is convincing as the lady's maid, while Conway Tearle is a satisfying M. P. Cyril Chadwick was an admirable selection for the British publisher and opponent of the M. P. in politics.

The reproduction of the Houses of Parliament, both inside and out, has been well done. The Russian Chauve Souris party is an elaborate set and offers a novel theme for a colorful prologue. The sets showing the Ritz hotel, London, are lavish.

The "dreams" of the heroine, in which oil paintings are shown coming to life and such, supply the "different" quality in the picture. The feature is well supplied with the dramatic and romance is spread thick throughout.

The Cast

Lola de Breze	Betty Compson
Arthur Fallaray	Conway Tearle
Blythe	Frederick Esmelton
Henry de Breze	Charles Stevenson
Lady Feo	Anna Q. Nilsson
Paul Chalfont	Cyril Chadwick

Adapted by Sada Cowan and Ouida Bergere from the novel by Cosmo Hamilton. Directed by Herbert Brenon. Photographed by James Van Trees.

The Story—Lola de Breze is an admirer of the Hon. Arthur Fallaray, M. P. He is married, but his wife has no love for him. Fate brings Lola in his household when she is given a position as maid. Given a pretty gown, Lola steals to the Ritz in the hope of getting a closeup of her hero and actually is introduced to him. Then the action speeds on, showing her subsequent discharge from the household, her following Fallaray to his country lodge and nursing him back to health. The ending shows Fallaray triumphing in politics and Lola alone in her room hoping that some day he may come to her.

Classification—A romance of English political and social life.

Production Highlights—The elaborate settings. The Chauve Souris party. The scenes at the Ritz. The fine character work on the part of all the stars. The scenes in Parliament.

Exploitation Angles—Tie up with American Legion posts on this one. Especially Disabled Veterans' branch. The title suggests a tieup on a silk display in department and style stores.

Drawing Power—Will probably pull them in anywhere—but may send them out wishing a happy ending had been put on the picture.

"Backbone"

Distinctive-Goldwyn—7500 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS picture is a curious composition in many ways. First it introduces a lavish prologue which establishes a romance during the reign of Louis XV with the ancestors of the characters in the modern story involved in much intrigue and adventure which is somewhat duplicated in the tale of the present. It has been finely produced and carries much appeal because of the careful detail to make the production rich in background.

It is the earlier chapters which are apt to prove tedious to some inasmuch as no individual scene stands forth prominently. Then the action switches to the modern tale with the background a stately old chateau occupied by a rich old man, the grandfather of the heroine, who when she visits him is not allowed to enter his room where he is supposed to be dying of a lingering illness. There is much intrigue abroad and the story is rather complicated. Some might ask why so much stress is placed upon the mystery element inasmuch as the climax doesn't warrant it once it is witnessed. It is merely a plot on foot by some treacherous employees of the old man to get his estate away from him. Although they do not kill him it is nevertheless suggested.

There are some moments when the suspense holds one in a tight embrace especially the attempts of the wily villains to make things unpleasant for the hero who buys the land adjoining the estate. The girl suspects him of evil designs until he proves his courage or rather lives up to the title. He fights for his life as well as hers and proves to her that he has acted through the wishes of the old man. Then the girl gets the keys to the grandfather's room and discovers that he has disappeared. His death preys upon the arch-conspirator who fancies he sees the old man's ghost. A dying confession from one of his hirelings establishes that the old fellow died a natural death, but that he was kept in close confinement to complicate matters for the young heiress.

The picture releases some good melodramatic punches—particularly in a thrilling fight. The atmosphere is good and the acting is first rate. The continuity is rather uneven and some may wonder over the intricacies of the plot. We think it could have been shortened and the action heightened with the prologue eliminated. Alfred Lunt makes his first screen appearance as the hero and makes a good impression. He has a good personality, but we think his forte a comedy after his memorable work in the stage production of "Clarence"—in which he played the title role.

The Cast

Yvonne	Edith Roberts
John Thorne	Alfred Lunt
Colonel Tip	Major James Doyle
Bracken	William B. Mack
Doc Roper	Frank Evans
André	L. E. La Croix
Ken	Charles Fang
The Indian	Frank Hagney
Mrs. Whidden	Marion Abbott
Constable of France	George MacQuarrie
Captain of Guards	J. W. Johnson
King	Hugh Huntley

By Clarence Budington Kelland. Directed by Edward Sloman. Produced by Distinctive.

The Story—Treats of a girl who finds her grandfather secreted away with a mysterious illness. His secretary refuses to allow her to see him. Young man appears on the scene and buys part of the estate with the girl's consent. She later learns that the youth acted through the wishes of the grandfather. He displays some "backbone" and beats his enemies and those who steal away the girl's property.

Classification—Romantic costume drama in prologue linked up with modern romance.

Production Highlights—The fine production. The careful detail. The mystery element. The good work by Alfred Lunt and William B. Mack. The costume scenes.

Exploitation Angles—Presents opportunities to cash in on titles with a campaign. Also play up author.

Drawing Power—Should appeal to intelligent audiences in first-run houses.

Charlie Babcock of the Babcock theatre, Wellsville, N. Y., came to town last week and took Basil Brady, Frank Minor and Jack Thomson to see "Shufflin' Along" at the Majestic. It set Charlie back eleven bones. But he's a jolly good fellow.

M. Cohen has resigned as manager of the Warner Brothers' exchange. Henry P. Decker, assistant general manager, has been in Buffalo. There will be no new manager until about July 1. Mr. Cohen is the third manager of the exchange since November last.

A story to the effect that the Shea Amusement Company would build a new theatre at Hertel and Delaware avenues has been denied. A north Buffalo community newspaper printed a story to the effect that plans were under way for such a house.

Arthur Lucas, district manager, and Tom Brady, branch manager at Buffalo for Goldwyn, invaded the Southern Tier last week and returned to town with Tom's ear loaded with contracts on "Souls for Sale."

M. A. Shea of Feiber & Shea visited exchanges last week booking a number of the big productions for his houses in Erie, Auburn, Jamestown and other cities.

Buffalo motion picture houses are now worrying how to get 'em in early in the evening.

Daylight saving time is in effect and folks are thinking more of motoring, golf, tennis, etc., than pictures. Who started this daylight stuff?

Harry E. Lotz, manager of the Select office, has also resigned and has been succeeded by George F. Bromley, who comes to Buffalo from Chicago, where he was general field representative for C. B. C.

There were five film people in Buffalo this week. They appeared at the Loew State. They were Marguerite Marsh, Billy West, Ethelyn Gibson, Gabriel Renaldo and Will Morrissey. Manager Al Beckerich laid down a strong publicity barrage in connection with their appearance. Shopping tours in the downtown stores proved a good advertising tieup for all the stores visited by the stars splashed in the newspapers in announcing the event.

Harold P. Dygert, president of the Associated Theatres, Inc., announces plans complete for the building of a new motion picture theatre in Bath, N. Y. The house will be constructed on the site of the former Bath National Bank.

J. R. Thomson, formerly with Associated Exhibitors, is now representing Bond Photoplays Corporation in the Syracuse territory. Bobby North was in town last week and visited some of the exhibitors in company with Branch Manager Sydney Samson. Fred M. Zimmerman leaves Bond next Monday to become manager of the local F. B. O. exchange.

Mrs. C. E. Siegesmund, chairman of the motion picture committee of the Buffalo Federation of Women's Clubs, is up in arms again. Last week she spoke before the W. C. T. U. Institute and declared that local exhibitors were ignoring orders of the censors to eliminate certain scenes in pictures.

The Fox exchange personnel is now practically 100 per cent. Elks. Orville R. Rieffel, assistant manager, became a member of the antlered herd last week. Clayton M. Sheehan, district manager, who has been on a mission to South America for the company, is expected in Buffalo on Monday, May 7.

One of the most successful house managers in the Capital District, comprising Albany, Troy and Schenectady, is Walter T. Roberts, whose handling of the Mark Strand, in Albany, N. Y., in conjunction with Uly Hill, marks him as one of exceptional business ability. The theatre is the leading house in the city and caters to a heavy patronage at all times. Mr. Roberts was at one time associated with the Stair and Haviland shows, later going with the Columbia Amusement Company, in Louisville, Ky., where his work was so acceptable that he was transferred to Buffalo as house treasurer. Later on, Mr. Roberts became assistant manager of the Strand in Buffalo, under Earl Crab, coming to Albany when the Mark Strand was opened, about two and one-half years ago. Mr. Roberts originally hailed from Louisville, Ky.

Earl L. Crabb, former manager of the Buffalo Strand, former general manager of the Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation, and now proprietor of the System theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., was in Buffalo for the first time in two years on Saturday, April 28. Mr. Crabb is changing his policy at the System to a new feature every day, and he came to town to see the exchanges about buying his film by the carload. Earl says business is good.

We thought they had slipped something over on us one day last week. Looking out of a beanery window on Main street we saw a vehicle go by that looked like the advance band wagon of the Barnum & Bailey circus. Rushing to the window, imagine our disappointment to learn that it was only Fred M. Shafer, manager of the Lafayette Square, being driven up the main stem in his new Courier sedan. Fred has got everything on this car but a Wurlitzer organ, and he is dickering with Mr. Slotkin now to install the Lafayette instrument under the front seat.

In and Out of the Omaha Branch-Office

C. A. SCHULTZ, Vitagraph branch manager, began his present work on August 1 of last year, and already he has won the admiration of his competitors in this field. For the ten-week period ended March 1 his office won first place of the Vitagraph exchanges in the central division, which includes Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City and Oklahoma City. His office showed the greatest per cent of increase in business. When he assumed the branch managership here Mr. Schultz was fortunate in taking over a fine organization, and he has been successful in maintaining the efficiency of his staff. He is modest and yet has a personality that wins. Everyone in Omaha's film center has a good word for Schultz.

C. A. Schultz

Harry David, manager of the Mission theatre at Los Angeles, spent a week in Omaha, changing the music for "Suzanne," Mack Sennett's production. Mr. David was credited with arranging the score for this production.

Omaha members of the Order of Mystic Shrine were impressed by the Americanization feature of "Masters of Men," which will be released in Omaha on May 13. Manager Schultz, of Vitagraph, closed a tie-up with the Shriners. Tangier Temple will get behind the picture here.

Leo A. Getzler is the new branch manager for Hodkinson. He was formerly identified with the Omaha Vitagraph office and more recently with the Hodkinson office at Cleveland.

Slater O'Hara, who was an exhibitor at Fairfield, Iowa, has cast his lot with the United Artists Omaha branch, covering the Iowa field.

On his first trip out he placed "Robin Hood," Orpheum theatre at Clinton, Iowa.

"Suzanne" and "One Exciting Night" with the Manager Willard Ledoux of the Empress theatre announces that beginning on Sunday, May 6, he will discontinue the vaudeville feature of his house. Of more interest to Omaha theatre men is his announcement that he will maintain a new scale of admission prices at 10, 20, and 30 cents. Children will be admitted for 10 cents at all shows and adults for 20 cents at matinees.

Mr. Ledoux stated that he will go into the photoplay market for the best features and will have appropriate music for each production. He will give great care to the selection of short subjects on each program to insure variety and a well-balanced entertainment.

The Empress theatre is one of Omaha's downtown entertainment houses and the policy for a period of years has been a combination of vaudeville and motion pictures.

Butte Bulletins and Montana Trade Items

W. C. PUGH is now in charge of Spokane and Butte branches for the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., distributors of Encore Pictures nationally advertised. Mr. Pugh was formerly located in Great Falls, but with this promotion his headquarters will be Spokane. The Spokane-Butte exchanges serve all Montana, Northern Idaho and Western Washington. Mr. Pugh has steadily risen in the ranks of the film companies to his present position. He came West from Minneapolis, where he was identified with various film companies, and today he ranks with the up and coming film men of the West.

Jack Rue, manager of the Universal exchange, is out in the territory making all the key towns booking the various exhibitors for Universal's new release, "Hunting Big Game in Africa." This film, since the preview last Sunday in the Rialto, gives promise of being one of the big theatre magnets that will fill every seat. To the kiddies it will be as good as a circus.

H. M. Gansfield has recently left the Montana territory, where he has been a salesman for Vitagraph, to become the feature salesman for Universal at Seattle.

Universal salesmen in Montana are busy making the theatre towns in exploiting "The Abysmal Brute." The preview has been enthusiastically received, and there is every indication that it will be booked throughout the State. The Silver Bow Amusement Company, operating the American and Rialto theatres of Butte under the management of J. W. Sullivan, has recently closed a deal with Al Rosenberg's De Luxe Feature Film Company for the entire output of Al Lichtman, C. C. Burr and Principal Pictures. The deal was put through by the company's representative, Louis Rosenberg, De Luxe salesmanager.

The new Rialto theatre of Bozeman, Mont., is to open about the middle of May. Already there have been a number of books for the coming months in anticipation of the event. "Are You a Failure?" has just been booked by the management.

The Greater Butte Amusement Company filed articles of incorporation this week (April 25) with the clerk and recorder to conduct a general amusement business. The principal place of business is Butte. Capital stock, $50,000, is to be divided into shares of $10 each; life of the company 40 years, and the directors are George N. Short, W. W. Wisner and George R. Good.

The Broadway theatre of Butte played Martin Johnson's "Hunting Wild Animals in Africa With Gun and Camera" to big houses for three days. Merle Davis, general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, says it is one of the finest pictures that has been given to the Butte public this year. He invited all of the Boy Scouts to attend en masse on Monday afternoon at the close of school.

Jottings from Kansas City and Vicinity

"KANSAS CITY in 1924" is the slogan which delegates from the M. P. T. O., Western Missouri, will take with them to the national convention at Chicago. The unusually good train facilities, the geographical location and the progress of the industry in Missouri and Kansas will be the arguments advanced in endeavoring to obtain the convention for the Missouri city.

A print of "Skin Deep," two projection machines and the windows of the Royal theatre in Seneca, Kas., were destroyed last week when the film jammed in the machines. The operator also was burned. The house is operated by R. E. Karnes, who has announced that the theatre will be opened again next week.

Every member of the M. P. T. O. Western Missouri who attends the national convention in Chicago will constitute part of the caucus, as well as the eight delegates named by President Charles Sears and the alternatives. The delegates and alternatives:

A. F. Baker, St. Joseph; Jack Roth, Kansas City; C. T. Sears, Nevada; Jack Truitt, Sedalia; Lawrence E. Goldman, Kansas City; A. M. Eisner, Kansas City; F. A. Wasgien, Brookfield, and Ben Levy, Joplin.

Alternatives: H. Weakley, Hardin; C. T. Goodnight, Warrensburg; C. F. Weary, Richmond; H. Till, Braymer; C. Hubbell, Trenton; W. P. Cuff, Chillicothe; W. Parsons, Joplin; Charles Bays, Carthage.

The following changes in ownership and openings of theatres in the Kansas City territory during the past week have been announced:

Prospect theatre, Kansas City, purchased by J. Means; Palace theatre, Kansas City, purchased by Child's Restaurant Company (theatre to be dismantled and remodeled into restaurant); Circle theatre, Kansas City, reopened by Paul Hoffman.

The close of the "Discovery Concerts" at the Newman theatre, Kansas City, this week, marks a month of stimulated attendance. In branching out from the usual "amateur night" plan and including acts and playlets of high school students, Milton H. Feld, managing director of the Newman theatre not only won liberal support of daily newspapers but succeeded in adding a good many dollars to the monthly box receipts.

The Picture Row Baseball League of Kansas City had its official opening last Saturday with a set-to between the Pathe-Crescent team and the Hollywood club. These two teams are the first to organize for the season and have issued a challenge to all other film concerns in Kansas City.

A committee of more than fifty members of the Kansas City Parent-Teacher organization attended the Orpheum theatre in a body this week to view "Hunting Big Game in Africa" and pronounced the production a great film, educational and entertaining.

The "razberries" are falling fast and thick upon the neck of M. B. Shanberg, member of the executive board of the M. P. T. O., Kansas. It was not until this week that Mr. Shanberg himself started the ball rolling. Having some business in Kansas City to transact the first day of the Kansas convention in Wichita, Kas., Mr. Shanberg decided to remain in Kansas City until Monday morning, instead of leaving with exhibitors Sunday night for a trip of about 200 miles. Bright and early Monday morning Mr. Shanberg, equipped with a perfectly good airplane, headed for Wichita with all confidence that he would be there for the opening at 9 o'clock. He arrived there at 9 o'clock, true enough—9 o'clock at night. And today his "speedy" trip is furnishing a laugh to M. B.'s friends along Film Row.

The Doris theatre, Kansas City, formerly one of the larger first run downtown houses, which has been closed since being partially wrecked by a gas explosion, probably never will be reopened as a theatre. Negotiations now are under way which may result in the theatre being remodeled as a bank. Situated in the heart of the banking district, the theatre never has been considered a money maker. It was operated by Samuel Harding, owner of the Liberty theatre.

James H. Rice, new manager of the Pantages theatre, Kansas City, arrived Tuesday from Sacramento, Cal., to assume his new duties. He has been manager of the State theatre in Sacramento. He succeeds Grant Pemberton, who has gone to Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, to take charge of the Pantages theatre there.

Homer Gill, former exploitation representative for First National's Kansas City branch, who woke up the other morning to find himself an unemployed man, following the disbanding of all First National exploitation representatives, has accepted a similar position with the Kansas City Goldwyn branch, succeeding Charles Raymond, who has been transferred to the Minneapolis branch.

At the recent semi-annual Kansas convention at Wichita, Kas., more business was written up by the various exchanges than at any other previous convention, according to a consensus of opinion among Kansas City film salesmen.

Photoplay Personals and Events in Southeast

A KEEN interest is being taken in the South Carolina tax situation by the exchange managers of the Southeast, both in Charlotte and Atlanta, especially the Famous Players crowd, who operate several theatrical properties in South Carolina. While the theatre owners of the state have been granted a short respite on enforcement of this tax, it is feared that unless concerted organization work is effected immediately the tax will be put on within the next several months. It is desired to effect a strong organization and raise money to combat this legislation, and with this idea in view it is believed the theatre owners will be asked to submit to the tax board of South Carolina first-hand information and financial statements of their operations during the next several months, as the most convincing argument that they are unable to stand this additional tax.

John L. Crovo, one of the best-known theatrical men in the southeastern states, for the past several years stationed in Greenville, South Carolina, with the management of the Southern Enterprises houses there, the Garing and Casino, has been transferred to Atlanta, where he will manage the Forsyth, which for the past sixteen months has had a phenomenal run with permanent dramatic stock. He succeeds N. W. Remond, who is leaving the organization after several years' service. H. B. Clark has been transferred from the Strand and Majestic, Memphis, to the Greenville theatres, who, in turn, is succeeded by A. B. Morrison.

Atlantans are paying legitimate prices regularly and in large numbers at Atlanta's "Atlanta" theatre where a season of extended runs of super-specials is under way, Griffith's "One Exciting Night" having been the last attraction there.

It is announced at division offices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that Ford Anderson, formerly connected with the Wilmer and Vincent enterprises, has been appointed state supervisor of theatres for North Carolina.

Lloyd Willis, representative of Will H. Hays, met with the Atlanta exchange managers on April 30 and May 1 for the purpose of perfecting a local Film Board of Trade, such as is functioning in many other exchange centers throughout the country, membership being composed of all exchanges affiliated with the Hays organization.

Miss Bianca Bak, who, since the first opening of the Atlanta Goldwyn exchange seven years ago, has held the position of office manager and enjoys possibly a wider acquaintance among exhibitors of the southeastern states than any exchange manager in Atlanta, has severed her connection with Goldwyn. After an operation and recuperation, she will re-enter the industry in another capacity.

Moses Klein, associated with Goldberg's Lillian and Majestic theatres at Clarksville, Tenn., was an Atlanta visitor the past week.

George V. Atkison, who has been associated with the Charlotte Pathe office for the past five years, has not resigned to go with Enterprise Distributing Corporation, as erroneously reported last week.

C. L. Levy has been promoted by the Fox organization from the Charlotte office to Kansas City. He is succeeded in Charlotte by Mr. Murray, who came down from Boston.

J. J. Burke, Jr., manager, and Fritz Friend, star salesman of the Atlanta Metro office, were in Charlotte the past week.

George Clegg, home office auditor, is checking up the Charlotte Universal office on his annual tour of the exchanges of the company.

Albany Notes and Eastern New York Briefs

AMONG the exhibitors in town the past week were B. S. Thornton, of the Orpheum in Saugerties; C. H. Moyer, of the Liberty, in Herkimer; William Smalley, who has a considerable chain; R. V. Erk, of the Big Ben, in Iliou; and Lew Fischer, with houses in Ticonderoga, Fort Edward and Port Henry. Without exception, all reported good business.

The Leland, in Albany, has started to issue a Movie Home Journal, which is scoring a big hit. Oscar J. Perrin, is behind the scheme.

Roland G. McCurdy, exploitation man for Universal, in Buffalo and Albany, is now working in Glens Falls.

Samuel Suckno, owner of the Albany and other houses in the Capital City, had a fire the other night which resulted in two reels of "The Ghost Patrol" going up in a flash. Patrons held their seats even though the fire department was called out.

F. S. Hopkins, salesman for the Universal exchange, is touring the northern part of the state this week, putting over Universal specials.

About every boy and girl in Watervliet will have a "scooter" as the result of a stunt being put across by the Grand, owned by George Tetrault. Ten scooters are being given with each episode of "The Oregon Trail," each scooter bearing the words "I'm on my way to the Grand theatre."

William Shirley, of the Strand in Schenectady, is making a big drive for business in "Driven," plastering the entire city with cards and sheets.

All roads leading into Ticonderoga, N. Y., are said to be under construction and Lew Fischer is not looking for a particularly good business in any of his four houses, as the result.

Charles Marshall, who operates the Bridge theatre at Ausable as well as Estes Hall at Keene Valley, and handles second hand automobiles as a side line, was along Film Row the past week.

Fred Elliott is no longer known as "The King Tut" of the Albany exhibitors, having secured a set of false teeth, and once more resumed his old time facial expression.

Ben Apple used a couple of singers at the American, in Troy, last week, in connection with slides. The idea scored and Mr. Apple will follow it up from week to week, with other singers.

Lew Fischer, of Fort Edward, in speaking of the damage that projection machines can do to film, declared last week that he has always made it a practice to send in his machines each year to be overhauled.

"Adam's Rib" played to a big business last week at the new Troy, in Troy, N. Y., and provided one of the best Sundays the theatre has had since its opening.

Bert Gibbons, local manager for Vitagraph, took a whirl to Utica, Watertown and northern New York last week. New photographs have just been taken of both the interior and exterior of the exchange.

Alec Weisman, a salesman for United Artists, lost his bankbook in the Troy theatre one night last week, but it was later found by Edward H. Crawford, business manager of the house, and turned over to Mr. Weisman.

George Goldberg, salesman in the Vitagraph office, lost both mother and mother-in-law by death within the space of sixteen hours last week.

Oscar Perrin, handling the Leland and the Clinton Square in Albany, is a firm believer in advertising of all sorts. As a result, the two houses are always packed and Mr. Perrin is wise enough to always furnish good bills. Of late, he has been handing out most attractive paper weights and memorandum books.

Al Bothner, manager of three houses in Troy, was a visitor along Film Row the past week.

"The Hottentot" scored so well at the Grand, in Malone, last week, that it will be brought back for a return date.

Walter Hayes, and Moe Mark, of the Strand circuit, were in Albany and Troy last week.

The Rose, Astor and Colonial, in Troy, N. Y., are engaged in a merry fight for patronage these days with a ten cent admission charge. All are downtown houses and close together.

S. G. Allen, of Chatham, and Samuel Goldstein, of Springfield, Mass., were in town last week.

L. George Ross, former manager of the F. B. O. offices in New Haven, has been assigned temporarily to the Albany exchange following the purchase of the Boston and New Haven franchises by the Federated Exchanges of New England.

Samuel Eckman, Jr., vice-president of Goldwyn, visited Albany last week, and called on many of his friends.

William Smalley opened the Cameo at St. Johnsville on May 1, and for twenty days of May, will show First National pictures.

"The Town that Forgot God" was, according to Lew Fischer, the best box office attraction which he has played since January 1, in Ticonderoga, Fort Edward and Port Henry.

Theatre and Exchange Briefs from Canada

EXHIBITORS, exchange men and theatre fans of the Province of New Brunswick have been stirred by the sudden introduction recently before the Provincial Legislature of a proposal for a heavy increase in the amusement tax for patrons of all theatres in cities of New Brunswick.

The proposed schedule is as follows:

On all tickets up to 25 cents, the new tax is to be two cents;

On tickets from 26 cents to 50 cents, four cents;

From 51 cents to 75 cents, seven cents;

On tickets from $1 up, a straight 10 per cent.

Objection is being taken to the legislation on the ground that the theatres are just recovering from a serious depression and that business, generally, has been bad because of the unusual snow and extreme cold of the past winter, the weather keeping the people at home and restricting all industries. Considerable lobbying is being done.

The Province theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, one of the theatres of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, is now under the management of Thomas Hopkins, a veteran exhibitor, formerly of Port Arthur, Ontario, and once a prominent figure on the Griffin Theatre circuit in Ontario. An orchestra has been added to the house for evening performances, an organist providing the musical accompaniment for matinee and supper-hour shows.

Miss Mabel Ortnier, pianist of the Allen theatre orchestra, Winnipeg, Manitoba, and accompanist for the children's hour concerts, which have been featured at the theatre for the past twenty-five weeks, has announced that she has conducted a try-out at Saturday morning rehearsals for these juvenile features for no less than 400 local boys and girls, many of whom had never received any special training. Those selected for the Saturday afternoon concerts are paid for their services.

Further changes are announced in managers for leading theatres of Calgary, Alberta. Ray Tubman, for some time at the Allen theatre, has been appointed manager of the Palace theatre, Calgary, one of the most recent moving picture houses in the Canadian West. Tubman, who is a former Ottawa, Ont., man, is also a prominent athlete.

Announcement is also made of the appointment of Claude G. Smith as manager of the Allen theatre, Calgary, this having been the first large moving picture house to be built by Jule and J. J. Allen, now of Toronto. Mr. Smith was manager of the Grand theatre, Calgary, for eight years and later went to the Palace theatre as assistant manager. He has announced that the Calgary Allen will be thoroughly redecorated and modernized.

Fraser Briscoe has erected a small but attractive moving picture theatre at Courtenay, Vancouver Island, British Columbia, which he has called the Gaiety theatre. Courtenay is the centre of a thriving agricultural, logging and creamery district and nearby is the largest soldier colony in the British Empire, which the Gaiety theatre serves.

Vincent J. McCabe, Toronto, former Canadian general manager for Associated First National, has entirely recovered, it is announced, from the long illness which he experienced following a breakdown which compelled him to resign from his important position. Mr. McCabe has not yet announced his plans for the future.

Manager Clarence Robson, of the Regent theatre, Toronto, held over H. A. Snow's "Hunting Big Game in Africa," released by Canadian Universal, for a second week, starting April 30, after the feature had made good with a vengeance during the previous week. This was the first Canadian run for the picture and the Regent was crowded to capacity every day.

Exchange officials of Winnipeg, Manitoba, one of the most important film distributing centers in the Dominion, have been delighted to learn that the Manitoba government has decided to establish an appeal board for the consideration of film releases which have been condemned by the Manitoba Board of Moving Picture Censors when objection is raised by an exchange on definite grounds.

Around Seattle's Photoplay Trade Circles

SEATTLE was treated to some keen competition in the motion picture line recently when two theatres, within three blocks of each other, each had as their main attraction an African wild animal picture. "Hunting Big Game in Africa" was the attraction at Manager R. W. Case's Columbia theatre, and "Trailing African Big Game" was run at Jensen-VonHerberg's Strand theatre by Manager H. B. Wright.

Large amounts of newspaper, billboard and window advertising were used by both houses. Each had an elaborately decorated lobby display and foyer. Admission prices at the Columbia were raised to thirty-five and fifty cents for the attraction. The picture at the Strand was scheduled to be taken off at the end of a five-day run, but no announcement in regard to the Columbia policy has been made. Both pictures were drawing large attendance during their engagements here.

The Majestic theatre in Yakima, operated by Jensen-VonHerberg under the direction of Fred Mercy, was closed recently for the summer, and will undergo extensive remodeling and re-decorating before opening again about September first. During the time that the Majestic is closed, Mr. Mercy will operate the Capitol theatre, also owned by the same corporation, upon a daily schedule. Heretofore the Capitol has been running pictures only two days a week.

W. D. Gross, owner and manager of the Coliseum theatre in Juneau, Alaska, left the city recently after a visit of several weeks here. Before leaving Mr. Gross announced that he had begun construction of a $50,000 motion picture theatre in Ketchikan, Alaska, which was expected to be ready for use about the first of August. It was expected that the theatre was to be named the Empress.

The Liberty theatre, a new house in Blaine, Wash., was opened recently under the ownership and direction of A. H. Allen. According to reports, this is Mr. Allen's first venture into the theatre game. He owned the property upon which the new theatre stands and left the real estate field long enough to construct and begin the operation of the new house.

W. E. Bamford, manager of the Goldwyn exchange, left the city this week for a short trip around the territory, and expected to visit several of the key cities, including Spokane and Missoula. "Backbone" and "The Last Moment" have been received at the exchange, but no definite bookings on the features have been announced yet.

Joe St. Peter, who recently opened the new Rose theatre in Everett, was a recent visitor on Film Row. The Rose theatre is the only Everett house not owned and operated by the Everett Amusement Company.

Carl Stern, manager of the Metro branch, has been out of the city for the past several days on a tour of the northern and southern parts of the state.

"The Bohemian Girl" was scheduled to begin a week's engagement at the Blue Mouse theatre about April 29, under a new plan devised by Louis Amacher, manager of the American Releasing Corporation exchange. Mr. Amacher was aided in the engagement at the Blue Mouse by making arrangements with the various civic clubs to sell tickets previous to the opening of the film. The Seattle Parent-Teachers' association was one of the biggest boosters of the picture.

"Masters of Men," the latest Vitaphone release to be received here by Manager H. A. Black, has been sold to the Columbia theatres in Seattle and Portland for showing some time in May. Mr. Black recently returned from a trip to Portland, and after a few days in the city expected to leave for a week or ten-day tour of this state. Included in Mr. Black's itinerary were Spokane, Wenatchee, Yakima, Ellensburg, and other Washington towns, as well as Missoula, Montana.

Mr. Black was accompanied on his trip to Seattle from Portland by Dave Farquhar, formerly manager of the Select exchange in Salt Lake City and more recently connected with the Goldwyn exchange in Oregon. Mr. Farquhar was en route to Canada, where he will visit with relatives. At the present time he is connected with no film organization.

Charles Hardin, manager of the United Artists' branch, returned to the city recently after a business trip to Portland, where he succeeded in making several bookings on "Tess of the Storm Country," "Suzanne" and other recent United Artist releases with Portland suburban theatres.

Prints of "Within the Law" were received at the First National exchange recently, and the picture has been booked for showing at the Coliseum theatre here by Charles Feldman, manager of the local branch.

Exchange and Exhibitor Items from St. Louis

WORK on the new Parkview theatre, 6324 Delmar Boulevard, is progressing rapidly, and it probably will be ready by September 1. The Lippman Construction Company has the contract. The theatre will seat 1,600 persons and will be equipped with a full stage. It will be owned by the Parkview Realty Company, which probably will lease the house to some operating amusement company. The building will also contain stores and apartments. It will represent an investment of $500,000.

William Goldman has purchased Charlie Warner's Queens theatre and airdome, Marcus avenue and Maffitt street, and is remodeling the house. It will be opened on May 1, when Goldman will also reopen the Kings theatre, which he recently purchased from the Famous Players Missouri Corporation.

Goldman has also purchased additional ground for the $1,000,000 Goldman's St. Louis theatre he plans to erect at Grand Boulevard and Morgan street. This theatre, which will seat 3,000, probably will open on Labor Day or early in September.

The policy of the Queens will be to change pictures nightly. The Grand Boulevard house will have a 146-foot front by a depth of 188 feet on Morgan street. Preston J. Bradshaw is the architect.

Charles J. Law has sold the New Palace theatre at Pana, Ill., and his new Palace in Nokomis, Ill., to Francis & Clark of Taylorville and Springfield. The consideration is said to have been $38,000. Francis & Clark control a string of theatres in Central Illinois.

Joan Arliss has been assigned the feminine lead in "The Love Power," now being produced here by the General Film Manufacturing Company, 6800 Delmar Boulevard. The picture will be completed in about six to eight weeks.

The Palace Amusement Company, recently incorporated here with a capitalization of $30,000, will control the Marquette, Palace, Majestic and Criterion theatres, it is said.

The incorporators are: Frank Spiros, 149 shares; George Phiros, 1 share; Harry Hamburg, 50 shares and Hyman Komm, 100 shares.

Plans for the merger of these houses have been under consideration for several months.

"Safety Last" has the honor of being the only picture that ever played a return engagement at the Capitol theatre, St. Louis. It opened its second run at the Sixth street house on April 28.

Spyros Skouras has recovered from an attack of appendicitis. He was stricken a few days ago and prior to the attack was apparently in excellent health.

Maplewood, Mo., will have a new airdome this summer. Wagner Brothers, who operate the White Way airdome, Webster Groves, Mo., will own the new picture show. It will also be known as the White Way. Tom Leonard, of Progress Pictures, has the Chaplin releases for Southern Illinois and Eastern Missouri. He has received many inquiries about them.

Film Flashes from the Florida Territory

BOTH the Strand and the Victory theatres of Tampa are going in strong for cut-outs. The Strand had some dandies this week for the "Third Alarm." One of these was made from the 24 sheet, showing a fire engine and the racing horses. It was mounted on the marquis and stuck out like a sore thumb. The Victory had four big ones of Harold Lloyd hanging onto the clock, a scene from his latest feature, "Safety Last." Manager John B. Carroll, of the Victory, put over another stunt that was a corker of an ad for this same feature. Throughout the downtown section of the city the police are using quite a number of "No Parking" signs. These signs are made with a metal post, a heavy base, and a round sign at the top. Mr. Carroll dug up about a hundred of these signs and equipped them with a big round, flaming red sign, reading "Safety Last." These were distributed all through the downtown section. It was one of those stunts that are known as "top of column, and next to pure reading matter."

Exchange and Exhibitor News of Carolinas

POLA NEGRI'S "Bella Donna" is having a rough voyage in the Carolina territory. Something like a half dozen towns have already turned it down through their Better Films Committee or other civic organizations vested with authority to do so. The Charlotte Better Films Committee, through its president, Mrs. J. E. Reilly, formerly state president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, objected to its showing at the Imperial theatre, and several other towns have followed in her steps. The local Paramount exchange manager, Mr. C. E. Peppiatt, is holding private screenings as often as requested, with a view to making such suggested eliminations as will make it entirely acceptable throughout this territory.

Wilmington, North Carolina, a town of 33,000 population, third largest in the state, now has only two operating motion picture theatres, the Grand having closed permanently on April 28, the building to be converted into stores. This gives a vivid reflection of the general conditions of business in this town, and there is probably not another city of its population in the South which has not three or more picture theatres regularly operating, and is one of the few spots in the southeastern states in which general conditions are not gradually improving. Charleston, South Carolina, is another city that finds the going hard, while other cities of smaller population are enjoying big business in every line. The Howard-Wells people in Wilmington still have their Victoria, the city's largest theatre, in reserve, which can be operated as a picture theatre whenever improving conditions warrant.

Vaudeville acts are being introduced in connection with the regular picture programs at the Imperial, Charlotte, since the opening of Keith vaudeville in the Strand.

Colonel Henry B. Varner's wonderful new theatre in Lexington, North Carolina, is nearing completion and the Colonel claims that he will have the finest and best equipped house in the state when it opens some time in July. Three large stores and thirteen offices are being provided for in the building, into which already more than three hundred carloads of building material has gone. It is being erected under contract by W. Lee Harbin.

When the Tax Board of South Carolina relieved the motion picture theatres temporarily from payment of the ten per cent state revenue tax on admissions, legitimate theatre attractions were not included in the exemption, a fact that has just been discovered by producers and managers of theatrical attractions. The picture interests were prompt in getting their relief and now the producers of stage plays are taking up the cudgel in their own behalf, threatening to erase South Carolina from their routes next season unless the tax is removed. Among those who are actively working on the proposition are John Golden, George M. Cohan, David Belasco, Sam H. Harris and A. L. Erlanger.

Dan Michalove, director of theatres for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is rumored, is endeavoring to arrange for the erection of a new theatre building in Charlotte to be leased and operated by his corporation. He recently spent several days in Charlotte, presumably on this mission, but made no announcement. The F. P.-L. already operate the Imperial and Alhambra in Charlotte.

Carl Bamford, supervisor of theatres in North Carolina for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has left the organization to devote all of his attention to his Majestic theatre, Asheville, North Carolina, which he secured from Southern Enterprises.

C. D. Danford, personal representative of Laurence Lester, was in Charlotte looking over the Strand.

They are alternating at the two theatres, appearing at the Miles at 2:15 and 7:45 and at the Regent at 3 and 9 P. M. This proves that Charles H. Miles and his general manager, George Guise, know a good box office bet when they see it.

Washington Exhibitor and Exchange Items

JOSEPH P. MORGAN, general manager of the Crandall enterprises, was confined to the hospital from Monday to Friday of last week by an operation on his throat. The operation was a complete success and Mr. Morgan is already rapidly convalescing.

The Washington Post carried an item this week announcing "Voluntary petition in bankruptcy, Seaboard Films Corporation, New York and Washington." Originally a state-right film distributing service, with offices at New York, Washington and a Southern city, they finally became merely a Washington concern, and the bulk of the business done at their office was for the Arrow and Federal services, whose physical distribution they handled. According to S. D. Willis, attorney, the petition, filed through him, was signed by the officers of the Seaboard Films Corporation. Assets were listed at approximately $1,000, while the liabilities aggregate nearly $10,000.

Splendid headway is being made in the construction of Crandall's new Ambassador theatre at Eighteenth street and Columbia road, Northwest. The steel structure of the new edifice, supported on cement footings firmly grounded in the earth, was completed a fortnight ago. At the Tivoli site at Fourteenth street and Park road, where the tenth Crandall theatre in Washington will be located, the excavation has been completed and many of the cement footings have been poured.

Having established a public service and educational department, to promote community interest, and a Crandall Baseball League, to foster neighborhood spirit, the executives of the Crandall organization have now undertaken a colonization scheme. Harry M. Crandall, owner; Joseph P. Morgan, general manager, and John J. Payette, assistant general manager, all are building new homes in the vicinity of Sixteenth and Allison streets, Northwest.

Charles H. McKinney, Cambridge, Md., Arcade theatre and business building, a prominent Eastern Shore exhibitor, was a local Film Row visitor last week. He called upon the Flax Brothers at the Liberty film exchange and intimated that business conditions down his way were not half bad. Although only about three years in the film theatre game, he is a former pioneer star of the gelatine reel. He appeared in character parts in the old Selig product. He was 18 years in the theatrical business as actor, stage hand, manager, treasurer, advance, etc. He opened his Cambridge Arcade about two years ago, in the fall of 1921. It is on the arcade plan with the 1,000-seat theatre, 9 stores on the arcade and street approaches and 6 6-room apartments and 4 5-room apartments on the upper floors. This flourishing old world metropolis of the rich Shore region has put on new life since the opening of the Arcade project, says McKinney. Business generally appears to have recovered from the prevailing slump felt there last spring, summer and fall.

Otto Bolan, interpretative film musician and artist, well known in Washington regional circles, is now leading the orchestra at McKinney's Arcade, Cambridge. He started with the Crandall musical department and then went on the road with Metro's road show of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." His vigorous interpretation of the theme in selecting the music for the Ibanez screen classic so attracted the notice of exhibitors that he was given the position of leader by Mr. McKinney.

Tom Moore runs it as a feature. Universal says it was to be a program picture prologue to "The Covered Wagon."

Theatre and Film Row Items from Cleveland

C. E. ALMY, local Metro exchange manager, played host to Madge Bellamy last week, when she spent two days in town, making personal appearances at Loew's State theatre, in connection with her picture, "The Soul of the Beast," and inviting local officials to attend the Motion Picture Exhibition in Los Angeles. One of the stunts arranged by Almy for the star was a luncheon at the Cleveland Hotel. Miss Bellamy brought her cross country trip to an end in Cleveland. Although she had planned to visit many other cities in the interest of the Motion Picture Exhibition, she was notified to buy a direct ticket from Cleveland to Los Angeles, where she is to start making a new picture immediately under the personal direction of Thomas Ince. The star was a big hit during her short stay in the city.

Robert Cotton, local Fox exchange manager, went out to call on the exhibitors in the territory this week, in order to get a personal slant on how things are coming this spring.

H. Herbel, Universal district manager for the Central States, spent several days this week in the Cleveland exchange as the guest of Local Manager Tom Colby.

"Dr. Jack" has done better during its second week at the Miles theatre, Cleveland, than it did the first week. The reason for this is that the Miles has just inaugurated a big feature policy, and had to establish a new clientele, as well as the fact that the picture was booked hurriedly and there was little time for advance advertising.

The Loew interests have bought "Dr. Jack" for second run in Cleveland to run simultaneously at the Liberty, Alhambra and Mall theatres.

Did you hear about Joe Trunk? Of course you know Joe Trunk. Everybody does. He owns and operates the Dome theatre in Youngstown. Last Sunday, after a good day's business, his cashier was counting out the profits when along came a fellow with long arms who reached into the cashier's booth and took all the bills in the till. The thief held a handkerchief over his face so he could not be identified. And on Monday Trunk hid himself to Cleveland. He said he was calling on all the exchanges to find out which film salesman was in Youngstown the preceding day. Trunk said that the exchanges get pretty nearly all of his money anyhow, so he thought this was just another touch.

W. K. Richards, of the New Royal theatre, Findlay, was in town early in the week. A part of his time was taken up signing First National contracts. Richards has been fighting the Sunday blue laws in Findlay. Right now he is on a vacation, and to keep peace in the town, is closed on Sunday. But it's only temporary.

Christie Company Off to Lumber Camp

One of Al Christie's busy companies is off again this week to Westwood, in Lassen County, California, where, it is said, there is the biggest redwood lumber plant of its kind in the world, for a background for his newest two-reel comedy. This location trip hangs up a mileage record of 10,000 miles of traveling for four two-reel comedies.

The new picture has been afforded the courtesies of the Red River Lumber Company, which has its own town of five thousand inhabitants, up in the beautiful redwood country in the northern part of the state. It will be an ideal location for a logging camp story Mr. Christie has planned for some time.

Frank Roland Conklin, one of the scenario staff, went up in advance of the company, which will include Neal Burns, Vera Steadman, Babe London, William Irving, Jimmie Harrison and Ward Caulfield. Scott Sidney will direct the picture.

Lige Conley Fulfills White's Prediction

A year ago Jack White, producer-director of Educational-Mermaid Comedies, predicted that the close of the 1922-23 season would find Lige Conley one of the premier comedians of the screen. Today, with production work on "Backfire," the last of the present series of Mermaid Comedies for Educational practically completed, White finds his predictions come true.

A year ago, when White came to New York, he declared that he would feature Lige Conley in a series of comedies which would be distinctive.

"Look Out Below" was the first of these comedies in which Conley carried the leading role. During the ensuing year Conley was featured in ten of the thirteen comedies produced by White, many of them being rated among the best of the year.

"Roll Along" Pretentious Comedy

Christie Promises Innovation in Two-Reel Blackface Vehicle for May Release

ONE of the most pretentious two-reel comedies ever turned out of the Educational-Christie studios is promised when Al Christie's two-reel blackface comedy, "Roll Along," is released on the Educational program.

Al Christie is personally directing. With the completion of production work all of Christie's predictions as to the quality of the picture and its showmanship value seem to be fulfilled, it is claimed.

This picture is in the nature of an innovation, and Christie has made a number of innovations the past season. "Roll Along" is now said to be an assured success. Previous reports show that the comedy is more than was at first anticipated.

The picture is all in blackface, but all of the players are white actors of considerable ability. Jimmie Adams, a late recruit to the Christie forces, is cast as "Rastus," the dusky hero of the comedy; Natalie Joyce, another newcomer to Christie Comedies is seen as "Mandy," a high-steppin', jazz dancin' yellow gal. Others in the cast who have prominent parts are William Irving, Babe London, Ward Caulfield, Fred Hueston, Don Bailey and Gus Leonard.

One of the big features of the picture will be a race between two river steamers of the Mississippi River type. This race, though a part of a comedy, carries all the thrills of the famous race between the "Natchez" and the "Robt. E. Lee" of ante-bellum days in the south.

Christie has dopted the minstrel style to comedy, taking as his cue the long continued success of this type of typical American entertainment encouraged by the recent success of such plays as "Shuffle Along" and others with a dark skinned cast, which made such tremendous hits in New York the past season.

"The negro," said Al Christie, "is a natural comedian. He cannot help being funny, but there is a great lack of negro actors with enough talent to portray the humor of their race. Those actors among them who have this ability have confined their work to the musical comedy or vaudeville stage, and have not the necessary training to engage in comedy work before the camera. We have chosen a selected cast of white actors of the best comedy ability, coached every one of them in negro ways and mannerisms, expended time and money on 'Roll Along,' and I believe the verdict of the American public will be that we have opened up an entirely new field for motion picture comedy."

"Roll Along" will be released on the program of the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., on May 20.

Our Gang in "Giants vs. Yanks"

Two-Reel Riot of Diamond in The Rough Tops May 13 Pathe Releases

WITH exhibitors' direct trade reports unanimous about the high value of every thing yet shown bearing the Pathe-Hal Roach trade mark of Our Gang Comedies, another two-reel riot in that series tops Pathe's program of 9 releases for May 13. It is called "Giants vs. Yanks," and brings out the varied talents of Mickey Daniels, Sunshine Sammy, Jackie Condon, Little Farina and the full strength of that untirred bunch of juveniles.

Episode 2 of Ruth Roland's new serial, "Haunted Valley," gives audiences an inside spectacular view of the diabolical machinery, hidden in a mountain cavern, whereby the millionaire villain of the picture harrasses the heroine in her vast irrigating operations.

Leo Maloney appears in another stirring 2-reeler of the popular Range Rider Series, "Wings of the Storm."

The second of the Hal Roach 1-reel comedies starring Stan Laurel is called "White Wings."

The Aesop's Film Fable of this issue is called "The Mouse-Catcher." The mice in Farmer Al Falfa's house are triumphant until attacked with a powerful vacuum cleaner.

New Sunshine Comedy Is May 13 Release

"ROARING LIONS ON A STEAMSHIP," a Sunshine

Comedy to be released May 13, by Fox Film Corporation, is one of the most laughable of the comedy series featuring the roaring lions, is the claim of the producers. As a thrill-provoker it is said to be highly efficient and includes many original comedy situations in the action.

The previous Sunshine Comedies of this series won so much praise and are said to have proved so popular, that another comedy has been completed and its title will be announced soon.

"Three Gun Man" and "Where There's a Will" were the two latest Sunshines to be released before the present lion comedy.

Trotsky, Russ Dictator, in Fox News

The latest issue of Fox News contains some of the first authentic pictures of Soviet military activities that have been shown outside of Russia since the revolution began. Trotsky, the dictator, is seen in front of Kremlin Palace in Moscow reviewing his army. A few years ago Trotsky was an obscure newspaper reporter for foreign publications printed in the vicinity of New York. Today he is the strongest power in Russia.

Keystone Comedies Are Sold for Ohio

Oscar Price and Harry Aitken have sold Keystone Comedies for the State of Ohio to F. L. Greenwald, of the Greenwald-Griffith Exchange, of Cleveland, Ohio. The closing of this contract brings the percentage of territory sold on the Keystones up to 70 per cent., it is claimed.

Methodist Minister Approves Fables

That animated cartoons, when they present "Aesop's Film Fables," have educational value beyond the hearty laughs they incite, is attested in a letter to Pathe from the Rev. Howard D. White, Pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Rickland, Wis. The minister writes

"I have booked 'Aesop's Film Fables' from Pathe Exchange, Inc., for weekly service. They are highly appreciated by the people here; amusing to both young and old."

Urban Classic Shows Beef Raising

From there he goes south to California, visiting the popular bathing resorts.

"Beasts of Prey" shows glimpses of various groups of carnivores. These include tigers, the cheetah of India and others of the flesh-eating wild beasts.

"Andy Gump" Character Found

Famous Newspaper Comic Strip Will Be Reproduced in Two-Reel Series

A "DEAD RINGER" has been found for Andy Gump, the famous comic strip character created by Sidney Smith, and work already is under way at Universal City, Cal., on a series of two-reel comedies portraying the doings of the Gump family.

The real-life "spittin' image" of Andy was discovered in the person of Joe Murphy, a vaudeville comedian. He was immediately signed up by Samuel Van Ronkel, film producer, who holds a contract with Smith, the cartoonist, and who is producing the Gump comedies for Universal.

Fay Tincher, long a popular film comedienne, has been engaged to play the part of "Min." She is said to be a highly realistic double of Andy's "ball-and-chain" in the comic strip. By searching as far north as Portland, Ore., and as far east as Denver, Colo., a double also was found for "Uncle Bim," another hanger-on of the Gump family. "Old Timer" and the "Widow Zander" have been duplicated in real life, too, and will take parts in the forthcoming Universal comedies. "Little Chester" will be played by Jackie Morgan.

Jackie is getting a liberal education in acting his part by studying Smith's cartoon strips. It is planned to film the comedies directly from the strips as far as possible, so the film stories will follow the newspaper releases in a general way. Also, the poses and mannerisms of the comic strip characters are being copied as exactly as possible.

Harry Pollard, who has gained fame as the director of a new style in comedies, is directing the production of the Gump comedies. Pollard will be remembered for his excellent work with Reginald Denny in "The Leather Pushers," the hilarious screen adaptations of H. C. Witwer's famous prize ring stories.

"The Gumps" series is to be released beginning early in the summer.

"Pal" Heads New Noel Smith Comedy

"Pal," the clever canine comedian who is owned by the ex-service trainer, Harry Licensay, is heading the cast of Noel Smith's first Century comedy.

Besides "Pal," Henry Murdock, who was recently signed by Julius and Abe Stern, plays an important part in the comedy. Otto Fries and Violet Sheldon, a new blonde ingenue, also appear in support.

The temporary title is "His Master's Curse" and it is said will contain many new gags for which "Pal," one of the cleverest dog actors on the screen, has been specially trained. The picture is in its third week of production.

Baby Peggy Loaned for "Hollywood" Scene

Through the courtesy of Julius and Abe Stern, heads of Century Comedies, Baby Peggy, their little four-year-old star, will be seen in "Hollywood," the Paramount Special made by James Cruze.

In the same small bit in which Century starlet participates, Charlie Chaplin and William de Mille also take part. Practically all the best known stars are being used for a shot in this picture.

Burr Making Elaborate Production Plans

C. C. Burr is making elaborate plans for an extensive production schedule. No less than six productions are now being made ready and shooting will begin soon. The Burr studios at Glendale, L. I., within the next week or ten days will be a veritable hive of industry, with at least three companies working, and perhaps four.

Marjorie Marcel Wins Century Contract

For her excellent work in Century Comedies Marjorie Marcel has won for herself a long term contract from Julius and Abe Stern Century Comedy officials.

Miss Marcel has appeared in almost all of Al Herman's comedies for 1923. This includes "Vamped," "Oh, Nursie!" "Fare Enough" and "Down to Earth." She is appearing in Herman's present Century, "Hold On," in which she plays the leading feminine part.

The Stern brothers are planning for several comedies, in which Miss Marcel will appear.

Latest Burr Comedy Is Completed

Gregory La Cava, director, has completed the filming of scenes for the latest of the All-Star Comedies produced by C. C. Burr. It is a Western story, with Charlie Murray, Raymond McKee and Kathlene Martyn playing the leading roles.

Richard Thorp, production manager for the Burr interests, has started work on still another of the All-Star series and is now filming the interiors at the Burr, Glendale, L. I., studios.

"Luck" Premiere Is Due in South

"Luck," the latest of the Johnny Hines' melocomedies sponsored by C. C. Burr, opens at the Capitol theatre, Dallas, Texas, its premiere in the South. Both "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and "Sure Fire Flint" "cleaned up" in the Southern territory, it is said, largely due to the expert showmanship of True Thompson, and it is expected that "Luck" will top both of the others

Leah Baird Selects Texas Queens

There was excitement among pretty girls in Texas towns when Leah Baird made her recent tour of the state in connection with the runs of the Associated Exhibitors feature, "Is Divorce a Failure?" In two cities, Dallas and Mexia, this popular player was the central figure in the putting across of an exploitation stunt that it is said, packed the theatres with the most beautiful young women of these communities.

Miss Baird attended two matinee performances in the Capitol theatre, Dallas, on each of three days, and after making an address from the stage, walked up the center aisle, selecting from the audience two pretty girls having "movie faces." Selections were made not alone on the basis of possibilities as screen successes but also of resemblance to popular stars. One of the lucky girls was chosen because of her likeness to Florence Vidor.

On the evening of the third day the six girls appeared on the stage and the audience by popular vote decided on the prize distribution. The amount of applause the girls received designated the order of awards—first, second, third, and so on down the line. The prizes were given by nine leading Dallas firms with which tie-ups had been effected. They included, among other things, a handsome gown, a spring hat, an article of jewelry, a folding kodak, a fur neckpiece, and an electric curling iron.

Advertising Slogan for "If Winter Comes"

"Mightier Than the Book" has been selected by William Fox as the advertising slogan which will be prominently displayed in all the publicity for the screen version of "If Winter Comes," the A. S. M. Hutchinson novel, which is soon to be shown on Broadway.

This descriptive phrase was decided upon after a special screening.

F. B. O. Forsees Big Second Year

Powers Hollywood Studios Buzzing With Activity Following Anniversary

WITH all its stages veritable beehives of industry and companies departing at close intervals for "location," with its mills and paint lofts and prop factories manned at full strength and the administration building, where the chief executives have their offices, vibrating with energy, the big Powers studios of Hollywood, where F. B. O. productions are made, is entering on its second year with every evidence of eclipsing the signal achievements of its maiden year, according to the F. B. O. office.

Emil Offeman, as general manager, has, through his masterly knack of detail, placed the studio on a basis of efficiency that has resulted in record-breaking production schedules.

Edwin Forrest has had charge of the production department since the inception of the Powers studio.

Directors on F. B. O.'s roster include such well-known names as Emory Johnson, Emile Chautard, James W. Horne, Val Paul, Malcolm St. Clair and Al Santel.

F. B. O.'s roll of featured players comprises Ethel Clayton, Harry Carey, Jane Novak, Ralph Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven, Warner Baxter, Derelys Ferdue and Johnnie Walker.

Able assistance is given Mr. Forrest by Clarence White, who was formerly with the Robertson-Cole organization. Mr. White's expert handling of the minute details of a dozen productions at one and the same time is one of the marvels of the studio.

Wyndham Gittens, as head of the continuity department, has been responsible for the story development of F. B. O. offerings.

Lucille De Nevers, as literary scout for the studio, has been a great aid to the production department in ferreting out material.

Hyat Daab is stationed at the F. B. O. studios as special West Coast emissary. Will T. Gentz aids in the boosting of the F. B. O. product. Paul Grenbeaux is in charge of F. B. O.'s still department.

Settings are the work of W. L. Heywood. Mr. Heywood has been art director at the Powers studio since the opening of the plant under the Robertson-Cole regime. Carroll Clark is his assistant in direct charge of the draughting room.

F. H. Smith, auditor, was formerly controller with the West Coast plants of Universal and Tri-ange.

Productions now in course of filming are "Blow Your Own Horn," from Owen Davis's stage play of the same name. James W. Horne is directing the following cast: Ralph Lewis, Warner Baxter, Derelys Ferdue, Eugenie Ford, Eugene Acker, John Fox, Jr., Mary Sanderson, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Billy Osborne, Dell Boone and William H. Turner.

Harry Carey is putting the final touches to "The Miracle Baby," adapted by Bernstein-Jaccard from Frank Pierce's American Magazine story of the same name.

Al Santel has begun work on "Lights Out," a comedy drama which won success on Broadway. It is the work of Paul Dickey and Mann Page.

Victor B. Fisher, supervising director of the newly formed Fisher Productions, whose first picture titled "Youth Triumphant," is now under way.

Choice of Jackie Pleases Mrs. Rinehart

Seldom has an author waxed so enthusiastic over a film star as Mary Roberts Rinehart has over the fact that Jackie Coogan will shortly start the actual filming of her novel "Long Live the King," for Metro.

The following letter has just been received from Mrs. Rinehart who is at present in Washington, D. C.

"I am greatly pleased to know that Jackie Coogan is to play the Prince in my story 'Long Live the King.' Ever since Jackie first appeared on the screen in 'The Kid,' I have been watching his development. He has a great deal more than mere personality and charm. He is really an actor capable of throwing himself wholeheartedly into the part he is playing."

The screen adaptation of "Long Live the King" is being made by C. Gardner Sullivan and Ev. Unsell, and the picture will be directed by Victor Achertzinger. Supporting Jackie is a cast including Rosemary Theby, Ruth Renick, Alan Forrest, Alan Hale, Vera Lewis, Walt Whitman, Robert Brower and Don Franklin.

League Approves "Are You a Failure?"

"Are You a Failure" B. P. Schulberg's latest release through the Al Lichtman Corporation, is listed in the current bulletin of the National Motion Picture League, where it is recommended especially for adults and young people.

The picture is a Tom Forman production from the story by Larry Evans. Among its featured players are Madge Bellamy, Lloyd Hughes, Tom Santschi and Hal Cooley.

Title Offer Brings Big Response

Schulberg's $10,000 a Word Proffer Stirs Picture Fans of United States

ONE hundred and thirty-four newspapers are featuring to readers the recent announcement made by B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, that he will pay ten thousand dollars a word for acceptable box-office titles. Through the publicity department of the Al Lichtman Corporation the managing editors of these papers are playing up the offer with the idea that titles evolved by their readers are to be sent direct to the paper. They will then be assorted and tabulated and forwarded to B. P. Schulberg for his consideration. Titles submitted to him through these sources will receive special attention.

Those persons who submit titles through the newspapers are to receive an autographed portrait of Ethel Shannon, the young screen actress who will be featured by B. P. Schulberg in Preferred Pictures. The first paper successfully trying out this tie-up was the Omaha Daily News and others were quick to follow. In a large number of theatres, exhibitors are displaying Schulberg's announcement to their audiences by means of slides.

Not only newspapers and theatres but the public in general have manifested great interest in the market Schulberg has opened for good titles. Already more than fifty thousand have been received at Preferred Pictures. Seven hundred have been chosen for consideration and a final decision concerning them will be reached as soon as Schulberg, who has just arrived in Los Angeles from a visit east, has studio affairs in hand sufficiently to give them his attention.

Roach Starts Second for Universal

BERT ROACH has started his second comedy under his new contract at Universal City, which features him as the star of a series of one-reelers. William Watson is directing the story.

Roach's elevation to stardom follows some clever work in several recent Universal-Jewel productions, including "The Flirt," and directors and producers, watching his acting and grasp of comedy situations decided that in Roach they had found something really new in fun making.

Roach recently has been seen in support of Neely Edwards in Universal's one-reel "tramp comedy" series.

Detroit Hebrews Approve "Breaking Home Ties"

Enthusiastic endorsement of the Associated Exhibitors feature, "Breaking Home Ties," was given by representatives of leading Jewish societies of Detroit at a special showing in the Crystal theatre, that city, last week. Hearty applause greeted the picture, which is based on "Eili, Eili," the traditional Yiddish melody of Russia and Poland, and formal action expressing approval was taken.

"Famous Mrs. Fair" Praised

Reviewers Unanimously Approve Production After Showing at Capitol

THE motion picture cities of New York's daily newspapers welcomed the Capitol theatre showing of "The Famous Mrs. Fair" Sunday, April 22, with a vote of appreciation that was wholly unanimous. The reception accorded this Fred Niblo production under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices as sufficient sign that the screen version of James Frobes's great American play will enjoy universal popularity.

"A singularly interesting picture," the New York Herald's reviewer called "The Famous Mrs. Fair." "Fred Niblo has succeeded in putting his story across in a manner that is both simple and forceful."

Alan Dale, of the New York American, wrote: "The Famous Mrs. Fair" went along famously. It makes a most entertaining film story, and the interest is held to the very last."

To the above praise other reviewers hasten to contribute their quota of boosts:

"It is done with a delicacy of touch and a perfection of understanding which in our opinion makes it one of the outstanding pictures of the season," states Dorothy Day in the Morning Telegraph.

The Times declares: "As a sane production with a good theme and well sustained interest, 'The Famous Mrs. Fair,' which opened yesterday at the Capitol, is one of those pictures it is a delight to see."

"Satisfactory and entertaining" is the word from Quinn Martin of the World.

"The play lends itself wonderfully to the screen," wrote Don Allen of the Evening World, "and makes a decidedly entertaining and interesting picture; full of suspense, heart interest and most everything else needed."

"Huntley Gordon, Cullen Landis, Marguerite De La Motte, Ward Crane, Carmel Myers and Helen Ferguson are all excellent in this adaptation which sticks quite closely to James Forbes's notable stage play," the Sun critic avers.

The Evening Mail found that Marguerite De La Motte "characterized the role of the present-day girl in her desire to 'have a good time' with fine consistency."

"A capital photoplay, splendidly acted and directed and entertaining throughout," P. W. Callico of the Daily News stated.

"Commendably directed by Fred Niblo," reported the Evening Journal. "To Myrtle Stedman in the title role must go the preponderance of praise. Cullen Landis is likable as the son; Carmel Myers is completely alluring, and Marguerite De La Motte imparts a vivacity to the role of the daughter."

All in all, this first photoplay in the series of Fred Niblo productions, presented by Louis B. Mayer and distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation, has scored an unquestioned success.

Cleveland Likes Johnson Picture

"Trailing African Wild Animals" is Commended by Newspaper Reviewers

MR. AND MRS. MARTIN JOHNSON'S film, "Trailing African Wild Animals," was received at the Stillman theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, the week beginning April 16, with all the enthusiasm the Clevelanders could muster, according to Metro.

In addition to splendid reviews by the critics of the local dailies, and an official endorsement by the Cleveland Museum of Natural History, there were published long interviews with Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, who were present at the first screening. Effective tie-ups with Cleveland merchants were established at the same time by W. D. Deardouff, exploitation representative for Metro Pictures Corporation, distributors of the Johnson film.

The photoplay critic of the Cleveland Press stated "Trailing African Wild Animals" is a superior picture for us . . . because the Johnsons seem to have centered their efforts on photographing wild animals going about their ordinary affairs."

Billy Leyser of the Cleveland News reported: "The films presented by Mr. Johnson are a wonderful source of entertainment and education. . . . They do more than just trail the animals, they chase them, taunt them, photograph them and capture them with both guns and motion picture camera.

"To miss these pictures is unpardonable. They are educating, exciting, real honest-to-goodness films that were taken at the risk of life and at times when death seemed the 'only way out.' Aside from their photographic grandeur, their impressive detail, thrills, wonderful photography and action, the films possess inestimable educational qualities. They are earnestly recommended to every member in every household."

"Trailing African Wild Animals" also secured the endorsement of P. F. Rae, director of the Cleveland Museum of Natural History.

Burr Productions Sold for Illinois

Griever Productions of Chicago closed contracts last week for the Illinois rights to "The Last Hour" and "I Am the Law," both C. C. Burr productions. The Griever company had previously acquired their territorial rights to "Secrets of Paris," the Burr-Whitman Bennett feature, which has gone over particularly well in Chicago and throughout the state.

C.B.C. Territorial Sales Made During Week

ALL STAR FEATURE DISTRIBUTORS of

Los Angeles and San Francisco secured territorial rights to "Her Accidental Husband," the first Belasco Production for C.B.C. distribution, starring Miriam Cooper with Forrest Stanley and Mitchel Lewis. The sale was made to Louis Hyman, of that organization, which will handle the feature in California, Arizona, Nevada, and the Hawaiian Islands.

Big Feature Rights of Louisville has closed negotiations for both "Temptation," the third picture on the C.B.C. series, starring Bryant Washburn and Eva Novak with an all star cast, and "Her Accidental Husband" for the Kentucky territory.

Walter A. Thimmig of Fine Art Pictures Corporation of St. Louis followed up his purchase of "Temptation" last week by closing for "Only a Shopgirl," the all star picturization of the Blaney melodrama. He will handle it in Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois.

Principal players for the Associated Authors' forthcoming production of "Richard, the Lion-Hearted," the Frank E. Woods screen version of Sir Walter Scott's "The Talisman" are announced as follows:

Richard, the Lion-Hearted, Wallace Beery; Sultan Saladin, Charles Gerrard; Queen Berengaria, Kathleen Clifford; Lady Edith Plantagenet, Marguerite de la Motte; Sir Kenneth, Knight of the Leopard, John Bowers; Sir Conrade de Montserrat, Clarence Geldert; Sir Thomas Devaux, Wilbur Higby; the Bishop of Tyre, Tully Marshall.

"Richard, the Lion-Hearted," which is being produced under the joint supervision of Mr. Woods, Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris for release through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, is being directed by Chet Withey, with Joseph Walker in charge of the camera staff.

"Down to Sea in Ships" Praised by Editor

Foster Gilroy, director of advertising and publicity for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is in receipt of a letter from "Bob" Davis, editor in chief of the Frank A. Mnsay publications, giving his opinion on the Elmer Clifton production, "Down to the Sea in Ships," recently released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

The letter reads, in part, as follows:

"'Down to the Sea in Ships' is the 'gem of the ocean.' I sat there enthralled for two hours. It's a whale of a picture.

"(Signed) R. DAVIS."

Author's Friends Praise "Masters of Men"

"Masters of Men," Vitagraph's special production based on Morgan Robertson's sea story, not only met with general commendation from all the critics who have seen it, but is receiving a hearty endorsement from the personal friends of the author, it is said. Letters of praise are reaching the Vitagraph offices from all sections of the country, all of them unsolicited. One of the most recent letters to arrive was from J. B. Kelly, editor of "Action Stories," and who is one of Robertson's publishers. He is thoroughly conversant with the story, "Masters of Men," and wrote as follows:

"Congratulations to you on the wonderful picture you have made of this splendid story! I must admit that I went to see this picture in fear and trembling.

"You have not only made an interesting picture of 'Masters of Men,' but an honest one."

"Tol'able David" Goes Well in England

"Tol'able David," the Richard Barthelmess picture produced by Inspiration Pictures for First National, is meeting with the same success in England as it did in this country, judging from newspaper criticisms of the production which have reached the First National Home Office.

The reviewer of the Manchester Guardian, one of the most powerful papers in Great Britain, makes the following statement: "For those who have eyes to see, here is an artistic joy. It is a film to be watched carefully and watched again; it is an author's film, strongly and simply told; a painter's film, bold and beautiful; an actor's film—ten times an actor's film, as Barthelmess will show—and a producer's life work."

"Down to Sea in Ships" Philly Success

"Down to the Sea in Ships," produced by the Whaling Film Corporation and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is reported to have been received with enthusiasm at its opening in the Karlton Theatre, Philadelphia. Capacity audiences are said to have greeted it three times daily for the first two days. This marks the first time the picture has played to popular prices. Fifty cents is the top at the Karlton.

Some clever exploitation and publicity by George Harvey, who worked in conjunction with the Stanley Company of America and the Hodkinson Exchange in Philadelphia, was largely responsible for the large turnouts. The picture is booked for an indefinite run at the Karlton.

Praise Snow's Big Game Picture

Educators Commend "Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera"

"HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA WITH GUN AND CAMERA," H. A. Snow's film now being released by Universal, has aroused interest throughout the educational world, it is said. Universal reports that school heads gladly co-operate in putting the picture over, and that many colleges, museums and natural history societies have approached the film company or various exhibitors for special showings.

High praise has been accorded to the film by many educators. Among them are professors from the University of Iowa and the University of Pittsburgh, where special showings recently were held. Officials of the Carnegie Museum of Pittsburgh also hail Snow's picture as highly instructive and entertaining.

"It is the best and most complete film of its kind that I have ever seen. For nearly two hours my students and I gave it our undivided attention. From beginning to end it was full of instructive information with thrills enough to satisfy all, including 'Young America,'" said Homer R. Dill, Director of the Vertebrate Museum, of the Museum of Natural History which is a part of the State University of Iowa. One of his associates, C. C. Nutting, of the Department of Zoology, commented as follows, after seeing the film:

"One might live a lifetime in Africa and not see as much as we did to-night. Such films are of great educational value. My pupils were loud in their praise of the latter part of the exhibit, particularly of the parts with the herd of elephants."

"I consider it a most accurate and graphic picture of African animal life shown," said A. S. Coggeshall, Curator of Education of the Carnegie Museum. "The titles are scientifically correct and highly educational."

Douglas Stewart, director of the Carnegie Museum, said:

"I think they are the finest moving pictures I have ever seen of African wild life. It is a great satisfaction to museum men to see a tendency towards educational films which are truly educational. I wish to recommend highly the fact that your subtitles are true."

In the same vein, Arthur W. Henn, curator of Ichthyology of the same institution, also praised the picture.

"I consider the film to be highly instructive and entertaining. It presents a picture of the African continent and its remarkable animal life which could not be obtained otherwise, even through the perusal of many volumes."

Similar commendation also was expressed by Alfred Emerson, a member of the faculty of the University of Pittsburgh. "One is literally carried along with the expedition in all its trials and dangerous adventures," he said. "The picture leaves one with a wonderful impression of the life and habits of the rapidly disappearing animal life in Africa."

Two "Ten Commandments" Casts

De Mille Announces Separate Groups for Biblical Prologue and Modern Story

TWO separate and distinct casts of well-known and featured players will interpret the forthcoming film version of "The Ten Commandments," Cecil B. DeMille announced in Hollywood.

One group of players will interpret the Biblical prologue and the other is to carry on the modern story evolved by Jeanie Macpherson to interpret the Decalogue in its relation to present day life.

It is said that both the Biblical and modern groups will contain world-famous names. Those who appear in the Biblical section will not, however, appear in the modern part of the production, giving the unusual spectacle of two separate casts of featured players.

No announcement has yet been made of those who will appear.

Mr. DeMille is searching all of filmdom and the stage for players to fit specific parts and there are many under consideration for each part. At present special care is being taken in the choice of the players who will interpret in the Biblical section the parts of Moses, Aaron, Miriam and Pharaoh Rameses II, the famous Pharaoh of the Oppression.

These outstanding Biblical figures will require players of unusual ability as their performances will be carefully watched by millions of people to whom they are familiar through Biblical reading.

The modern characters are also to be extremely interesting, it is announced, persons capable of handling strongly outlined roles in a vivid story.

Company Goes to Rim of Arctic for Scenes

Never before, it is claimed, has a story of the North been attempted on the elaborate scale on which Reginald Barker is beginning to film "The Master of Woman." Such outstanding successes as "Hearts Aflame," "The Storm" and "The Old Nest" prove Mr. Barker's capability for handling spectacular melodramas.

Among the locations to be used by the company are Mt. Robson, Lesser Slave Lake, Revelstoke Gorge near Vancouver and Herschel Island. A special expedition is to be sent to the latter, which is on the rim of the Arctic and which marks the furthestmost point north in the jurisdiction of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. Here a number of scenes will be staged on board a whaler frozen in the Arctic Sea. This will necessitate the company's making a trip of 2,300 miles over the Mackenzie Trail.

While in Canada Chief Photographer Percy Hilburn will take pictures of the great caribou herds, elk, timber wolves, bear and musk oxen in their natural habitat for use as colorful touches in the production.

Preferred Product Off Well in Canada

Louis Rosenfeld, assistant general manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., of Canada, who are the distributors there of Al Lichtman's Preferred Pictures, was in New York last week and reported that the Preferred product opened to a wonderful start in that territory.

There is not a town in Canada of 5,000 population or over that has not played or contracted for "Rich Men's Wives," and the picture has made an indelible impression on every exhibitor who has showed it, is the report.

Famous Players recently brought in prints of "Shadows," "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and "Poor Men's Wives," and these pictures have already played theatres in the two key cities, Toronto and Montreal. "The Hero" and "Are You a Failure?" are also contracted for in these two cities for early exhibition.

Rotogravure Insert for "Temptation"

In line with their determination to issue exploitation novelties on their features that shall be in every way distinctive and worthy of a first-run production, the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has prepared a beautiful four-page rotogravure insert on "Temptation."

The insert is full newspaper size, laid out with decorative art work to bring out the full value of the scenes.

Coast Women Endorse "Girl I Loved"

Unstinted praise and unqualified indorsement have been given by the California Federation of Women's Clubs to Charles Ray's United Artists' release, "The Girl I Loved." In announcing their action, Mrs. A. A. Hummel, motion picture chairman of the federation, wrote to Mr. Ray as follows:

"A large group of the motion picture chairmen from the California Federation of Women's Clubs after seeing 'The Girl I Loved' agreed unanimously that this picture should be placed upon the list of 'Recommended Pictures' and sent to the women's clubs with a 'Special Mention.'

"The picture is an exquisite interpretation of humanity in which the very intensity of emotion expressed so vividly by the hero enhances the strength and devotion with which he controls it. The picture is so beautiful, so full of subtle humor and tender pathos, that to say that it is wholesome seems quite too commonplace, and yet we say it—for, with all the thrill of it, it is wholesome. We congratulate upon the achievement."

"EmptyCradle" Foreign Sale Completed

Following closely upon the announcement of the wide sale of "Women Men Marry" in foreign territories, M. H. Hoffman, Vice-President and General Manager of Truett Film Corporation, reports the sale of "The Empty Cradle," featuring Mary Alden and Harry Morey, in the United Kingdom, to R. D. Redman, Limited.

The theme of "The Empty Cradle" is one of universal appeal, dealing as it does with sacrifices which attend a mother's love. Mary Alden, famous for her portrayals of this type of role, is said to do some of the most remarkable work of her career.

Many Tieups Made for "Brass"

Fiction Version of Norris Novel to be Syndicated Throughout U. S.

A NUMBER of big publicity tieups of benefit to exhibitors have been made by the Warner Brothers publicity staff in connection with the release of the Charles G. Norris novel, "Brass," produced by Harry Rapf and directed by Sidney Franklin. The publicity, already appearing in hundreds of newspapers throughout the country, and several commercial co-operative aids are proving an invaluable means for exhibitors to advertise the picture.

Arrangements have been completed with the International Feature Syndicate, New York, for the publication of the fiction version of the Norris novel in all the leading American newspapers. The circulation of the combined newspapers is in excess of ten million, it is said, and this newspaper tie-up is occurring simultaneously with the release of the picture. Exhibitors are being advised by the Warner Brothers staff to communicate with the nearest exchange handling the Warner product to ascertain the names of the newspapers in their cities which are planning to publish "Brass" in serial form.

A new method of merchandising, which is said to be an innovation in itself, is being introduced for the first time in the exploitation of the film. The merchandising plan has been made with the Mint Products Company, which distributes the Pep-O-Mint "Life Savers" throughout all the big chain and drug stores, department stores and the United Cigar Stores. Through this arrangement the Mint Products Company will send to every theatre playing "Brass," and purchasing a quantity of "Life Savers" at a small cost, a supply of cut-out counter and window cards, slides and other advertising accessories free of charge.

E. P. Dutton & Co., publishers, have brought out a new edition of the novel and it is at present in the hands of practically every known book store in America. This new edition contains actual scenes from the picture, and the front cover shows Monte Blue and Marie Prevost in a dramatic situation with the added information that "Brass" is a Warner Brothers classic.

Plan Exploitation Distribution

Weshner Davidson Announce Exchange System For Handling All Novelties

ANNOUNCEMENT of national distribution of exploitation novelties through the medium of exchanges and exchange exploiters has been announced by the Weshner Davidson Agency. The latter concern, which has been supplying the industry at large with various novelty advertising ideas for the past year, has expended considerably in point of organization and general activity. The more and more prevalent use of novelty advertising for theatrical purposes is indicated by an increasing demand for telling the story of a presentation in a novel way, in place of the time-worn herald and throw-away, it is said.

An experimentation in novelty exploitation with approximately one hundred productions in the past six months has resulted in the final establishment of a service in co-operation with the exploitation departments of distributing organizations and exchanges throughout the country by this Agency.

This service consists in the first place of current announcements through trade paper advertising and in addition, what is called an "Exploitation Bulletin" which is mailed broadcast. Both trade paper and the "Bulletin" contain illustrations, descriptions and price of current novelty tie-ups with various productions. After the idea is devised on a novelty tie-up with a particular production samples of the novelty are to be forwarded to every exchange handling the production while the exchange exploiter is requested for bookings. Following the receipt of bookings samples of the novelty are sent to the individual exhibitor who is to play the picture.

Beginning with this week the Weshner Davidson Agency will make arrangements with the exploitation department of every New York exchange to establish a bureau or agency for the novelties which are being offered on current productions handled by that exchange.

Samples will be available for the exploiter and a special representative of the agency qualified as a finished exploiter and showman will divide his time in visiting the New York Exchanges and co-operating with their exploiters in the sale of these novelties.

Simmonds Makes C. B. C. Foreign Sales

Joseph Simmonds, who has taken over the rights to foreign distribution of the entire C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation feature production, announces this week the consummation of some important sales on various features which he is handling from this company.

To the Henrique Blunt, New York office, Mr. Simmonds' organization has completed negotiations for the release in Brazil of "Temptation," starring Bryant Washburn and Eva Novak; and "Her Accidental Husband," the first Belasco-C. B. C. production, starring Miriam Cooper, Forrest Stanley and Mitchell Lewis.

Inter-Variety and Theatrical Agency, New York, has arranged to handle in South Africa both "Temptation" and "Her Accidental Husband," as well as "Only a Shop-girl" and "More to Be Pitied."

The same four productions have been taken over for Uruguay, Paraguay, Argentine, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador, by Jacobo Glucksmann, of New York.

"Dippy Doo Dad" Not So Dippy, Win Showing

The mysterious question, "What does a Dippy Doo Dad Do?" which Pathe announcements have been firing at exhibitors for several weeks past, was answered on the screen of the Broadway, New York, Strant theatre all last week, to the evident amusement of large audiences.

In the first place, Pathe explains, the original "Dippy Doo Dad" did this: When shown to Joseph Plunkett, the Strand manager immediately booked it for a pre-release showing. The next thing the first of the new Hal Roach newest animal series of 1-reel animal comedies, "Don't Flirt," did was to get itself heartily accepted by a representative audience on its merits. That acceptance continued to hold good all the week.

The Hal Roach "Dippy Doo Dads" are comic productions with a real story acted entirely by animals. This first one has a cast made up of geese, a dog, a monkey and a cat, and these animals interpret a story called "Don't Flirt," in which an adventuresome gander is the reprehensible character. The methods whereby the other animals bring him to book for his conduct are described as almost human in their ingenuity.

Realism Claimed For "Man From Glengarry"

An unusual incident can be found in "The Man From Glengarry," an Ernest Shipman production released through the W. W. Hodgkinson Corporation, which shows a log-rolling or "log-barrelling" contest staged between two lumberjacks. In order to give this Ralph Connor story an unquestioned touch of realism Ernest Shipman not only selected the locale upon the exact locations as called for in the book, but is also said to have secured the services of experienced rivermen who have every opportunity to demonstrate their abilities at log riding.

Exploitation For "Poor Men's Wives"

Ben Amsterdam, Al Lichtman's franchise holder in the Philadelphia territory, is personally supervising the exploitation campaign in that city on the Preferred Picture, "Poor Men's Wives." A feature of this campaign is the posting of eighty twenty-four sheets in Philadelphia. These have already been up for more than four weeks.

The tie-up effected by Mr. Amsterdam with the Dier Kiss Company on "Poor Men's Wives" is one of the most successful reported recently to the Al Lichtman Corporation. This was first put over when the picture played the Karlton theatre, where samples of that firm's powder were distributed by girls in costumes designed especially for the occasion. The stunt was repeated in Washington at the Central theatre and was put across again last week in Atlantic City at the Bijou theatre.

When Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, sailed on the Paris, April 25, for a two months' vacation in Europe, the only picture he took with him was J. E. Williamson's "Wonders of the Sea," the new Film Booking Office release.

Dr. Riesenfeld, personally, is a great admirer of the undersea production—it having played three consecutive weeks at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres.

Chaplin, Lloyd Equally Popular in England

According to Victor Saville, head of the leading distributing company of Great Britain, there is no controversy in that country over the comparative standing of the two great film comedy stars, Harold Lloyd and Charles Chaplin—in popularity they share honors equally.

Mr. Saville is in this country to engage several American stars to appear in English productions. Recently he made a protracted visit to the Hal Roach Studios, Culver City, Cal., where he devoted a whole day to watching Harold Lloyd putting the finishing touches to the comedy which will follow "Safety Last" in Pathe's list of Lloyd releases.

Selznick President Tells Plans

Carefully Making Balanced Selections For Accommodation of Exhibitors

W. C. J. DOOLITTLE, President of the Selznick Distributing Corporation, has issued a statement in reference to independent productions and independent distribution which is a direct message to all exhibitors who are turning to the Independent field for their entertainment. Because the Selznick company is concentrating on the distribution of independent productions Mr. Doolittle's comments are invested with interest and authority.

"It has become increasingly apparent in the few weeks since we announced our intention to function only as distributors," says Mr. Doolittle, "that there is an abundance of most desirable product awaiting a satisfactory outlet. As a matter of fact we have been compelled, reluctantly, to reject many pictures we would have liked to handle simply because they did not blend into our schedule so as to offer us the sort of a balanced selection it is our aim to offer exhibitors.

"While we are wholly committed to the policy of selling each production on its individual merit, we do not for a minute lose sight of the fact that a great majority of exhibitors prefer to buy as many pictures a year as is possible from one distributor provided they are accorded the privilege of selection and rejection.

"It is our aim to offer such a well balanced selection of pictures that we can sell virtually all of our output to our exhibitor clientele. We make no concessions designed to influence an exhibitor to take on our whole year's output, but we do aim to achieve the same result by diversifying our product so that every picture will measure up and, at the same time, not follow too closely the general theme of other pictures we are releasing.

"Madness of Youth" Is Praised

Trade Paper Reviewers Are Favorably Impressed with John Gilbert Vehicle

TRADE press reviewers were unanimous in describing "The Madness of Youth," the most recent John Gilbert vehicle, which Fox Film Corporation released on April 8th, as an interesting and entertaining picture.

Following are some excerpts from the printed reviews in last week's issues of the trade publications:

Motion Picture News—"There is always room for a novelty picture. 'The Madness of Youth,' although offering other essential attributes, wins a place for itself upon the strength of its appeal as a motion picture apart from the ordinary. Withal, it is a made-to-order vehicle for John Gilbert, lending opportunity to promote his popularity and offering possibilities to bring out his ability as an actor and star."

Moving Picture World—"Fox's latest vehicle for John Gilbert is unusually strong in audience appeal. This promising young star has seldom been associated with material which suits him as well as this does. 'The Madness of Youth' has that romantic glamor which accentuates his personality. It should go far in popularizing him."

The Exhibitors' Trade Review commented upon the satisfactory amusement which the picture furnishes, and said: "'The Madness of Youth' should get over well in localities where highly romantic stories are enjoyed."

Lee-Bradford Conclude Numerous Deals

Frank Whittle, special representative for the Lee-Bradford Corporation, has just returned from an extended tour throughout the Middle West and entire South, where he has been very successful in closing numerous deals for that organization.

Relative to the conditions existing in the various territories which Mr. Whittle visited, he states that they are improving rapidly and the future outlook is very good for the independent.

"Master of Women" Is New Mayer Title

"The Master of Woman" has been selected by Louis B. Mayer as the releasing title for Reginald Barker's new picture for Metro, now being produced under the book name of "The Law-Bringers." Written by G. B. Lancaster, the novel was prepared in scenario form by Monte M. Katterjohn.

To film all of the exterior scenes in the original locale of the book, Mr. Barker recently took his entire company to Canada, establishing headquarters at both Edmonton and Athabasca Landing. Among the stars in the cast of "The Master of Women" are: Renee Adoree, Earle Williams, Barbara La Marr, Pat O'Malley, Wallace Beery, Josef Swickard, George Kuwa, Pat Harmon, Robert Anderson, Ed J. Brady and Joan Lowell.

Brooklyn Church Shows "Silas Marner"

The Associated Exhibitors feature, "Silas Marner," was the attraction at two showings on Friday of last week in the "Old First Church," Seventh Avenue and Carroll Street, Brooklyn, as a treat to residents of the neighborhood. In the afternoon the children of the block were admitted to see the picture and in the evening the showing was for adults.

The officials of the church, desiring the organization to serve in a measure as a community center, have arranged to give a series of screen entertainments, every Friday afternoon for the kiddies and once or twice a month for grown-ups.

Western Comedy Shot on Staten Island

Gregory La Cava, director of the All-Star comedies for C. C. Burr had a Western scenario handed him last week, and instead of going West, he starting shooting a Staten Island with Charlie Murray, Raymond McKee, Kathlene Martyn, a bunch of New York cowboys and some real Indians.

Charlie Murray plays the sheriff. Ray McKee was a tenderfoot, while Kathlene Martyn played the role of the rancher's daughter.

As yet, the comedy has not been given a title. It is completed and soon will be released through the Hodkinson Corporation.

Critics Praise "Within the Law"

N. Y. Reviewers Commend Picture and Cast Following Showing at the Strand

NORMA TALMADGE never offered greater proof of her ability as an emotional actress than in "Within the Law," her latest production, according to critics of New York newspapers, who this week reviewed the picture at the Strand Theatre. Credit is not only given to the star, but the entire cast come in for their share of laudatory comment.

"A vigorous, creditable drama that does not let go the interest of the spectator for a minute," writes Joseph Mulvaney in the New York American.

The production is classed by P. W. Gallicao, of the Daily News, as "a high-class and gripping film." "You can make no mistake by visiting the Strand this week," reads the criticism.

Don Allen, in the Evening World, announced that he considered "Within the Law" much more entertaining on the screen than on the stage, and, he adds, "It will be, beyond a doubt, even more successful."

The Evening Sun critic wrote: "Probably Bayard Veiller, the author of that thumping melodrama, 'Within the Law,' had no eye on movie rights when he wrote it, but he managed to hit an ideal movie story in better fashion than many contemporary writers. . . . 'Within the Law' is just as exciting as ever."

"With the possible exception of 'Lightnin'," wrote the Evening Telegram, "there is probably no recent American drama so well known as Bayard Veiller's 'Within the Law.' . . . In adapting 'Within the Law,' Frances Marion, who wrote the scenario, has injected scenes that intensify the story, and Director Frank Lloyd has made every foot of the film pulsating."

Arrow Closes Foreign Contract

London Concern Negotiates Deal Involving Four Feature Productions

D. J. MOUNTAIN, Arrow's Foreign Manager, announces the consummation of a foreign deal which involves the disposal of four of Arrow's big productions to Tom Davies, of Pearl Films, Ltd., and Western Import Company of London, England.

The productions secured by Mr. Davies are "Jacqueline," or "Blazing Barriers," the big James Oliver Curwood special; "Lost in a Big City," the Arrow-Blazed Trail production; "The Broken Violin," the Atlantic Features picture; and "Man and Wife," starring Norma Shearer, Gladys Leslie, Maurice Costello and Robert Elliott.

This deal is considered highly important by the Arrow organization, not only from a monetary standpoint, but because it places these four Arrow specials in the hands of one of the ablest and oldest showmen in the United Kingdom. Mr. Davies exploited "The Birth of a Nation" for Griffith and has successfully exploited "The Kid" and many other big successes in England. He states that he intends leasing a legitimate theatre in London and putting both "Jacqueline" and "Lost in a Big City" in as stellar attractions at top prices, and expresses himself of the opinion that they will both enjoy long runs.

"Bill of Divorcement" Boston Hit

Associated Exhibitors Feature Wins Commendation of Hub Reviewers

THE Associated Exhibitors picture, "A Bill of Divorcement," in which Constance Binney is starred, was the feature attraction in both the Modern and Beacon theatres, in Boston, last week. Reports to Associated's home offices in New York tell of big crowds and much enthusiasm at every showing, and the reviews in the Boston newspapers were enthusiastic.

Following the opening of the run the Boston Herald said: "At the Modern and Beacon theatres this week there is a specially meritorious bill of photoplays, headed by Constance Binney in a picturing of the dramatic success, 'A Bill of Divorcement.' This deals in a courageous manner with the question of divorce. The story develops dramatically and leads to a powerful climax. While the play treats the subject of divorce frankly, there is not an offensive moment in the action. Miss Binney is provided with a part that gives her splendid opportunities. Fay Compton gives her a fair race for honors."

The Boston Telegram said, in the course of its review: "The picture brings to us Constance Binney, charming and piquant. The role allotted to her once more displays her abilities, and they are many. Fay Compton plays the mother with her usual skill, and Malcolm Keen as the deranged father acted with much realism and in a convincing manner."

Big Pictures For Independents

C. B. C. Special Representative Declares Demand is for Bigger Productions

IN line with their policy of keeping in close touch with the situation throughout the entire Independent field, the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, at stated intervals during the year, sends out a questionnaire to Independent Exchange men and exhibitors in the various territories, and, at the same time, sends on the road a special representative to talk with other buyers and exhibitors. Thus they are enabled to watch the trend of the market, which, according to Jack Cohn and Joe Brandt, of C. B. C., is the first essential to successful Independent distribution.

Hal Hodes has just returned to New York after a special trip along these lines in the interests of the C. B. C. Organization, with word that all signs seem to point to a bigger and bigger demand on the part of Independent buyers everywhere for pictures that are big productions in every way.

The returns from the questionnaires that C. B. C. has sent out show identically the same trend, says Jack Cohn, of C. B. C.

"The Independents are through forever with 'small stuff'—they want what they characterize 'big' pictures—big stars, big stories, big sets, big directors, big ideas. The little 'picayune' releases that used to be associated with Independent distribution has gone the way of progress—the men who have won a place in the field and who are recognized as live showmen are through with them."

"This does not men," says Mr. Cohn, "that they do not want short releases. They do—but even these must be 'different' and made on a scale denoting big thought—with good sets and directors, and players who have a recognized place in that particular field, in the case of short comedies and dramas; and must have originality and be away from the beaten paths in the 'novelty' reels."

Fair Dealing Is Policy of Pathe

New President of Organization Tells Reasons for Company's Prosperity

THE following letter from Paul Fuller, Pathe's new President, addressed to Timer Pearson, Vice-President and General Manager, forms an interesting sequel to the official record of the Stockholders and Directors annual meeting held on Tuesday of last week:

"Please accept my thanks for your congratulations and good wishes. I have always believed that the great need, making for success in the motion picture business, lay in the application of the same sound business principles and the same ideals of equity and fair-dealing that have been applied to other successful industries. A strict application of these principles has resulted in the present extremely prosperous condition of Pathe Exchange and has inured to the benefit of the stockholders and employees alike.

"I wish to assure you that in so far as I am to be responsible for the policies and management of the Company it will be my aim to produce the largest possible profits for the stockholders of the Company. This I believe can best be accomplished (1st) by the distribution only of the very best productions, (2nd) by rigid economy, at the same time recognizing to the fullest extent the merit and loyalty of the employees of the Company and (3rd) by the most scrupulous fair-dealing with Exhibitors and Producers alike.

"I sincerely trust that everyone in the Pathe Organization will pull together with zest, with these few principles in mind.

"Allow me to congratulate you upon the merited recognition of your valued services."

An Advance in Art of Modern Sign Design Striking Advertising Display Attracts Attention of All Broadway

By J. M. Shute, Illuminating Engineer

OBJECTS of real merit are always, in time, given recognition by the Public.

However, by advertising in the best possible manner the recognition is obtained from a larger number of persons in a much shorter period of time. The motion picture industry realizes the value of advertising in general and electric advertising in particular.

The Paramount Company's production of Mr. Emerson Hough's story, "The Covered Wagon," has given the Public a masterpiece of the screen art and it is therefore fitting that the attention of the public be drawn to this picture by electric signs of an equally meritorious character.

In the effort to do this the Norden Co., and especially Mr. Mortimer Norden, the engineer of the company, should receive especial recognition. The electric signs built for the opening run of "The Covered Wagon" at the Criterion Theatre in New York City reach a high water mark in the art of sign lighting and design. The signs are undoubtedly the most artistic, interest compelling and novel, not only in appearance but in the manner of operation, that have ever been presented to Broadway.

Scene from Picture Used

To create this masterpiece of the electric sign art, an actual scene has been taken from the film and adapted to its use on a sign with such exactness of detail that the interest of the passerby is drawn to it and his emotions touched in the same manner in which the person viewing the film is affected by the scene.

The sign depicts a huge wagon, alone, abandoned in the river and deserted by all signs of human life, while the water flows slowly and calmly past on its journey, creating a sense of loneliness.

Analysis of the Problem

To produce an electric sign, which will attract the attention of the crowds of pleasure seeking passers and hold the attention by filling their minds with such deeply rooted emotions, requires the skill of an artist and a firm grasp of the situation at hand. A deep analysis of the picture to be advertised is demanded to obtain the one scene of the entire production best suited to its use on a sign. After the scene has been selected it must then be adapted in the best possible manner to give it the highest advertising value.

In this case, exposed lamp signs, interior lighted signs, flood lighted pictures and automatically operated stereopticons have been combined in a manner to produce the wonderful effect which is obtained. This method of handling is novel as the sign maker has adapted the property of the stage manager to produce the desired results. He has created something different from what is ordinarily seen and in this way has obtained greater attractive power and has advanced the art of sign lighting.

Treatment of the Problem

The main sign facing Broadway is sixty feet long by thirty-nine feet high. On this is painted a picture of a large covered wagon or prairie schooner, sixty feet long by twenty-six feet high. The wagon stands in water which takes up approximately eight feet of the frame. On the wagon are nine foot sign letters reading "The Covered Wagon." Each of the letters is illuminated by two rows of exposed lamps, the 50 watt blue Mazda "B" sign lamp being used.

In the center of the water is a small sign reading in raised bronze letters, "Paramount Pictures." The letters are set in a box, the face of which together with the letters are flush with the water. By illuminating these letters from the rear by indirect lighting and allowing the light to spread over the water background for a distance of about six inches in all directions and painting the background of the sign to match the water, the letters appear to the observer as if set in the river.

The upper portion of the sign including the wagon is lighted by ten 500 watt flood lights located on the upper side of the marquee. By this method the light is reflected upward from the picture and away from the passer, thus precluding the possibility of annoyance from reflected glare. An example of the exactness of detail in this sign is shown from the fact that a lighted lantern, similar in every way to the ones used in 1849, is attached to the wagon.

The water effect is obtained by six stereopticons automatically operated by motors which turn the color wheel on which water is painted. Each stereopticon is equipped with a very large special size Mazda "C" stereopticon lamp in order to obtain the necessary intensity of light for the effect. When in operation the water actually appears to be running very slowly under the wagon as is found in our wide western rivers and gradually fades off in the distance. This effect is entirely new and novel for sign lighting, never having been previously attempted.

On the 44th St. side of the theatre is a sign thirty feet by thirty-four feet showing the end of the wagon. A sign made up of five-foot letters reading "The Covered Wagon," each letter of which is lighted by two rows of 50 watt blue Mazda "B" sign lamps is placed at the top. On each side of the wagon hang two lanterns similar to the one in front. The wagon itself is lighted by twelve 500 watt Flood lights; six at the top and six at the bottom. This arrangement brings out the details of the picture in the best possible manner.

The ensemble produced by the combination of effects is so wonderfully balanced as to bring out the beauty and attractive power to the greatest extent. The result demonstrates the heights to which the electric sign art can rise and also the effects (Continued on page 2320)

The most novel electric sign ever erected on Broadway. The effect of the illuminated wagon standing in the running water is obtained from the floodlights and automatic stereopticons located on the upper side of the marquee. The whole display requires a continuous load of approximately 100 kilowatts.

New Premier Theatre, Brooklyn, Has Exceptional Appointments for Stage

THE Premier Theatre, Sutter Avenue and Himsdale Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., opened its doors for business on March 22nd, 1923.

To those who have been watching the progress of this enterprise, it is gratifying to realize that the ceaseless effort expended in making this theatre one of the most beautiful in the country, has not been in vain.

The appreciation of the audience on the opening night was spontaneous and generous. It was readily seen they were thoroughly pleased with the appointments of the theatre in all its features.

When one considers that the lighting of a theatre, is a problem of paramount importance, in addition to making presentations from the stage an outstanding feature, the Management has installed every device that may be desired in this respect. The three color lighting system is carried through every part of the house. The lighting covers above the boxes are wonderfully arranged to illuminate the large paintings overhead. The harmony of lighting effects on the mezzanine, with its covers running around the four sides, immeasurably enhances the tone and color of the theatre. The main ceiling dome is eighty feet in diameter and contains seventy-two coffer, arranged in three concentric circles. When one contemplates the magnitude of this dome, the imagination need not be stretched to conceive the wonderful effects maintained in the theatre throughout the performance.

Draperies of the boxes and alcoves carried out in a French festoon effect in velours and plushes. The scenery represents a departure from the cut and dried palace, olio and wood sets, and in themselves are unique and original. The artists and craftsmen have undoubtedly taxed their ingenuity to the limit, in producing ideas and effects that are pleasing to the eye, rich in color and design. When it is considered that the stage is the central point of every theatre, on which all eyes are focused, the management should exercise good judgment in the selection of their scenery. This was done in the premier theatre. The Novelty Scenic Studios of New York City, are largely responsible for this, having done all the work for this theatre.

To those exhibitors who have been troubled with attracting patrons to their theatres, the atmosphere created with the proper lighting effects, wall decorations and stage scenery, must not be overlooked. In the Premier Theatre these features have been given due consideration with the certain result that the patrons have something to talk about.

On the opening night, when Mr. Riegelman, President of the Borough of Brooklyn, was called upon to address a few remarks to the audience, he was well justified in his expression of admiration as to the scenery, lighting effects and decorations of this theatre. He also said that the Borough of Brooklyn, and in fact the whole country might well be proud of the Premier Theatre.

This institution has only been possible by the undaunted courage of Mr. Samuel Lesselbaum, its general manager, and the unstinted support of the directors associated with him in relying upon his vision and ingenuity.

New Capitol Theatre, Logan, Utah, Vies with the Most Beautiful

The new Capitol motion picture theatre of Logan has just been opened and the claim of the owners that it is one of the most beautiful small theatres in the United States has been verified by hundreds. The plaster work of the interior is in the style of the Italian and French Renaissance. This is beautifully painted in oils in colors to harmonize with the drapes, which are in old rose, French grays and taupes. The carpetings are luxuriously rich and in old rose and black to harmonize with the drapes and the walls. Below are two pictures of the interior of this house. The loges all command excellent views of the stage and of a large section of the audience. They are fitted with comfortable, roomy chairs upholstered in old rose. A short ramp on the right and an easy stairway on the left lead from the mezzanine floor to the balcony. In the front balcony are seats for 186 people. The two front rows are furnished with the same wide, upholstered chairs that are found in the loges and downstairs. Above the balcony is the gallery with between 350 and 400 seats. One the rear of the right-hand section of the seats on the main floor is a nursery designed especially for the use of mothers with babes in arms. It is unique and consists of a roomy section, seated with the finest of upholstered chairs and separated from the rest of the auditorium by a low wall, above which, running to the ceiling, is a partition of heavy plate glass. Through this plate partition an excellent view of the stage can be secured. The room is soundproof, and thus crying children will in no way bother patrons of the theatre.

An entire orchestra of fifty pieces can be placed in the pit. To accomplish this the pit extends in steps back under the stage for several feet. At the back of the orchestra pit and, therefore, farther under the stage, is the organ pit, where a large pipe organ is installed. Special planning has made it possible to secure ample room for the organ pipes, a thing not possible in the ordinary playhouse.

The beauty in the magnificent Tiffany wall panels, the harmonious lines of the balcony, the majesty of the proscenium opening and the thousand and one things all together, make Logan's new theatre one of the finest small theatres in America.—Hunt.

The new Capitol theatre, Logan Utah is an exceptionally attractive house. In the rear on the main floor is a nursery equipped with a sound proof glass partition for the use of babies and their mothers or attendants.

"A Good Investment"

EXHIBITORS are always on the look-out for a good investment, whether it is a new projector, an improved ticket booth, or a facing material for building attractive, business-getting theatre fronts.

In the latter field Terra Cotta is one of the best investments possible. Here's what Alton C. Emery, owner of Emery's Majestic, pictured above, says about it:

"We can honestly say that the Majestic Theatre is the finest building of its kind in Providence. Terra Cotta should be credited for this beautiful front that attracts so many thousands of people every day.

"The Majestic Theatre has a frontage of 120 ft. on Washington St. and is constructed with all Terra Cotta.

"This Terra Cotta cost us money, but we have never regretted the expenditure of same. We consider it a good investment."

If every exhibitor could say as much for every one of his investments his lot would be easier and his profits greater.

Terra Cotta is absolutely the ideal material for facing theatre fronts. It comes in any form or color the owner desires — permits the most pleasing ornament. You can judge for yourself how much its graceful mouldings, garlands, and other decorative details add to the general attractiveness of the theatre shown above. There is beautiful color in this front, too, for all these details are in bright glazed hues that make a striking contrast with the white background.

You'll find that for the money spent on it Terra Cotta gives greater effect in both form and color than does any comparable material. And besides, Terra Cotta is practical — unaffected by weather or time, fire-resistant to the utmost.

Let us tell you more about its value to you as "a good investment." Address National Terra Cotta Society, 19 West 44th Street, New York, N. Y.

Spherical Aberration. Owing to the fact that lenses are made with spherical curves, all single collective lenses have the defect of imaging an object through their marginal zone at a shorter focus than through their central zone. Such a lens may give a sharp image with a small central diaphragm, and a sharp image as well if the center is covered with a round opaque stop so that only an annular zone around the margin comes into action. But both images will not lie in the same plane, nor will they be of the same size. Even if a lens is spherically corrected, so that the parallel rays penetrating the lens near the optical axis and those going through the lens near the margin come to exactly the same focus, there may be a slight remnant of spherical aberration in the zone between center and margin. Small remnants of this kind (so-called Zonal Errors) are found in almost all photographic lenses, especially of the cemented symmetrical type. The unsymmetrical combination upon which the Tessar construction is based, allows a better correction of the zonal errors than any other known construction. The greater the relative aperture (speed of the lens), the greater the task to correct the spherical aberration for all zones of the lens.

Unsatisfactory spherical correction is indicated either by a general indistinctness of the image or by a fairly sharp image, which is entirely covered by halo (fog). Stopping down the aperture may improve the performance of a badly corrected objective.

Coma. The spherical aberration of pencils of light going through the lens in oblique direction is called coma. This manifests itself in the fact that although objects in the center of the field appear perfectly defined, objects outside the center show a one-sided indistinctness which increases toward the margin of the field, and in the image of a point-shaped object assumes the form of a tail like a comet, wherefrom this aberration takes its name. Stopping down reduces the amount of coma.

Astigmatism is that aberration which withstood longest the efforts of the opticians. A lens which is not corrected for astigmatism will not image sharply horizontal and vertical lines at the same time near the margin of the plate, although the center of the image may be perfect. This aberration is inherent in narrow pencils of light, so that stopping down the lens will not decrease the amount of astigmatism to the same degree that it decreases other uncorrected aberrations.

In the absence of a test chart a very simple test for astigmatism may be made by focusing on the joints of a brick wall. No matter how much the lens may be racked in or out, both horizontal and vertical lines will never be sharply defined at the same time near the margin of the plate.

Curvature of Field. The ordinary lens images a flat object, not in a plane, but in a spheroidal surface, so that when the center of the image is focused sharp, the ground glass has to be brought nearer to the lens to obtain a sharp image of an object point near the margin of the plate.

It is only in recent years that it is possible to correct astigmatism, together with the curvature of field in lenses of high speed. Lenses which are free from spherical aberration for a large aperture and produce a flat image free from astigmatism, are called "Anastigmats," the prefix "an" meaning "without," hence, without astigmatism.

Distortion is that fault of a lens which prevents the rendering of straight lines as such. The straight lines are reproduced as curves. All single lenses used with a diaphragm in front (landscape lenses) are subject to this defect in some degree. The distortion is called "cushion-shaped," when the curves are concave, and "barrel shaped," when the curves are convex toward the margin of the plate.

Lenses which are free from distortion are called rectilinear.

A lens which distorts cannot be improved by using smaller stops.

Distortion has nothing to do with curvature of field. The image can be properly flat and the definition perfect, and yet straight lines may be distorted into curves.

Chromatic aberration is due to the fact that in a lens, unless corrected from chromatic aberration, the visual rays which form the image seen on the ground glass do not form the images at the same position as the actinic or chemical rays, which affect the sensitive plate. Since the image is focused with rays for which the eye is most sensitive, the image formed by the rays for which the plate is most sensitive will fall outside of the visual focus (focal point), and therefore must be blurred on the plate. Of course all photographic lenses which are of any value at all must, first of all, be corrected for chromatic aberration. An objective which has chromatic aberration is sometimes said to have chemical focus.

This is not an uncommon defect in cinema-

Upper—Pillow Distortion
Lower—Barrel Distortion

tograph lenses, but may easily be tested for by focusing upon coarse printed matter with other placards at varying distances before and beyond the one focused upon. If any of the placards film clearer than the one focused upon it is plain proof that the visual and chemical foci do not coincide.

Chromatic Aberration
U—Focal plane of Violet Rays
R—Focal plane of Red Rays

Definition is that quality which enables a lens to produce sharp and crisp images, and its presence in an objective is a proof of exact workmanship as well as careful computation. The best workmanship will be wasted in a lens not well designed, and bad workmanship will annihilate the best computer's skill. If the various defects and aberrations are corrected and the workman has done everything to carry out the designer's ideas, the lens will give at full aperture a flat and sharply cut image over the entire area covered. The area covered with perfection is sometimes called area of critical definition. Since most of the aberrations depend upon the opening of the lens, the definition may be improved in some cases by reducing the opening at the sacrifice of speed.

Illumination. We speak of even illumination when the margin of the plate receives as much light as the center, and the negative shows an even density over its entire surface. A perfectly even illumination is only possible with small stops, especially when a larger plate than the lens is rated for, is used. All speed lenses when used with full aperture, show more or less drop in the illumination (vignetting) toward the margin of the field covered.

This vignetting or cutting of oblique rays by the lens barrel is apt to show quite plainly in pictures taken at large aperture with extreme short focus cine lenses. To get a full exposure at the edges may even require a slightly larger diaphragm opening than is needed with a lens of longer focus where the vignetting effect is imperceptible within the small area of the aperture plate.

Covering Power is expressed by the area which the evenly illuminated flat field covers with perfect definition. It depends upon the diameter of the lenses and on the degree to which the different aberrations are corrected and may, in some cases, be increased by using smaller stops.

The greater the relative aperture and the greater the covering power, the more valuable the lens.

Flare Spots. Occasionally a negative will show a nebulous patch of light covering shadows and high lights alike. Such patches are called flare spots or ghosts. They are formed by light reflected within the lens, at the lens surfaces bounding air spaces. It may be stated as a rule that every lens having an air space

Keith's Theatre

Cleveland, Ohio

The Keith Theatre is another of our installations consisting of over twenty-five hundred chairs. Its beauty can only be realized by those who have actually viewed its interior.

Comfort and Beauty Both Essential

WHEN theatre patrons enter your theatre, the first impression they get is its beauty. Their eyes wander from one point of interest to another and all unconsciously make comparison with other theatres. But, however beautiful your theatre may be, if the seating is of poor quality the lack of comfort creates a feeling of restlessness so that performance and attractions cannot be fully enjoyed.

Great care is taken by our Theatre Engineering Department to plan chairs that not only harmonize perfectly with the theatre interior but offer the greatest possible comfort as well. Ease in operation, elimination of squeaks, well proportioned backs and seats and correctly placed arm rests are only a few of the points considered for proper comfort.

A broadside is being prepared showing recent theatre chair installations made by us and also chair suggestions for the refurbishing of old or the entire equipping of new theatres.

Alternating Current Circuits

LESSON IV—PART III.

Series and Parallel Circuits

HE two forms of resistance present in alternating current circuits, i.e., reactance and absolute resistance, can be connected up in exactly the same manner as can the ordinary resistances in direct current circuits. The two principle arrangements being, of course, in series and parallel.

Due to the peculiar voltage and current relations obtained, however, when these quantities are connected in a circuit, a method different from that explained in the case of direct currents must be used to determine their combined effect.

Resistance and Reactance in Series

It will be remembered that when two resistances were connected in series in a direct current circuit, their values were simply added together in order to determine their total resistance. To determine the total obstruction, or hindrance, so to speak, offered to the flow of current in an alternating current circuit when resistance and reactance are connected in series, square the resistance, then square the reactance; add these two figures together and extract their square root. (See Lesson 1 Part 1).

This is perhaps more clearly explained by Fig. 36 where A shows the way the resistance

R, and reactance X, are laid out on paper in order to find the value of the Impedance Z (Impedance means the same as total resistance in a D. C. circuit) and C, the simple proof that if the resistance and reactance are squared their sum will be equal to the impedance squared.

$$\begin{aligned} X^2 + R^2 &= Z^2 \\ (3 \times 3) + (4 \times 4) &= Z^2 \\ 9 + 16 &= Z^2 \\ 25 &= Z^2 \\ 5 &= \sqrt{Z^2} = Z \end{aligned}$$

Thus, if the resistance is 3 ohms and the reactance is 4 ohms, the result will be as follows:

Figure 38

The formulae are usually written

$$Z = \sqrt{R^2 + X^2}$$

$$R = \sqrt{Z^2 - X^2}$$

$$X = \sqrt{Z^2 - R^2}$$

From these equations we see that if we know any two of the three quantities, resistance; reactance or impedance, we can find the third.

Effect of Series Combination on Circuit

It was shown in Lesson IV Part II that in a circuit containing nothing but resistance, the current was strictly in phase with the voltage driving it and in a circuit containing nothing but reactance, the current lagged the applied voltage by 90 degrees. What will be the effect when both resistance and reactance are connected in series? Obviously the current will lag the applied voltage assuming that the reactance is inductive and not condensive. The amount of the phase displacement, as such leading or lagging is called, will depend upon how much reactance is used in proportion to the resistance. If the resistance is small and the reactance large, the phase displacement (angle of lead or lag) will be large and if the resistance is large compared with the reactance, the phase displacement will be small. It is desirable in ordinary alternating current circuits to keep the phase displacement as small as possible in order to avoid unnecessary power losses. This will be explained in detail in following lessons.

The wave forms representing the current and voltage relations in a series circuit are shown in Fig. 37. We will start by supposing a current flowing in a circuit containing resistance and reactance in series. This current, I, will cause an IR drop across the resistance, R, which will be in phase with the current, Fig. 37. It has already been shown that in the case of reactance the current lags the reactive voltage by 90 degrees, hence this voltage, E_x (called the IX drop) is shown leading the current by 90 degrees. The voltage of self induction, E_{si} , which is equal and opposite to the IX drop, E_{ix} , is shown lagging the current by 90 degrees. This voltage is always negative.

Now the sum of the IR and IX drops is equal to the applied voltage E_a and hence E_a is obtained by adding the two curves, E_{ix} and E_{ir} . Thus at the 0 degree position, $E_{ir}=0$ and $E_{ix}=3$, their sum is accordingly 3 and at 45 degrees they are 1.5 and 2.5 respectively and so their sum is 4 as shown by on the curve E_a , etc.

Another way of showing the same thing is contained in Fig. 38. Here the current I is drawn to scale in the direction shown. Since the IR drop E_{ir} , is in phase with the current it draws right on top of it and also to scale. The voltage, E_{ix} , equal to the IX drop is drawn 90 degrees ahead of the current because it leads it by 90 degrees. Now to find the applied voltage we must add E_{I_r} and E_{I_x} so a line is drawn straight up from the end of E_{I_r} until it meets another line drawn straight over from the end of E_{I_x} . Another line drawn from point O, the starting point of all the lines, to the meeting point of the two lines just described, will be the applied voltage, E_a . The length of this line, measured to the same scale, as was used for the others, will give the value of the voltage. The angle A is known as the angle of lag.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

Results obtained through printing on Eastman Positive Film justify the painstaking efforts of the camera-man. It reproduces with striking fidelity every tone of the negative from highest light to deepest shadow. It carries quality through to the screen.

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base—now obtainable in thousand foot lengths, is identified throughout its length by the words “Eastman” “Kodak” stenciled in black letters in the transparent margin.

Resistance and Reactance in Parallel

Resistance and reactance can be also connected in parallel just as resistance in the case of D. C. circuits. In this case, to find the current flowing the reciprocal of the resistance and reactance, each squared (multiplied by itself) must be added together and then the square root extracted from the sum so obtained. Then this figure must be multiplied by the voltage in order to get the current. The required formula is as follows:

$$I = \sqrt{I_r^2 + I_x^2}$$

To take a practical example: Find the current flowing in a circuit containing a resistance of 4 ohms and a reactance of 5 ohms in parallel if 100 volts is applied across the circuit.

$$Z = 0.32$$

Using the formula given above, we have

$$I = E \times 0.32 \text{ or}$$

$$I = 100 \times .32$$

$$I = 32 \text{ amperes}$$

Effect of Parallel Combination on Circuit

The current and voltage relations in such a circuit will be as shown in Fig. 39. In this case, the applied voltage, E_a , is constant over the entire circuit and is shown in the figure as starting at 0 degrees. The current I_r , represents the current flowing through the resistance and since this is in phase with the applied voltage it naturally rises and falls with it. Now the current flowing through the reactance, X , lags the applied voltage by 90 degrees and is hence shown by the I_x wave. The total current flowing through the mains will be sum of these two currents and curve I is obtained by adding the two curves I_r and I_x in a manner similar to that described before in the case of voltages under series circuits.

The other method of showing the same thing is contained in Fig. 40. In this figure E impressed is the applied voltage, I_r the current through the resistance in phase with this voltage. I_x is the current showing through the reactance which lags the voltage by 90 degrees. The sum of these two currents gives I the total current which lags the voltage E impressed by the angle a known, as said once before, as the angle of lag.

will show a flare spot under some conditions. Although it is possible to so adjust the curvature and direction of the lens surfaces that the flare spot is spread over nearly the whole plate (therefore not noticeable) this generally could be accomplished only by sacrificing more important corrections.

Before it can be said that one lens is superior to another with respect to flare spot formation, the two lenses must be thoroughly tried out under a great variety of conditions of illumination. Generally it will be found that if a lens shows a flare spot and another of different construction does not, by changing conditions, the second lens will show a flare spot and the first will not.

Very small stops may show flare spots when larger stops do not.

Flare spots are most apt to appear when photographing an object against a strong light and least apt to appear when the light is coming from back of the camera.

A condition resembling flare is apt to occur in a dirty lens particularly from almost imperceptible spots from oil spattered by the camera mechanism or from finger prints. Moral: Examine the lens frequently and keep it immaculately clean and well protected.

Flare will occur with the best of lenses if strong extraneous light is allowed to strike the lens. Moral number two: Use a lens hood.

Marr & Colton Installs Concert Organs

The demand for theatre organs continues, and the Marr and Colton Co., Warsaw, N. Y., are busy on many instruments for early delivery.

A few of the organs just opened or about to be delivered follow:

The New Palace theatre, Jamestown, N. Y.
Civic theatre, Richmond Hills, N. Y.
Rivoli theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.
New Lyric theatre, Carnegie, Pa.
New Astor theatre, Detroit, Mich.
Martha theatre, Hamtrank, Mich.
Cataract theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y.
Oatka theatre, Warsaw, N. Y., and many others.

It is interesting to note the number of theatres where they are discarding the old-style pit instruments and installing the modern two-manual concert organ. Exhibitors are finding that good music, as well as good pictures, is the demand of the theatre-going public.

Palace Theatre, Beaumont, Being Redecorated

The $200,000 Palace theatre of Beaumont, Texas, which was recently damaged by fire, has been completely overhauled and redecorated and will open shortly. Complete new equipment has been purchased for the theatre throughout, which includes two power's 6-B Tye "E" projectors of the latest design, a General Electric motor-generator set, special built Minusa gold fibre screen and other units of projection equipment, these being furnished by the Southern Theatre Equipment Company, Dallas.

Seven hundred upholstered chairs on the lower floor were damaged by water, as well as 250 in the balcony, all of which were replaced by new chairs furnished by the American Seating Company of Fort Worth, Texas.

Washington Boasts of Latest Addition, the Chevy Chase Theatre

The new Chevy Chase theatre, resplendent in its simple, yet effective, color scheme, has been sponsored by Emanuel J. Stutz, who now offers the residents of the most exclusive suburb of the city of Washington a theatre of the screen, a community amusement theatre that meets the need of the region and that satisfies the entertainment vacuum that has long existed in Chevy Chase.

The lobby is flanked by two stores, one of which is already leased to a bakery proprietress, who is fitting it out very tastily. A unique system of panel etchings in a green, black and gold motif against the old gold tone color scheme of walls and ceiling impresses the visitor of this temple of silent art. Over the doors from the inner lobby, where the balcony will be erected in the summer, nothing breaks the vault but the tripetite projection booth, the operator's room, electric and rewind-room. The two Powers 6-B lamphouse machines are from the Washington theatre supply shop of A. Dreisner, who furnished and supervised the installation of the Minusa gold fibre screen on which the finest projection in Washington is possible. Billy Hamilton of the old Knickerbocker theatre will be in charge of the projection.

A platform, suitable for prologues only, serves in lieu of a stage, as the screen is right up against the wall. The generating plant is capable of handling any possible requirement in case of trouble with the power company service. The finest Robert Morton orchestral organ, installed at a cost of over $10,000, is directly in the center of the orchestra pit, and is to be presided over by Val Seannell, late of the Palace and recently with the California theatre on the Coast.

An assembly room, 32 by 60 feet, will be a great community asset and will make Mr. Stutz's pathway easier. The house is equipped with 800 seats, which were furnished by the Haywood Wakefield Seating Company of Chicago. When the balcony will be added, the Chevy Chase will increase its seating capacity by three hundred. The construction of the theatre, and the heating and ventilating, is acknowledged by everyone as of the best obtainable.—Knappen.

Photographing Sound Described for S. M. P. E.

AMONG other subjects previously mentioned which will be discussed at the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to be held in Atlantic City May 7, 8, 9 and 10th, headquarters at the Hotel Traymore, it is announced that a paper on the subject of photographic recording and photo-electric reproduction of sound will be read by J. Tykocinski-Tykociner. The principles underlying the production of reproducible sound records by means of photography will be discussed and methods of investigation concerning the adaptability of luminous discharges in gases and mercury vapor will be described. In addition, a brief description of methods, illustrated by diagrams, to modulate various forms of luminous discharges and arcs by means of audio and radio frequency current will be given.

Helena, Ark., to Have New Theatre

C. N. Jenkins, who formerly managed the Best theatre of Foreman, Ark., has under construction now in Helena, Ark., a very fine and pretentious theatre. Work on the new building is progressing very rapidly, and Mr. Jenkins hopes to have the theatre opened within a short time.

He has spared no expense whatever in obtaining the very best equipment, which is explained by the fact that he purchased from the Southern Theatre Equipment Company, Dallas, two improved type "E" 6-B Power's projectors, a General Electric motor generator set, special built Minusa gold fibre screen, a complete layout of metal moulding lobby display frames as well as theatre chairs.

Motiographs Going Strong

Strong rivalry is developing between the different distributors of Motiograph De Luxe projectors as to the number of motiograph installations they are making in their territories.

The Art Film Studios, Cleveland, Ohio, just recently completed the installation in the Liberty theatre, of Youngstown, Ohio, of two De Luxe projectors, equipped with H-I lamps, and the Amusement Supply Company, Chicago, report the following Chicago installations: Pershing theatre, Knickerbocker, Wilson Avenue, Logan Square and Madison Square theatres.

The Eastern Theatre Equipment Company of Boston has come across by selling fourteen new Motiograph De Luxe equipments in the Boston territory.

C. G. Harryman has sold his Majestic Theatre, Enid, Okla., to S. J. Davidson and E. A. Church, of Guymon, Okla., who will present feature pictures as the new policy of the house. The Lyric theatre, Mena, Ark., the only picture playhouse in the city, is soon to be replaced by a new theatre to cost over $15,000. The new house, when completed will be managed by Price McCall. The Idle Hour Theatre, Drumright, Okla., is to be razed to make way for a new department store. The former owners of the theatre will erect a new motion picture theatre to cost about $30,000 which will be erected next door to the old theatre, and will be managed by Bob Snodgrass. Building operations on the new Beyer Theatre, Excelsior Springs, Mo., have started and will be ready to open with big features shortly. Seating capacity will be about 1,000, modernly equipped and the finest projection room equipment installed. Jack Nodine has taken over the management of the Princess Theatre at Lake Preston, S. D. Walter F. Davis is the new manager of the Rialto at Council Bluffs, Iowa. Very best in first runs is the policy, improvements will take place in the theatre building shortly. The old U. S. A. Theatre, Fort Morgan, Colo., has recently been reopened under new management.—Trout.

Organ Requirements in Calcutta

Equipment exporters will be interested in a statement in the Calcutta Commercial Gazette that two types of organs are required there: the portable folding type and the medium-sized five octave. The folding type with hinged legs is popular, while the non-folding type should have easily detachable rigid legs. The five-octave type, suitable for film theatres and churches, is preferred in three to five sets of reeds, 6 to 11 stops, with lamp brackets and knee swells, dark walnut or mahogany finish.

In Venezuela the demand for player pianos is increasing, but it is said that only players of the simplest construction, capable of resisting tropical heat, moisture, insects and primitive transportation are suitable.—Knappen.

Grand Theatre Being Remodeled

The Grand theatre, in Centralia, Wash., which has been closed for the past several months, is at the present time undergoing complete remodeling, redecorating and re-equipping, and will be opened some time in March by Frank Graham, new owner and manager.

The Grand is a house of about 575 seating capacity, one of the newest in that territory. Among the equipment being put into the theatre by the B. F. Shearer Theatre Equipment Company of Seattle is two Simplex projectors, a Hartner transverter, a Gardiner gold-fibre screen and new Heywood-Wakefield opera chairs. The Seattle equipment firm is working on the house at the present time.

Mr. Graham, who recently acquired the Grand, was formerly associated with the Hub City Theatre Company of Centralia.—Prager.

its favorite sons in a SIMPLE SHORT SINGLE SUBJECT

entitled

"THE BROTHERS UNITED"

or,

"Together After Twelve Years"

SCENE: Representative Projection Room.

TIME: Present.

PLACE: Theatre in an average American community.

CHARACTERS { Twelve year old Simplex
Newly installed Simplex

NOTE

The manager of this theatre in keeping with the general tendency toward the creation of a two machine projection room has just added another Simplex projector to his equipment.

DIALOGUE

New Simplex: (Looking its neighbor over appraisingly) "Hello, old feller, how do you feel after being on the job for twelve years?"

Old Simplex: (Resentfully) "Say, where do you get that 'old feller' stuff? Why I feel as good as the first day I came here in 1911."

New Simplex: (Apologetically) "Now don't get peeved brother, I just called you 'old feller' because you are twelve years older than I am, but to me you look every bit as spry and healthy as any of the new members of our family that I left at the factory a week ago."

Old Simplex: "You betcha life I do, and let me tell you, that with the care I always get here, I am good for twelve years more. Do you know (confidentially), Jack, the projectionist here, is a prince? He sure knows how to use a machine. He's got a lotta good sense, that feller has. Why, do you know he often says to me 'Simplex, old kid, you certainly are a thoroughbred. Any old mule can drag a wagon around but it takes a thoroughbred to win a race.' He rubs me down and grooms me and cleans me up just as though I was a race horse and I certainly appreciate it for I've given him everything I had in return for his considerate treatment."

New Simplex: "Gosh! I think I am going to like it here."

Old Simplex: "I'll say you will, but here comes the boss. You just keep your eyes on me while I am doing my act and watch me perform."

New Simplex: (Soliloquizing admiringly) "Oh boy! look at that twelve year old baby humming along without a murmur. Believe me, my family is THERE."

"I must have another chat with the old boy after the show."

THAT SOMETHING

HAT is it we feel when we are conscious of being well dressed—perhaps a little better than the other fellow—live in a desirable neighborhood—dine and associate with the best in our particular circle, and can do so without depriving anyone of their just dues? It might be that something called “self-respect”, or “pride”, or “self-satisfaction”. Whatever the name the effect is the same. We have all experienced that pleasing feeling of being in harmony with our ideals and surroundings.

FOREMOST producers who have to their credit some of the finest motion picture creations that ever came out of the West have told us of the satisfaction it affords them to be able to say “Standard does all of our work.” The same warm glow of pleasure and harmony is there; an honest pride in knowing that when they furnish Standard Prints to their exhibitors they are providing what the most experienced in the industry have decreed to be the highest attainment in laboratory accomplishment. The name of “STANDARD” on prints has grown to mean to the film industry what “STERLING” means to jewelers.

"ENEMIES OF WOMEN", made from the story of Blasco Ibanez of "Four Horsemen" fame, was one of the most brilliant offerings the screen has seen in many a day. Lots of money must have been spent in making it. Well spent, too! Two words to the wise are sufficient—See it!

The famous critic of the Chicago Tribune joins with all other critics in America in giving unqualified praise to "Enemies of Women."

Every Element of Audience Appeal

"The Girl of the Golden West" has been universally successful because it is real American drama, a slice of our own history—our own lives.

No man, woman or child lives who will not thrill to the stirring days of the West in the making—and the red-blooded men and women who made it. There they struggled, laughed, gambled, cursed, killed, loved and worked out their almost incredible destinies.

One thing is sure. They lived. Now once again, on the screen, they live over those roaring days. And so will the picture live in the hearts of your patrons.

"Destined to create a new vogue—"

—Says SCREENLAND

"H. C. WITWER'S famous 'FIGHTING BLOOD' stories, which appeared in Collier's, are now in celluloid, with George O'Hara as the lovable, pugnacious Irish boy, Gale Galen, and with Clara Horton as the irresistible boarding house sweetheart, Judy," says Screenland. "These two-reel comedy dramas mark a departure in the industry, and unless we miss our guess completely, are destined to create a new vogue. They are virile, clean, and full of wholesome humor that registers almost 100%. O'Hara is a splendid type of American youth, good-looking and spontaneous. The cast could hardly be improved on. There's Mabel Van Burean as the boarding house keeper; William Courtwright as the druggist; Albert Cooke as the fight manager; Kit Guard—a real comedian—as the trainer, Arthur Rankin as the heavy and Morris Ryan as the fat boy. It is amazing to see how well Mal St. Clair has done. The titles are a joy."

100 Per Cent

THERE is one matter upon which the exhibitors of the country are agreed to a man—and that is the length of features.

They prefer them to be five thousand feet if possible, but they insist that they do not exceed six thousand feet.

And their reason is overwhelmingly important and practical; they are selling and the public is buying program or diversified entertainment—not merely features.

We publish this week the terse opinions on the subject of the leading showmen of the country.

They are up in arms—because the box office is in jeopardy.

And when the box office is threatened it is time for the industry to marshal its forces all along the line.

And the forces, this time, would seem to be simply the forces of intelligence.

If the charge is true that exhibitors are impressed by footage and will pay more for length then, certainly, they will have to buy more intelligently.

The manufacturer, in any field, is making what his customers want. Their standards are his standards.

The problem goes straight to the directors and the makers of scripts.

The laziest way of expression is the long way. The most capable writers are those who can say a great deal in a few words; the best directors are those who use the shortest cuts to their audience's emotion and understanding.

Assuredly we need a sharpening up in feature production — more intelligent preliminary planning, better blue print plans, more brain-work and less camera turning, more expression and less shooting.

It can't be necessary today to inform the director and writer that in making features they are making just a part of a show, that it is the show that sells and that shows in motion picture houses are necessarily a matter of arbitrary length.

Every year we have some outstanding pictures which are shows in themselves. But there are very few—scarcely two per cent of all the features produced.

It is human nature for the maker of the feature to believe that each one will prove to be one of these exceptions. But—let's be halfway sensible at least and give some consideration to the public and to the box office that feeds us.

Out of 250 pictures listed in our "Check-Up" chart nearly 40% were over seven reels long—of special length. They were made and offered, in other words, as of sufficient weight to swing a show in themselves, without other attractions. Yet everyone knows that they were not of that calibre.

As we say, just a few pictures do make a show in themselves. Say a dozen a year; and say each of these gross a million dollars a piece within the year from this country's theatres.

Then consider that the box-office gross in this country last year totaled four hundred million dollars out of which these pictures received about three per cent of the total.

What then is the public paying for?

The show of course—a show made up of a diversified program of music, feature, comedy and shorter subjects in which the news reel predominates.

That is what the hundreds of millions are paid for; and in many and many an instance it is the short subject that saves the bacon.

The business it would seem is too highly geared up to features.

"I HAVE wanted to make 'Potash and Perlmutter' for a long time. I tried to persuade a board of directors to this end and now that I have no board of directors I am going to make the picture," said Samuel Goldwyn at a luncheon given at the Ritz-Carlton last Friday. His guests of honor were George Fitzmaurice and Ouida Bergere who leave for Rome to make "The Eternal City"; Montague Glass, Barney Bernard and Alexander Carr, author and title actors respectively of "Potash and Perlmutter," and Clarence Badger who will direct the picture production.

"It is good to be back in production again," continued Mr. Goldwyn. "And it is good to be an independent producer because I firmly believe that it is from the independent producer henceforth in this industry that we must look for the better picture."

Harry Reichenbach presided as toastmaster and a good time was had by all. Speeches were made by Joseph Dannenberg, R. A. Rowland, Barney Bernard, Alexander Carr, George Fitzmaurice and Clarence Badger.

NORMA TALMADGE and Glenn Hunter will act as judges in the Poster Contest conducted by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. In addition to the cash prizes offered by Miss Talmadge and Mr. Hunter, Rachel Crothers, Elsie Ferguson and Margaret Lawrence are also offering prizes of ten dollars each to the girls and boys who make the best drawings of a cat, a dog and a horse, which can be used as posters for the Society.

M. C. LEVEE, producer of Maurice Tourneur pictures and president of United Studios, arrived in New York this week to talk over exploitation matters with First National regarding "The Brass Bottle" and other productions.

THAT Horace Judge is a "hail-fellow-well-met" has been proved in the fine reception tendered him by London film folks. The boys over here hated to see him go and told him in so many words. Which compels us to resort to the ancient and honorable bromide that what is New York's loss is London's gain. H. J. writes that he is trying desperately hard to get down to the brass tacks of business following the fine reception given him by Managing Director Pugh of Associated First National, Ltd., and his fellow directors and staff at the Trocadero restaurant. The dinner was attended by editors of the trade press, the daily press and prominent exhibitors.

H. J. in responding to a toast of welcome, dwelt on the fact of the marvelous popularity of the motion picture in the United States—a popularity which had led even the most conservative newspapers to devote much space to news of interest to picture fans, and, remarking on the apparent present lack of corresponding space in the British lay press, expressed the belief and hope that at no distant date a similar recognition would be accorded news of the cinema in London and Great Britain generally.

Judging from Mr. Judge's past accomplishments he will have no trouble in getting the London papers started on picture exploitation.

WHEN the management of the Strand theatre, Emporia, Kansas (William Allen White's town), received a letter from a boy, lamenting the fact that he was quarantined because of whooping cough and therefore, unable to see "Robin Hood," an idea was hit upon. A special "Whoopie" matinee for all boys who were victims of whooping cough was arranged, but it was learned that the quarantine laws could not be violated.

JACK PICKFORD and Alice Lake, the w. k. dancers, failed to cop one of the three prizes in the grand finale of the Dancing Contest at the Ambassador Coconut Grove last week.

IT has taken a young boy from New York City to ask Governor Smith the most puzzling question that has been hurled at him in many a day.

The executive of the Empire state has made public a letter from the youngster commenting on a bill which was before the legislature and which would have permitted minors under 16 to enter moving picture theatres unaccompanied by some older persons. The Governor said the letter had given him a hearty laugh—and we're laughing with him. It follows:

New York City, May 2, 1923.

Hon. Alfred E. Smith,
Governor of New York State,
Albany, N. Y.

Dear Sir: I read in the papers that a bill passed the Legislature permitting children to go to the movies without their parents. Please tell me of what good is a law like that to a boy whose mother will not let him go there alone anyhow, law or no law.

Yours respectfully,
EDWARD KAYLIN.

Probably Eddie has read by this time that the bill failed to pass in the Assembly.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, JR., who has been breaking into print lately through his desire to emulate his famous dad and become a thespian of the screen, has returned to the United States from Paris where he has been studying the past eight months. Part of his time was occupied in gymnastic exercises in order to keep up his father's reputation—when that screen worthy decides to give up strenuous athletic work.

Young Doug will appear under the management of William Elliot and will be starred in pictures with an adventurous line of action. The boy has inherited his dad's frankness as well as his physique. "One thing I am firm about in my film plans," he said to the newspaper men at the dock, "I am not going to play in any picture that calls for kissing on my part." As the youngster is only thirteen years of age, we'll forgive him for his lack of romantic fervor. Four or five years more and his secretary will be autographing his pictures to be sent to the girls.

E. MASON HOPPER has arrived in New York with his staff and a print of "The Love Piker," which serves as Anita Stewart's first Cosmopolitan production. The director will soon get busy with "Vendella," adapted from Marie Corelli's story.

THOMAS D. SORIERO, general manager of the Century theatre, Baltimore, heartily agrees with the News editorials which condemn the practise of running double and triple bills—and which bring forth the lack of judgment and poor showmanship on the part of the exhibitors. The practise of giving double and triple bills at the New England theatres was originated by Mr. Soriero when he managed the Gayety in Providence and the Park in Boston. He was forced to follow this plan of entertainment by the activities of the exchanges in that territory—since representatives would sell the same pictures to opposition houses.

Mr. Soriero followed the idea for protective reasons, but he writes us that he can see no advantage of exhibitors doing it at the present time, when such measures are not necessary and conditions that existed then, do not exist now.

Mr. Soriero, who knows a thing or two about showmanship, says there are many ways of entertaining the public besides the double and triple bill method. For instance at the Century in Baltimore, he puts on lavish prologues with special music, lighting and scenic effects, etc.

THE brothers Cochrane of Universal are breathing easier this week, for a cablegram has been received from the company's Shanghai office that brother Negley D. Cochran, formerly editor of the Toledo News-Bee, and his daughter, Dorothy, who were thought to have been captives of the Chinese train bandits have arrived at Peking safely and unmolested. They were on a tour of the world. There is a sextet of Cochrane brothers, but Negley D. is the only one who spells his name without the final "e."

HE'S off again! We are paging Arthur S. Kane who is on a business trip to the Coast—where he expects to remain for two or three weeks. He is making the journey in the capacity of president of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, to confer with one Charles Ray, whom he presents in all his productions. From all accounts Arthur and Charles have something to enthuse over in "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

PARAMOUNT'S European agents have sent a dozen cases of rare draperies, ancient bronzes and antiques to Cecil B. DeMille, which will be used in the producer's new effort, "The Ten Commandments." The materials were bought in the antique shops of Germany and France. It is said that over 2,500 people will take part in reproductions of the life of the ancient Egyptians and Hebrews as detailed in the Book of Exodus.

IRVIN WILLAT has picked up his megaphone again after being confined to his hotel with a severe cold. His newest is "Fog Bound," starring Dorothy Dalton.

CARROLL H. DUNNING, vice-president of Prizma, Inc., has returned to New York from the Coast. Because of the sudden death of his business associate, H. W. Saulsbury, Mr. Dunning has resigned his office in Prizma to assume the presidency of the Pencil Supply Corporation, in which he has been financially interested for many years. H. J. Marshall will take charge of Prizma's sales department in the East.

LEAVING on the Majestic, May 12th, for England and the Continent, is William M. Vogel, motion picture exporter, who is foreign selling agent of F. N.'s Chaplin comedies, Hodgkinson productions, Burr-Mastodon specials, Public Opinion Pictures, Inc., Chester novelties, Producers Security productions, etc. This is Mr. Vogel's semi-annual tour, and he expects to be back by the Fourth of July.

CLARENCE BADGER has arrived in New York after an absence of several years for the purpose of directing Sam Goldwyn's production, "Potash and Perlmutter." Long term contracts have kept this director on California soil.

TEN years ago a young man walked into the offices of "Exhibitors Times," the first name of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and we got a lot of inspiration from this dynamic personality. He needed no introduction even to newcomers. Everybody in the film business knew "Watty" Rothacker, and he made it his business to know everybody. Three years before this he started the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. in Chicago, and to-day, he is announcing the thirteenth anniversary of what is to-day one of the finest and most substantial institutions in this industry. Its watchword from the very beginning has been "Service" and every bit of its remarkable growth has been based upon sterling business principles. There isn't a single person in the business, we believe, but who wishes its founder the best of continued success.

THE suspense is lifted. After considering several hundred titles submitted in a contest within her own organization, Mary Pickford has decided that "The Street Singer," which was the first name to be presented, is most suitable for her new photoplay. In this feature she will naturally play a tempestuous singer of Toledo, Spain. The romance is built against a background of early nineteenth century atmosphere.

FACT and rumors from the Coast: We understand that Maurice Tourneur is going to direct "The Two Vagrants," a ripe melodrama of Yesterday—that Jack Dillon is in Los Angeles to direct "Flaming Youth" for First National—that James Young is finishing "Trilby" and getting ready for another—that Joe Schenck is spending a barrel of money on Norma's picture, "Ashes of Vengeance," sets, sets and more sets—some of which will never be seen on the screen—that C. Gardner Sullivan is going with Famous and will have charge of a New York company—that his first story will be "This Side of Paradise," by Scott Fitzgerald—that the latter's script was not so good and that a new one will be prepared and that the title will probably be changed, though we can't see the reason for the change, seeing as how the book has sold in many editions—that George Archainbaud was scheduled to direct the feature but that the plans have fallen through—that Warner Brothers are putting up great administration building in front of their studios, which will resemble Famous Players at Long Island City—that the entire Hearst organization has been recalled to New York—which created quite a furore—that Frances Marion was up in arms, and offered her resignation—that her husband is in a serial at Universal—that Gloria Swanson's husband is getting a divorce quietly and at his own terms—that Jesse Lasky will be in New York in three weeks.

"Shorter Features" Is Exhibitors' Cry

THE stand taken by Motion Picture News for shorter features continues to receive sweeping approval by exhibitors throughout the country.

"Padded pictures are driving the patrons from our doors"; "long features rob the program"; "if Brisbane can tell in two paragraphs what it takes a reporter to say in a column, it behooves the industry to search for directors who can make features for the length the story demands and not by the foot"—these sentences summarize the trend of exhibitor thought on this vital question.

The campaign for shorter features inaugurated by William A. Johnston in editorials in the April 21 and 28 issues of Motion Picture News is termed by many exhibitors the most progressive move ever undertaken in aid of the theatre owner and manager.

This week's responses from exhibitors are printed in detail below.

Harry M. Crandall, Crandall theatres, Washington, D. C.: "It must be remembered that not only the first run houses, but all theatres of today must give the public a varied program. They must have so many minutes of weekly, a comedy is always very important, and in some instances they will want Topics of the Day and a scenic—in fact all of the larger houses will want these, in addition to an overture and in many cases a prologue—all of which are quite necessary today to at least a two hour performance; and an exhibitor will get much better results out of this kind of varied program for two hours than he would if the feature alone ran the full two hours.

"The length of feature films has another disadvantage to the exhibitor that the producer is overlooking. First they are asking today abnormal rentals, and then by the length of the features they are decreasing the exhibitor's possibilities of paying these rentals; so that the exhibitor is hit twice in the same place. And incidentally, the many padded films do no small amount of harm to the exhibitor's business.

"I hope your campaign will help cause the producers to realize the necessity of shorter features."

R. F. Woodhull, Baker theatre, Dover, N. J.: "I am watching with profound interest the expressions of exhibitors throughout the country upon the subject of super-length features and am glad to note that the general opinion of the small town and big city fellows agree upon the fact that five or six reels should be the absolute limit.

"Long pictures have been one of my biggest problems. In order to properly diversify your program, comedy and instructional reels are absolutely necessary. This means that when you have a seven reel feature the whole program must be sent through your machines at a speed that is injurious to the mechanism, but of still greater importance, disgusting to an intelligent audience. And it does not stop there! That other department of tremendous import in the retailing of motion pictures—the orchestra—is compelled to render heavy or ballad-type music continuously when the comedy would permit the use of lighter melodies which would supply relief to the ear.

"I had an exhibitor tell me recently that when he finds his show running too long he lifts a reel or two out of his feature attraction and in most cases it is never missed by his audience. However, I do not believe that many of us have the nerve to try that method even though we firmly believe that most of the super-specials will kindly lend themselves to the idea."

Roy G. Smart, Amiston Enterprises, Amiston, Ala.: "Two years of agitation for shorter features seems to have brought definite results—longer ones. The sequence was natural and the producers were not to be blamed. Exhibitors developed a growing habit of biting hard at long features; the more footage the harder they bit. But now their pig-iron stomachs are full, their appetites satisfied and experience has shown that shorter menus bring longer life, and, more patrons.

"When this business was a boy it was most ambitious to grow up, to drop the pants from knee to ankle length—to make the performance bigger and longer. And it did. But, Heaven help us if we continue to wear our pants longer and longer!

"The real answer is found in the theatre lobby. Just listen, and watch the yawning, sleepy-eyed, restless and helpless patrons. They all can't like the same thing. There must be variety in the bill. Put your ear to the ground and you will hear, over and over, 'It was a good show, but too long.'

"Eliminating that extra length would often eliminate some of the 'stupidity' so much talked of now. What really big attraction can you name, released during the last two years, that could not have been cut down from 10 to 35 per cent without in any way reducing its value as entertainment?"

Edward L. Hyman, Mark Strand theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "I take this occasion to agree with the opinion in several quarters that many feature pictures are too long, and that over-long features are hurting the box office. You might have added, too, that the over-long features are not pleasing the public any more than the shorter features, thus they have no definite reason or excuse for being longer than the average feature film. In my opinion, the producer would make no mistake in considering those two things—the public and the box office. The former is the ultimate consumer, who always has the last word and whose opinion must always be respected, and the latter is the barometer by which the producer figures in terms of dollars and cents in distributing his product.

"Rarely is there an extra long feature which has a good alibi for being. Usually the story is padded and stretched and the public of today is too expert in judging pictures to pass this by unnoticed. They want the story told in a straightforward way, and the briefer the better. The mere fact that the producer 'shot' ten miles of film does not justify the retaining of so much footage that the picture is over-long, nor can it soothe the audience because the short reels must be omitted and the musical program curtailed to make way for the tiresome, too-long film. The public would be just as well satisfied if only enough footage was exposed to get the story in six reels.

"We get some of the best pictures made, from various sources, and the shortest ones give the most satisfaction, to public and to us. Short features mean there is no wasted footage; we can give with them a variety program of shorter reels and music not possible with the longer features; monotony is eliminated or minimized; the turnover is more frequent and more steady—but why name more reasons for short features when those are the principal ones?"

Stanley N. Chambers, Miller Theatrical Enterprises, Wichita, Kan.: "You are touching upon the industry's worst evil; long padded pictures. The production of stories far past the necessary length is driving patrons from our doors. The public does not know exactly why pictures fail to entertain them as they once did, but experienced exhibitors are able to put their fingers squarely upon the fault; the pictures are too long, draggy and tiresome. Aside from the tiresomeness of the individual feature attraction, long pictures in addition to certain other necessary and expected units of a program make the entire show too long and sends patrons away dissatisfied and disgruntled.

"The condition brought about by the length of the present features practically precludes the possibility of adding two reel comedies, news features or orchestra and organ selections to our program without making the whole so long as to be tiresome.

"Confronted by this serious problem many exhibitors try to remedy the evil by doing their own cutting and not being skilled in this highly specialized work they butcher the film at the expense of the Producer's reputation.

"Other exhibitors, who do not resort to cutting film, speed it thru their machines giving the characters an unnatural animation and injuring the story value of the picture thereby bringing discredit to all persons associated with it from the star and producer down to the exhibitor.

"It seems that the producers are laboring under the delusion that the more footage the larger the returns. In my case, film over six reels becomes less valuable in direct proportion to the footage beyond that point.

"I might also say that exhibitors in general would almost favor paying a premium per foot on all productions under six thousand feet.

"An organized effort to reduce the length of pictures will save millions annually in raw stock and I am certain that shorter pictures will bring back millions of patrons who have been literally 'bored' out of our theatres."

Harry M. Crandall.

Stanley N. Chambers.

E. V. Richards, Jr., General Manager, Saenger Amusement Co., New Orleans: "If variety is to remain the keynote of unit presentation producers should and must co-operate with exhibitors to keep their feature length dramas within reason. A theatre's policy today sells a show not a feature. Give the fellow who owns it some credit for selling his wares instead of a trademark."

E. V. Richards, Jr.

"If Brisbane can tell in two paragraphs what it takes a reporter to say in a column, it behooves the industry to search for directors who can make features for the length the story demands and not by the foot. These dog days of summer particularly demand one hour and forty minutes as maximum presentation for a diversified program whether it be Broadway or Main Street."

Barry Burke, Palace theatre, Fort Worth, Tex.: "Thank the Lord that the long-drawn-out, padded and otherwise over-done features will begin to get panned. Who wants them? I surely do not know. The public does not, and surely the exhibitor does not."

"My patrons do not care to spend the entire evening in a theatre, no matter how comfortable you may make them, and my patrons are no different from any other patrons."

"I will admit that we have lots of pretty weather, very inviting for automobiling, outdoor-sports, etc., but so have a large percentage of the exhibitors in the country. So why, oh why, will not the producers wake up to the fact and give us some real features that do not hold the patrons in the theatre the entire evening?"

"It will not rob the story of its interest, nor will it be necessary to curtail beautiful scenes, but it will be necessary to eliminate the 'padding' and the 'repetition' that one finds in so many pictures."

J. A. Partington, San Francisco: "There is only one side to the over-long features question. With the exception of a few pictures for long run exhibition, the maximum length should be sixty-five hundred feet. Ninety per cent of pictures would be improved by keeping them within this length and a diversified program, the life blood of the business, could be maintained."

"If producers do not remedy this condition soon they will discourage entirely the making of comedies and short subjects, without which the country's great houses will be unable to present variety of attractions which have been mainly instrumental in establishing a regular clientele"

"Reverting back to shorter features should be of mutual benefit as the producer will save money, so will the exhibitor. We congratulate you on your stand and feel confident of the ultimate result."

W. A. Dillon, Strand theatre, Ithaca, N. Y.: "Extra long features are keeping patrons away from theatres, people are shopping for entertainment and are not falling for increased admission because of a few more reels any more than the exhibitor is. They are all wise."

"Everything should be done to keep the confidence of the public. The producers are not co-operating in this matter and never have but there is at this time a concentrated movement on foot to play no feature longer than seven thousand feet. The matter is up and will no doubt be acted on by the exhibitors of this state in such a manner as to force the situation at a great loss to the producer who does not see that hand-writing on the wall."

"The long picture producer is driving the hearse to his own funeral, while the exhibitor is putting new life into his investment."

"Motto: It's better to have your patrons and not need them than it is to need them and not have them."

Mr. Dillon encloses a letter from a patron of his theatre, which reads as follows: "I think that the pictures you show are too long. I like to see a good picture, but I also like to get home at a decent hour. Please try to make the picture shorter."

A. C. Hayman, Cataract Theatre Corp., Niagara Falls, N. Y.: "I think your editorials and propaganda on this very important matter are in line with your progressive policy. It is hard for an exhibitor who is catering to the public daily and receiving hundreds of complaints that the feature was so long that it tired, to understand why the producers insist upon this enormous padding of features, and I assure you that many a good picture has lost its box-office value on account of being too long."

"I notice that in the past six months long features seem to be the rule with the majority of producers. I attribute the failure of the majority of pictures, at least in the past six months, to the length of same. It is not only a waste of film and an expense from the production end of it, but it shows a lack of ability on somebody's part in the Cutting-Room where these pictures are assembled. The motion picture public are over-pictured and they refuse to accept, with very few exceptions, a picture that runs into eight reels or more and there are very few pictures that warrant such a length."

"Over-long features are a menace to the box-office, as they help to keep the people from coming to motion pictures."

Phil Gleichman, Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit: "The ideal length of a motion picture feature, from the standpoint of a theatre manager, is 5,000 feet. This is because the modern theatre program must satisfy the public and the public expects a feature, a comedy, a news reel or other film, special orchestra numbers and a soloist or prologue on every program."

"When one gets a feature 7,000 or more feet long we must cut out most of the added attractions, and if it's like Tess there isn't time for anything else. The result is that the public goes to the box office and asks why we are not showing a comedy and other pictures as well."

"On every long feature the theatre loses money because the house capacity is less. A good percentage, possibly 40 per cent, will not care for anything but the feature. This allows a good let out at the end of the feature so we can take care of the waiting lines. Not so many persons are held outside. If the feature occupies the entire program, the waiting crowd for the second show at night, is so large that hundreds will walk away with the result that when the first show is over the crowd is not large enough to fill the house again."

"The truth about long features, and this goes for virtually every one, is that the extra footage slows up the action and therefore spoils the story. At least 99 out of every 100 features today are padded."

A. G. Stolte, Booking Manager for A. H. Blank, Des Moines, Iowa: "Congratulations on your attempt to have the producers shorten features. This is by far the best move that has been attempted to aid the exhibitor. The lengthy feature is tiresome and often is injurious as a box office attraction. Also there is no chance to make a program of entertaining value continue the good work. The shorter the feature the more encouraging to the public. It is quality the public wants, not quantity."

A. G. Stolte.

"We have found in building up a program on a two-hour basis that the proper length for a feature should be from five to six thousand feet. The public is contended to sit for an hour, or a few minutes over that to look at a feature, but when it comes to one hour and forty-five minutes they become restless, and the way pictures are being made today, that is, some of them, one really cannot blame the public for being disgusted with the movies at times."

George Rea, Colonial theatre, Washington C. H., Ohio: "Keep up your good work for shorter features. All features over seven reels are draggy and tire the patron so that they don't want to come more than once a week."

"Long features rob the program and kill the entertainment value. You must have dessert and good projection these days. Single reels—good ones—are far between. So if the feature is over seven reels, it's a proposition to give good dessert and projection in a small house."

"Six and seven reels are the kind I prefer."

C. W. Deibel, Liberty theatre, Youngstown, Ohio: "My frank opinion is that features should not exceed six reels, except with unusual subjects where the continuity would be broken by endeavoring to make the picture shorter."

"The average theatre-goer does not want to see more than a two-hour show, and besides the feature, a comedy and another short subject should be introduced."

"There is no reason why most features cannot be made not to exceed six reels."

H. B. Watts, Omaha, Neb.: "A 'super' can be any number of reels. Too many program pictures, called supers, rob theatre of variety. My patrons kick because I can't show high class scenes often. The ideal program is news events, a scenic novelty and a comedy feature. Anybody can make a meal on turkey, but pork chops need potatoes, soup and dessert."

Phil Gleichman.

More Opinions on Feature Lengths Next Week

FURTHER expressions from exhibitors on the length of features will be printed in next week's issue of MO-TION PICTURE NEWS.

A large number of opinions have already been received. Exhibitors who have not contributed thus far to the discussion are invited to send in their views.

Government Probe of Famous Continues

J. D. Williams Chief Witness; Walter W. Irwin and Group of Film Executives Also Heard

TAKING of testimony on the charges brought by the Federal Trade Commission against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the other respondents continued this week in New York, with J. D. Williams, organizer of First National and now head of Ritz-Carlton Pictures, Inc., as the chief witness.

Mr. Williams, who testified on Tuesday and Wednesday, told of the formation of First National and overtures he said were made to him by Adolph Zukor shortly after that for a working agreement between the two. On several occasions, said Mr. Williams, he was invited by Mr. Zukor to enter the latter's employ at double the salary Williams was receiving from First National.

Another proposition made by Mr. Zukor, which was rejected by the First National Board of Directors, contemplated the formation of a national booking combine, the witness explained. The bulk of the pictures were to be supplied by Famous Players and First National was gradually to go out of business as a distributor. The First National theatres were to take the Paramount product.

After the First National Board had turned down this proposition at a meeting in Los Angeles in 1918, where Mr. Zukor personally appeared, Mr. Williams said repeated offers were made to him to join Select Pictures Corporation, then owned jointly by Mr. Zukor and Lewis J. Selznick. Mr. Zukor told him, said the witness, that if he "did not leave First National, Zukor would have to buy up enough franchises to put First National out of business." These negotiations took place in the Summer of 1917.

"Select and Famous were to produce all the pictures and First National was eventually to go out of business," continued Mr. Williams. "At that time First National was having considerable trouble with its franchise holders and I didn't know whether he could hold them together."

The witness then said he talked the offer over with H. O. Schwalbe, who advised him to take the $3,000 salary advance tendered by Select, which was done. Mr. Williams said he gave Select a note to protect the advance in case he did not finally accept the offer. Before the expiration of the 90 days covered by the note, First National, said Mr. Williams, began to gain strength and he declined the Select proposition and paid back the money.

Knowing that Mr. Zukor had "threatened" to attack First National by buying franchises, Mr. Williams said he immediately went out to try to sign up stars, the first new star being Norma Talmadge.

The proposed booking combine was then taken up in detail and Mr. Williams said it contemplated booking Famous and Select product into First National houses. The First National exchanges, he said, were to become mere shipping stations. Mr. Williams quoted Mr. Zukor's idea as being that "if our competitors got too strong, we could pass the word around and lay off their pictures in the first-run theatres."

"Famous Players was to be the main source of supply," Mr. Williams added. "Mr. Zukor wanted First National to stop making contracts with stars and directors and buy only a few independent pictures."

Still another offer was made to Mr. Wil-

Decision Legalizes News Reel Censorship

THE New York State Motion Picture Commission was sustained in its legal right to inspect and license motion picture news reels, by a decision handed down by the Court of Appeals of this state. The decision is of far-reaching interest and has been closely followed from New York to Los Angeles. It forms the concluding chapter of a test case started months ago by Pathe, to determine whether or not the New York State Motion Picture Commission had the right to inspect and license such reels.

The case has gone through the courts but this decision upholding the constitutionality of this section of the law becomes final, sustaining the lower court, as well as the Commission. There was no opinion accompanying the decision. The expenses fall on the Pathe company.

Williams, according to his testimony, when he was approached by Mr. Zukor and H. D. H. Connick in 1920 when the latter was chairman of the F. P.-L. Finance Committee. First National had just bought "Passion" and Messrs. Zukor and Connick, said the witness, wanted him to handle all the German pictures then coming into the country, through the formation of a separate corporation, which Mr. Williams was to head.

"Connick said I ought to be making $100,000 a year and he offered me $50,000 yearly salary and a percentage of the profits," said Mr. Williams. "Mr. Zukor was agreeable to this and he and Connick jointly made me the offer. I declined it." He had reported the proposition to his associates in First National when it was made and his action regarding it, he explained.

In 1919, E. H. Hulsey, First National franchise holder in the Southwest, sold out his interests to S. A. Lynch, Mr. Williams testified in reply to questions by Gaylord Hawkins, Government counsel.

"Hulsey told me," continued the witness, "that Lynch had sent men into his territory bulldozing exhibitors and had telegraphed a million dollars to Hulsey's bank in Dallas. Hulsey said he was advised to sell out by his bankers."

Mr. Zukor also conferred with other franchise holders, among them Fred Dahmen, of San Francisco, who also owned 60% of the First National New York exchange, the witness continued, explaining that he construed this action of Mr. Zukor's as an attempt to carry out his "threat" to buy up franchises.

"Dahmen told me if I didn't get the organization together, he would desert the ship," continued Mr. Williams, who then told of the formation of Associated First National Pictures, Inc. The witness said he and Nathan Gordon of Boston went around the country, getting franchise holders to sign the new agreement. The stock of Associated First National was put in a voting trust.

That a booking agreement with Southern Enterprises was consummated by First National in August, 1922, shortly before he left the company, was another highlight of the Williams testimony. The plan was proposed by E. V. Richards, Jr., according to the witness, Richards contending that extra revenue could be obtained for First National in this way.

The witness said he opposed the plan, but the Executive Committee adopted it. Under its terms, First National was to get 20% of the gross of the larger Lynch theatres in rental; and 25% from the smaller, according to Mr. Williams. Asked whether this agreement was reduced to writing, the witness said he did not know.

Under cross-examination by Robert T. Swains, of counsel for Famous Players, the witness declared that in 1916 Paramount had 60 per cent. to 75 per cent. of the best stars and directors. Swaine then read a long list of stars and questioned the witness closely as to their affiliations at that time, seeking to bring out that a large number of popular stars were not with Paramount in 1916.

Mr. Williams declared that with Marguerite Clark, Mary Pickford, Cecil B. DeMille and Jesse L. Lasky—all with Paramount in that year—Paramount had the bulk of the best material in the industry.

He held to this point throughout the rigid cross-examination, and at the beginning of his testimony on Wednesday, read from a Paramount advertisement printed in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, issue of Sept. 23, 1916, and headed "Greatest Stars on Earth in Paramount Pictures."

The advertisement contained a list of some sixty-eight, from which Mr. Williams made a selection of fifteen, who, he declared, when considered along with Lasky, Cecil B. DeMille, George Melford, Marshall Neilan, James Young and William DeMille, directors, constituted "at that time the best material in the industry."

The fifteen stars named by Mr. Williams were: Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Hazel Dawn, Blanche Sweet, Mae Murray, Fannie Ward, Marie Doro, Florence Reed, Louise Huff, Kathryn Williams, John Barrymore, Wallace Reid, Dustin Farnum and Leonore Ulric.

The names of the other fifty-three, which Mr. Williams did not consider first rate stars at that time, were read by him into the record.

Mr. Williams also said he wished to clarify a statement he had made the previous day concerning the 30 or 35 towns in the South in which Southern Enterprises controlled the theatres. He stated that the list was furnished to him by Mr. Morgan, contract manager for First National, who in turn had got the information from the First National field men. The list contained 70 towns, he explained, thirty or thirty-five of which "First National couldn't get into."

Vigorous objection was entered by Mr. Swaine, who characterized the list as constituting hearsay evidence. After a tilt between the lawyers, Examiner E. C. Alvord ruled that the list might be admitted as an explanation of Mr. Williams's statement on Tuesday, but it would not be considered as evidence.

During the argument, Mr. Swaine said he would concede that F. P.-L. owned theatres in more than 70 towns, but he would not concede that it owned all the theatres or all the leading theatres.

The witness then read a statement concerning various contracts signed with stars by First National when he was with the company. These were:

Contract made with Charles Chaplin in June, 1917, for eight pictures, Chaplin to be paid $1,075,000.

With Mme. Petrova, August, 1918, for eight pictures, with an advance of $70,000 and percentage on each.

With Anita Stewart for six pictures, with an option on six more. On the first six, the advance was $80,000 plus percentage. The option on the additional six called for $100,000 advance and percentage.

With Mary Pickford for six pictures to be purchased outright at $250,000 each. This contract was made, the witness stated, in November, 1918.

With Jack Pickford, November, 1918, for three pictures, to be purchased outright at $50,000 each.

With D. W. Griffith, January, 1919, three pictures with an advance on each of $285,000.

With Charles Ray, January, 1919, for twelve pictures, with an advance of $95,000 and percentage.

Two contracts were made with Norma Talmadge. The first in April, 1919, called for eight pictures, each to be purchased outright at $160,000. The second contract, made November, 1920, called for twelve pictures, with an advance of $350,000 on each plus percentage.

There were also two contracts with Constance Talmadge, the witness went on. The first, made June, 1919, was for six pictures at $110,000 each, outright purchase and six more at $150,000 apiece. The second contract, made November, 1920, was for twelve, with an advance of $300,000 on each plus percentage.

With Mildred Harris, September, 1919, six pictures, with an advance of $50,000 on each and percentage.

With Whitman Bennett, March, 1920, for four pictures with an advance of $175,000 on each and percentage.

When Mr. Williams had concluded the reading of these statements, Mr. Swaine took up again the discussion of star supremacy, and showed Mr. Williams a Goldwyn ad. in a recent issue of The Film Daily, which also listed a large number of players. Mr. Williams admitted that advertising claims by a film company did not prove that it had the greatest stars, of course.

Then the contract discussion was resumed for a moment, and the witness explained that "The Kid" was one of the eight contracted for with Chaplin by First National, but a special arrangement had been made on it. "We paid Chaplin seventy per cent of the gross, with a guarantee that the gross would amount to at least $800,000," said Mr. Williams.

Mr. Swaine produced the 1916 issue of the Motion Picture Studio Directory and asked the witness if that publication was considered authoritative in the trade. Mr. Williams said it was and that it was published by Motion Picture News, which he considered "the leading trade paper."

Mr. Swaine then said pages 19-128 of the Directory contained biographies of players and directors, with about twelve names to the page. This was done to show, according to the viewpoint of Swaine, the large number of "leading players" in the industry in 1916.

Kansas Pastor Runs Picture Show

A MINISTER, who runs large newspaper ads, advertising free motion picture shows in his church on Fridays and Saturdays, the money for the film, which is not limited to religious productions, being derived from a "free will" offering of the church, is the latest opposition which confronts the M. P. T. O. Kansas in Ottawa, Kans.

The pastor is Dr. S. L. Lewis, pastor of the First Methodist church of Ottawa. He has spurned offers of Ottawa exhibitors to aid him in his exhibitions if he would confine them to Sunday only, instead of selecting the two best days of the week—Friday and Saturday—ignoring Sunday. The pictures are of the same type as can be seen on any theatre program, not confined to sacred productions.

Other ministers and the public of Ottawa have plainly displayed their sentiment against such a "bid" for increased church attendance.

"Yes, every player is the greatest, according to his idea," Mr. Williams agreed.

Mr. Williams was then asked whether he had ever had any negotiations with Cecil B. DeMille, while the former was with First National. He said he had told DeMille that he ought to make his own pictures, but he could not recall that he had offered DeMille any definite sum.

The witness then stated that he had also negotiated, directly or indirectly, with Thomas Meighan and Wallace Reid, but not with Gloria Swanson.

"I tried to negotiate with every leading star or director in the business," he added, but I most certainly did not attempt to get any of them to jump their contracts. My idea of production is that each star or director should put his own money into the pictures and thus have definite responsibility. Under the factory system of production, where you have a large number of stars working on salary in one studio, there is soldiering by the players, and too much overhead. When a star or director has his own company this is done away with, and better pictures result."

On re-direct examination, Mr. Williams said Chaplin paid all his production cost out of the money he got from First National, and the same was true of the other stars whose contracts were mentioned above.

He again declared that the main purpose for the reorganization of First National in 1920, when Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was formed, was to prevent Mr. Zukor from buying First National franchises and thus dominating and controlling the theatre situation.

Subfranchises had not been sold, prior to 1920, anywhere except in Texas and Ohio, he stated. It was eighteen months after the decision to nationalize subfranchises, he said, before First National had 3400 subfranchise holders on its books. When he left the company, in 1922, the witness said there were about 2600.

Again on cross-examination, Mr. Williams told Mr. Swaine that, after the failure of his negotiations with Messrs. Zukor and Selznick in 1917, he started out to make First National "the dominating company."

About six subfranchises has been granted to Lynch houses in Tennessee, he said. Mr. Swaine brought out that the subfranchise contained a six months' cancellation clause which could be exercised two years and a half after an exhibitor bought the franchise.

Walter W. Irwin, former vice-president of F. P.-L., another witness this week, declared he had advised Mr. Zukor on certain methods by which to fight First National in 1917 and 1918.

Mr. Irwin said Mr. Zukor had told him that Mr. Williams had sent word to him (Zukor) that Williams would outbid him for the services of Mary Pickford, regardless of how high the bid would have to be.

This was denied by Mr. Williams, in his testimony on Tuesday.

"I advised Mr. Zukor," said Mr. Irwin, "to point out to exhibitors in affidavits in trade paper advertising that this alleged exhibitors' organization would only result in the increased price of pictures, and to tell the exhibitors that First National, instead of being their friend, was their commercial enemy."

Mr. Zukor did not follow his advice, according to the witness, but sought the help of the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in his fight against First National. Later, Mr. Irwin said he advised Mr. Zukor that he ought to "fight fire with fire" and look into the question of acquiring theatres in the cities where the original twenty-six franchise holders had houses.

Shortly after this, in 1918, Mr. Irwin became head of the F. P.-L. Theatre Department, and started to work on theatre acquisition. Sites were bought, he testified, in St. Louis, Indianapolis and other cities, and most of this work was done after the floating of the ten million dollar loan through Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Harold B. Franklin, present head of the F. P.-L. theatre department, was on the stand for a brief time on Monday. He identified a contract which had been negotiated with William P. Gray by which the latter was made General Manager of nearly all the Black houses in New England.

Agreements made between F. P.-L. and Lynch and the Stanley Co. were identified for the record on Monday by Elek J. Ludvigh, of Famous Players counsel. While on the stand, Mr. Ludvigh stated that neither Mr. Zukor nor F. P.-L. had participated in organizing the Stanley Company. It originated locally in Philadelphia, according to his understanding of the situation. Mr. Zukor is a director of the Stanley Company, but only in an ex-officio capacity, he pointed out.

Questioned about loans to exhibitors by F. P.-L., Mr. Ludvigh stated that the only loans made from September, 1919, to May 1923, so far as he could learn, was $12,500 to Phil Gleichman of Detroit.

At the Friday hearing last week testimony on the New York first-run situation was heard from Al Lichtman; Elmer Pearson, general manager of Pathe; Winfield R. Sheehan, of Fox; Louis Rosenbluh, New York exchange manager for Fox; John S. Woody, and R. H. Cochrane of Universal.

All these witnesses, except Mr. Woody, produced lists of pictures which they considered entitled to first-class first-runs and told their experiences in booking them on Broadway.

Educators to Aid in L. A. Festival

Assistance of West Coast College Heads Assures Accurate Pageant at Centennial

TO determine just what episodes shall be represented in the historical revue, which will be an integral part of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial that is to be held in Los Angeles from July 2nd to August 4th, a commission of prominent West Coast educators has been selected. Their willingness to serve guarantees an accurate pageant that will graphically picture the successive steps in the making of America, from its discovery down to the present day.

Those who have agreed to serve on this educational commission are Dr. Rufus B. von KleinSmid, president of the University of Southern California; Dr. Ernest C. Moore, dean of the University of California, Southern Branch; Dr. J. A. Blaisdell, president of Pomona College; Dr. Remsen D. Bird, president of Occidental College; Dr. Ray L. Wilbur, president Leland Stanford, Jr. University; Dr. Amelia H. Reinhardt, president of Mills College; Dr. Tully Knowles, president of College of the Pacific; Dr. Harry N. Wright, Whittier College; Dr. Victor L. Dukes, University of Redlands; Arthur H. Fleming, California Institute of Technology; Mark Keppel, superintendent of Los Angeles County Schools; Mrs. Susan B. Dorsey, superintendent of schools, city of Los Angeles; Mrs. Martha Nelson McCan, president of Los Angeles Board of Park Commissioners.

At its first session, this commission found that there is so much dramatic material in the history of the United States since 1492 that to reproduce anywhere near all of it would require more of a year and permit of a different pageant every day. As the Monroe Doctrine Centennial will last only thirty days, it means that merely the highlights can be presented, although the program will be changed daily.

The revue will be put together in such a manner that all who see it will have a comprehensive idea of the more important episodes in the story of their country's life in the last four hundred years. As the Monroe Doctrine Centennial is being put on under the auspices of the motion picture industry of Southern California, it has at its disposal all of the skilled directors, technicians and mimetic workers. No other group could undertake a project of this magnitude so fittingly. Wherefore it is certain that the historical revue will be carried out on the scale that it merits.

Several interesting outlines have already been presented for this phase of the big display which will be held in the new coliseum that has just been completed by Los Angeles in Exposition Park. When the educational commission has made its selection, the plan will be turned over to a pageant-master of national reputation; and he will be supplied with a small army of designers, artists, costume-makers and other workers to externalize the plans.

While a vast number of people are expected to see this historical revue actually unfold in Los Angeles, coming from all parts of the country, they alone will not be the only ones to enjoy the privilege. The Monroe Doctrine Centennial management has a broader vision. That it may be available for everyone else who is interested, it is to be filmed on a big scale for exhibition after the end of the exposition.

Clara Kimball Young, Ruth Roland and Madge Bellamy, as modern apostles of good cheer, are touring the country right now and spreading the gospel of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial. They are being received enthusiastically everywhere, according to report; and their experiences are truly unique. Miss Young was called on to serve as godmother to 2,000 of Uncle Sam's sailormen in San Diego. Mayor-Elect William E. Dever, of Chicago, accepted an invitation to attend the exposition, personally extended by Miss Bellamy, who is traveling under the Thomas H. Ince colors; while Miss Roland as hostess of the "Momus Special" has the distinguished duty of asking Mayor Hylan to Los Angeles's party. Those who know Ruth are betting that he will not refuse.

Southern Enterprises Buys Oklahoma Criterion

Half interest in the Criterion Theatre Corporation at Oklahoma City, Okla., has been purchased by Southern Enterprises, Inc., according to Manager S. S. Wallace of the Capitol theatre and confirmed by A. E. Fair, director of theatres at Dallas, Texas.

The merger will take place on May 13, at which time Manager S. S. Wallace will assume the management of the Criterion theatre and Henry Brownlee of the Price theatre, Houston, Texas, will take charge of the Capitol.

The Criterion will show the pick of the Paramount pictures and will also show the best pictures on the market with exception of the Goldwyn and First National, which will be shown at the Empress.

N. Y. Child Admission Law Dies in Committee

All efforts to have the Antin bill, relating to the admission of children to motion picture theatres in the metropolis, reported out of the assembly committee before the close of the session last week, failed and the bill died in committee.

The measure had received favorable action in the upper house on Tuesday, but was doomed to defeat when the committee failed to report it out, for action in the lower house. The bill would have admitted children between the ages of 8 and 16 years to the motion picture theatres of New York City, provided they were accorded a segregated section, and certain other requirements.

Martin Smith in Race for M. P. T. O. A. Presidency

Martin G. Smith, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, has thrown his hat in the ring as a candidate for the Presidency of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

He telegraphed Motion Picture News this week as follows: "The desire of the Executive Committee and members of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio as well as friends elsewhere has developed into an emphatic and insistent demand that I announce my candidacy for President of the National Organization. Complying therewith, I authorize announcement on my candidacy."

Mr. Smith is head of the East Side Amusement Co., Toledo, and is one of the best-known state exhibitor leaders.

Schools to Use Theatres as Laboratories

Assistant Superintendent of Schools Kramer of the District of Columbia Department of Education has decided to commit the city schools of the Nation's capital to the modern method of visual education. Starting in a cautious sort of way, he indicates that Washington is launching the biggest thing in new, novel and practical educational methods ever attempted.

"Admittedly we are pursuing an uncharted course in the novel and startling new department. We propose to use the theatre in each neighborhood as a laboratory for instruction in every subject capable of screen treatment. Even careful choice of English in the titling of film topics will give the student subject a grasp and command of language not possible to one who absorbs the slangy usage of the street. The school is not fitted to be a theatre; therefore we must let the theatre managers grubstake us in this venture. We will be dependent on such co-operation with our department of Visual Instruction by the theatres; in return the discard of school movie projection equipment will eliminate any element of competition between school and theatre," states Mr. Kramer.

Forty-eight sets of text cards and stereos of the lessons on trade and geography will be supplied for each class, as stereos and still views will be used in the plan. Recitation will be from these cards and views, supplemented at intervals, by the motion picture lectures at the theatre.

Educational Films Shown Russian Children

To the Kazan, Russia, unit of the American Relief Administration goes the distinction of having launched the first educational film series in connection with child relief work in Russia. The scheme, which is destined to delight the hearts of more than a half-million Russian, Tartar, and Chuvash children now being tried by the A. R. A. in the Kazan section of the Volga, involves the use of several reels of colored film, a slap-stick comedy, a two-reel photoplay, scenes from an orphanage and a projector equipped for use either with electricity or carbide.

The fact that the film is older than many of the children who will view it does not detract from the interest already manifested, by the few who have seen it, as more than 90 per cent. of the youngsters in this part of Russia have never seen a movie.

Miniature Apparatus Bills Up to N. Y. Governor

TWO bills, introduced in the New York state legislature, by Assemblyman Steingut, are now in the hands of the Governor, each relating to miniature picture apparatus. One of the bills amends the general business law to the end that machines must be of a type approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters, and so operated in an approved box of fireproof material so constructed that it can be immediately closed in case of combustion. The other bill is along much the same line, and amends the general city law.

M.P.T.O.A. Convention Program Announced

Elaborate Plans Made for National Meeting of Exhibitors at Chicago, May 21-25

THE program for the national convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America which will be held in the Coliseum in Chicago from May 21 to 25 inclusive, is about complete.

President Sydney S. Cohen and other national officers have been at headquarters during the greater part of the week, putting the finishing touches on the convention arrangements. There will be meeting of the National Board of Directors and National Executive Committee in Chicago, Saturday, May 19 before the Convention, at which matters of an important nature pertaining to the convention will be finally determined.

The convention will be opened by the National President or one of the National Vice-Presidents on Monday, May 21 at 11 a. m., and an address of welcome by the representative of the Chicago and Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners will be followed by an official address of welcome by Mayor William Dever of Chicago.

There will be a response to this on behalf of the national organization after which the convention will be declared in session and committees named. Then will follow a report on the Motion Picture Palace of Progress or Exposition previous to the noon recesses.

The first business of the afternoon session will be the reading of the report of the National President. Mr. Cohen will give a review of the three years in which he has been National President and will make suggestions for the future development of the organization.

During Monday afternoon, addresses will be delivered on "Exploitation and Salesmanship" with reference to motion picture theatres by Editor Robert E. Welsh, of Moving Picture World; on "Advertising Pictures" by William A. Johnston, Editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS; "On Modern Methods of Exploitation" by Martin J. Quigley, Editor of Exhibitors Herald. Others will also discuss details of picture presentation. Exploitation from the theatre owner's standpoint will be handled by leading exhibitors from different parts of the country representing varied types of theatres and communities. All of these addresses will be short and to the point, it is announced.

Representatives of the Departments of Agriculture, Post Office, Labor, Commerce, and Interior of the United States government having exhibits at the Motion Picture Palace of Progress, will also address the convention Monday afternoon on matters related to their government displays, and point out the lines of co-operation between these Department activities and the theatre owners.

On Tuesday, May 22nd, the convention will open at 10:30 a. m. Reports will be received from the Committee on Credentials, Rules and other committees, ready at that time to present their reports. This will be followed by the report of the National Treasurer, John T. Collins, of Rutherford, N. J.

A complete presentation of the Music License question will be made at this session and addresses on that subject will be delivered by Attorney George P. Aarons, of Philadelphia and Attorney S. A. Handy, of Kansas City, Missouri, and others from various parts of the country. These men will handle the legal details and the other phases of it will be presented to the convention by Sydney S. Cohen and others.

Meanwhile, any business of a general nature which may be presented by the delegates will be considered by the convention.

Tuesday afternoon, Governor J. A. O. Preus, of Minnesota, who will soon be the United States Senator from that state, will discuss "Theatre Insurance." The Governor is an insurance expert and previous to becoming Governor, was Insurance Commissioner in his state.

Following Governor Preus in this discussion, Bruce Dodson, of Kansas City, Mo., a specialist in "group insurance," who has demonstrated in many instances the great utility of that plan and its absolute safety, will carry the subject into minor details.

Another insurance expert from Michigan and others from Pennsylvania and elsewhere, will also discuss insurance after which theatre owner delegates will complete the consideration of the subject. It is likely that this matter will then be referred to a committee with instructions to report definitely at a later session of the convention.

So complete has been the consideration of this subject by the National Officers, that it is certain a saving of upwards of 25 per cent. on all insurance premiums can be effected, and it is stated, theatre owners will be able to take advantage of this benefit immediately following the convention.

The next subject considered will be that of protecting the public against fraudulent stock sales. This matter has been a sore spot in the Motion Picture industry for some times, and a great many people, both in and out of the business have been victimized by sharp practices along these lines. This discussion will be led by a prominent member of Congress, the announcement says.

The other phase of this discussion of protecting the public will be handled by William J. Burns, Chief of the United States Secret Service who will point out the methods by and through which the Theatre Owners and others may co-operate with the Federal government in affording the public complete protection along this line.

Co-operative banking will be discussed by Peter Brady, of New York City, chairman of the Educational Department of the American Federation of Labor, and president of the Allied Printing Trades of New York City. This subject will be handled at the banquet Wednesday evening by Warren S. Stone, of Cleveland, Ohio, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who is also the head of the co-operative banks established in Cleveland and elsewhere by that organization.

On Tuesday, W. D. Burtford, of Chicago, national director of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and chairman of the committee that framed the equitable contract form submitted by the national organization to Will H. Hays, will make a report on "uniform and equitable contract." This will take into account all phases of the negotiations with Mr. Hays.

Public service in practical application through the motion picture theatre, will be reported on by M. J. O'Toole, of Scranton, Pa., chairman of the National Public Service Committee.

The "Code of Business Ethics" arranged by a joint committee of Theatre Owner members of Rotary, International, Kiwanis, Lions, Keystone, Civitas and other clubs will be presented by the chairman of that body, E. W. Collins, of Jonesboro, Arkansas, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas.

If the time of Tuesday will not permit of the entire program as outlined, the discussions will be extended into the Wednesday session, with such additional business on Wednesday as may develop from reports of committees, or introduced on the floor by different delegates.

George Eastman, of Rochester, N. Y., will address the convention on Tuesday afternoon, as well as a number of other notables from different parts of the country.

Wednesday evening, the convention banquet will be held in Hotel Sherman. With Mr. Stone, others who will respond to toasts at the banquet, will be John H. Puelicher, of Milwaukee, Wis., president of the American Bankers Association, Dr. John J. Tigert, United States Commissioner of Education, and others. This list will include a prominent producer and director of Motion Pictures, the Governor of one of the mid-Western states and a United States Senator. The latter, however, are not definite with respect to the time they will be able to appear in Chicago, and on that account, the appointments on the convention and banquet program are held open for them so as to conform as far as possible with their convenience.

This applies to a part of the convention program, as a number of other prominent persons, including leading Motion Picture actors and actresses, have definitely signified their intention of coming to the convention and authorized the national officers to list them accordingly, but have requested that the particular day be left open for the present so that they may be able to fit the same into the studio of appointments.

It is expected by national headquarters that at least from three to four thousand theatre owners will be present in Chicago at this convention.

A large delegation is expected to attend the Chicago convention from New York, according to a statement issued by President Cohen this week. A meeting was held May 2 by the Greater New York Division of the M. P. T. O. A., at which a committee was appointed to make arrangements for exhibitors who will go from the city.

This committee, which is composed of John Manheimer, Morris Needles, Louis Geller, Phil Rosenson and Clarence Cohen, will, it is announced, communicate with similar committees from the Buffalo, Rochester, central and southern New York divisions of the M. P. T. O. A., with a view to having a complete New York State delegation on the same train for Chicago.

Mr. Cohen's office expects several hundred at the convention from the Empire State.

As convention time draws near, it is apparent that a strong sentiment favorable to Al Steffes, of Minnesota, for president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has developed in Illinois, according to a dispatch from the News' Chicago correspondent. It is understood a large majority of the Illinois delegates have already pledged their votes to the Minneapolis organization leader.

N. Y. Censorship Repeal Is Defeated

Short Debate in Assembly Precedes Action Because of Strong Opposition

A DEBATE of less than an hour preceded the defeat of the motion picture censorship repeal in New York State, in the Assembly, Thursday night. The gain of five Republicans to the ranks of those backing the measure could not offset the revolt of three Democratic members who joined the forces of those fighting for the retention of censorship. The feeling was apparent that with the struggle to get the bill out of committee, the repeal would have to fight against strong opposition, and as much as possible had already been done for its advancement. This was reflected when Minority Leader Charles D. Douhne, in defending the bill, said:

"I feel that the men in this chamber have made up their minds as to how they feel on this bill. Any facts or references which I might advance in favor of the repeal of motion picture censorship would only fall on the unwilling ears of those opposed, and but strengthen those who will vote for it."

Mr. Donohue proceeded to call attention to the Democratic platform, and quoted the paragraph in the Governor's message of January 3, denouncing censorship as against our ideas of liberty, freedom of worship and freedom of speech.

One of the strongest talks in favor of the repeal was by Russell B. Griffith, Republican, of Monroe county. Mr. Griffith said he was against the idea of three persons having the regulatory power of what has become one of the biggest industries of the country.

"Another peculiar thing about this censorship," said Mr. Griffith, "is that the state of New York releases a large proportion of the films used in the entire country and the regulation of the state of New York is practically a national organization. I very much question whether it is sound legislation or sound principles for the state of New York, constituting 10 per cent. of the population of the country, to take upon itself the regulation of the entire motion picture industry."

Louis A. Cuvillier, of New York, speaking in favor of the repeal, said that the law had not produced the expected revenue, and that it had driven out of the state the commercial motion picture business, to a considerable degree.

Walter F. Clayton, introducee of the bill two years ago, which created the motion picture commission, claimed that the measure had been introduced for the benefit of the children of the state.

Majority Leader Simon L. Adler, of Monroe, summed up the opposition to the repeal by saying that for a number of years prior to the enactment of censorship, moving picture producing organizations had come to Albany, and promised year after year, to regulate the industry themselves.

The roll call showed that the three Democrats who failed to line up with their forces were: Guernsey T. Cross, of Sullivan; Oscar Kahler, of Chemung; and Robert R. Livingston, of Columbia. The Republicans who voted in favor of the repeal included George N. Jesse, Sol Ullman and Joseph Steinberg, of New York; Vincent B. Murphy and Russell B. Griffith, of Monroe. Four Republicans were absent from the body of the house when the vote was taken, these being Assemblymen Barnes, of Oswego; Benson, of Onondaga; Jenks, of Broome and Seelbach, of Erie.

Michigan Declares James Ritter Serious Candidate For Presidency

"THERE is no truth in the statement that Michigan has no serious intentions of putting James C. Ritter over as a candidate for National President, and that his entrance in the field was made only to divide the field in favor of someone else," says a statement issued Monday by H. M. Richey, Manager of the Michigan Organization. "Michigan is bending every effort to put over their candidate at Chicago and request the exhibitors of the country to come to Chicago unpledged but with an open mind to investigate the various candidates and to judge accordingly.

"We ask that Mr. Ritter be judged purely on his merit; that petty politics and personalities play no part in the selection of a President and Board of Directors this year, for the Chicago Convention will mark a turning point in the life of the Organization. Investigate his activities in Michigan. Investigate his business success. Investigate his qualifications for the office based on what he has done in the past.

"Read his platform. Know what he stands for. Know what the other candidates stand for. Judge accordingly.

"During the week, one of the important matters touched upon by Mr. Ritter was the importance of the building of confidence, not alone within the Industry, but without. The practice which has more or less been followed in the past by exhibitors and exchanges in their discussions, telling about what poor business men the others are, should be discouraged, because of the bad impression that it gives the general public of the industry that we are both interested in. Let's cut out the mud slinging and do more psalmsinging of the praises of our Industry.

"Ours is a great Industry and it is deserving of the respect of everyone. Our Organization must demand the respect of the Public and the Producers. We cannot have it without giving them that same respect."

Michigan is going to Chicago determined that there shall be an efficient National Organization, if any effort that one state can put forth can accomplish that end, and with the conviction that Jim Ritter is the man who can do it.

High Schools Vote on Picture Preferences

Questionnaire Returns from 37,000 Students
Develop Interesting Facts

A PRELIMINARY report on the tastes and preferences of 37,000 high school students, as respects motion pictures, has just been made public by Clarence Arthur Perry, chairman of the National Committee for Better Films of New York City. The report shows that in the popularity vote of boys and girls combined Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge stood at the top among screen actresses. It is interesting to note that for the first time in history of the screen two sisters, Norma and Constance Talmadge, stand together on the heights of popular favor. Wallace Reid, Rudolph Valentino and Douglas Fairbanks led all of the male motion picture actors. Among the boys alone Douglas Fairbanks stood first, while Rudolph Valentino led in the poll of the girls' vote. Among the male actors preferred by the girls, Wallace Reid was second and Richard Barthelmess was third, just ahead of Douglas Fairbanks.

These preferences are based upon the returns to a questionnaire which was filled out by 17,000 boys and 20,000 girls in the high schools of 76 cities and towns in May, 1922. The questionnaire is so comprehensive that it has taken a full year to tabulate and analyze the results. The bodies which have worked together in carrying the investigation through are the National Committee, the Russell Sage Foundation, through its Department of Recreation, and Associated First National Pictures.

The results on attendance show that high school boys attend the movies an average of 1.23 times per week, while the girls go 1.05 times. Among the boys 83 per cent. and the girls 88 per cent. do not attend oftener than twice a week, and those who go more frequently than four times a week reach only 26 out of 1,000 boys and only 9 out of the same number of girls. Students in the second year of high school attend more frequently than those in the first, while those in the third and fourth years attend less frequently than either of the earlier classes.

In an interview Mr. Perry made the following comments upon the results of the study which are of greatest significance to the industry: "The vast bulk of the motion picture audience is made up of people from 10 to 49 years old. According to the United States census nearly one-third of the persons between these ages are not over 19. It is evident therefore that any information regarding the likes and dislikes of the young people in the 'teens is of importance to the persons who are trying to fill motion picture theatres. Now as to what these young people like:

PER CENT OF TOTAL NUMBER OF PREFERENCES ACCORDED EACH CLASS OF PICTURES BY BOYS AND GIRLS:

	Boys	Girls
Western and frontier....	30.0	15.6
Comedies	27.0	19.4

"Here is a table in which their preferences as regards certain types of motion pictures are

Arthur Levy Appointed to Censor Commission

FOLLOWING the defeat of the Walker bill calling for the repeal of the motion picture censorship law, Governor Smith on Friday appointed Arthur Levy of New York City, well known in the wholesale cloak and suit business, as a member of the Commission. Mr. Levy succeeds Joseph Levenson, of New York, secretary of the Commission, whose term had expired on December 31, last. The salary will be $7,500.

The Commission is now made up of two Republicans and one Democrat. The term of Helen M. Hosmer, of Buffalo, expires in 1924, while that of George H. Cobb, chairman, of Watertown, ends in December, 1925. At the time the Commission was formed the law called for the appointment of three members for a term of five years each, except in the terms of the original appointees, which were to expire in 1922, 1924 and 1925.

set forth. A glance shows what appeals to the boys most are the tales of adventure and daring on the frontier. Comedies come in second place and stories of a detective character in third. They have the least liking for serials and tragedies. The girls, on the other hand, place love stories first, with comedies and society life second and third. They, too, have little use for serials and tragedies. Comparing the tastes of the boys in the lower grades with those in the higher grades there is an increasing regard for love stories and society life, and a corresponding falling off in their liking for frontier and detective stories. To the fourth year young men comedies are more interesting even than the western or frontier films.

"Girls, as they grow older, show an increasing regard for love stories and society life. Their other tastes remain about the same, except that their liking for serials grows less and less each year. Boys also show an increasing distaste for serials. Both sexes, it is to be noted, show a slightly greater appreciation of tragedies each year of school life.

"The results show that the tastes of these young men and women vary decidedly as to certain pictures. In other words, there is a picture which is obviously a man's picture, and others which are obviously women's pictures. For example, 'The Birth of a Nation,' 'Three Musketeers' and 'The Connecticut Yankee' are decidedly men's pictures, while 'Way Down East,' 'Over the Hill' and 'Smilin' Through' are decidedly pictures which appeal to the ladies.

"One of the most significant things is the fact that nearly a quarter of the returns volunteered criticisms upon the current motion picture output. Both sexes protested most vigorously against the slapstick comedy. 'I do not like comedies in which the principal characters spend a great deal of the time bombarding each other with cakes and pies,' is the kind of remark that appeared over and over again. Pictures that were not true to life were next in distavor. 'I don't like pictures in which the worthy but poor young man, against impossible conditions, wins the hand of the young millionairess', illustrates this type of criticism. The girls were especially outspoken about the prevalence of murder and shooting on the screen stage, but this objection was not so strongly urged by the male of the species. What the boys did object to—much more than the girls—was the mushy kind of thing: 'I don't like stories where they are always hugging and kissing during the whole show.' Ten per cent. of the boys' objections and eleven per cent. of the girls' were against pictures of 'vamps and such like' and pictures 'that are vile and that you have to be ashamed of.' The films that were bad artistically and also those which exhibited brutality also came in for condemnation.

"One of the most striking results of the study appears in the uniformity of likes and dislikes shown by students of all parts of the country from Maine to California. Pictures which stood high with 4,000 boys in New York stood high with similar numbers of students from west of the Mississippi. There were, of course, some pictures which had a special appeal for certain sections of the country. 'Way Down East' naturally went strong in New England, while 'The Birth of a Nation' captured the Southern boys.

"The leading actors with both boys and girls were at the top in four out of six of the geographic districts from which returns were received. The uniformity with which the various classes of pictures were liked or disliked on the part of the boys and girls in the eastern, central and western states was remarkable. These facts all suggest to me the possibility that the vote of an average audience in New York City—if it could be taken in the right way—would give an index to the comparative popularity of a picture which would be found to hold for other parts of the United States as well. This would not, of course, hold for the few pictures which have a different appeal for the various sections of the country."

Loew Theatres in Toronto Show Prosperity

The annual statement of Loew's Theatres, Limited, Toronto, Ontario, operating Loew's Yonge Street theatre and Loew's Uptown theatre, two local houses, which was presented at the annual meeting of shareholders on April 26, showed that the company had made a general improvement in position during the past year, revenues having advanced steadily and bank loans having been cut by a considerable extent. In addition to this progress, it was shown that taxes for two years had been paid and the operating deficit for 1921 had been practically wiped out.

It was also pointed out that earnings for the first three months of 1923 were running some $1,800 a week ahead of the corresponding weeks of last year and this excess had been used for the wiping out of bank loans. The Uptown theatre, which is on a percentage basis, netted the company approximately $1,000 a week for the whole of 1922 as against only $4,325 for the whole 12 months of 1921.

Rothacker Observes Anniversary

Enterprise Founded Thirteen Years Ago in Chicago Has Had Remarkable Growth

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER found an inspiration in the 1923 anniversary of the founding of the original Rothacker enterprise. This year May the Chicago organization was thirteen years old.

Mr. Rothacker believes others in the industry can derive inspiration in the same way, and he passes on the formula for what it may be worth:

"We are all so busy progressing that we ordinarily don't take the time to pause a moment to appreciate just how fast we are going. On the anniversary of your advent into the motion picture industry dedicate several moments to projecting a few close-ups of the past on memory's screen. You'll get a kick out of the results. If you've been identified with the industry any number of years you'll be awed by the tremendous progress since the day you received your cinema baptism. Even if you have contributed to that progress you needn't feel conceited, because an art that has progressed with such speed in the past will probably move much faster at some time in the future."

In 1910 Mr. Rothacker became a film advertising specialist. "At that time, thirteen years ago, Chicago was still the world's production center," reminisces Rothacker. "California as yet was not taken very seriously except by Colonel Selig. A little group of scrappers led by Carl Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane were fighting for the screen's independence against the powerful General Film monarchy. I remember that when we first took a camera out to shoot advertising films we took along a couple of 'protectors' to fight off camera wrecking crews who threatened physical patient interference.

"In those days the Griffith star was just beginning to ascend. Mary Pickford was being advertised by Carl Laemmle as 'Little Mary.' She was then the world's highest paid screen artist at a salary—well, guess what it was.

"The trade papers had neither earned nor learned their A B C's. Directors were beginning to sell themselves on the proposition that all 'fillum' did not necessarily have to end with a chase. As yet a two-reeler was generally considered a feature length picture. Thirteen years! What a change!"

Mr. Rothacker wrote the first book on motion picture advertising. After his practical picture business was firmly established he branched out into the laboratory field—first in Chicago and then in Hollywood with the Rothacker-Aler Laboratories, of which he is president. His laboratory organization was the first to send service and maintenance men into the field. It was the first to wax film in the plant and it originated the practice of sending continuity sheets out to exchanges.

The meeting this year will be held for one week starting June 11 at the New York office, and promises to be the most successful convention ever held by this film company.

One important object of the yearly gathering will be to show the managers the completed product for next season, in order to make them thoroughly familiar with the 1923-24 productions. Prospects are exceedingly bright for Fox productions for the coming season judging by the impressive array of pictures already completed and those now in production.

Paul C. Mooney Returns From Western Trip

PAUL C. MOONEY, general manager of the New York offices of Louis B. Mayer Productions, Inc., returned to his desk a few days ago after a six weeks' trip in the interests of his firm during which he visited practically every motion picture exchange city of consequence in the country. Mr. Mooney's trip was undertaken in accordance with Louis B. Mayer's general policy of keeping his organization accurately informed of the constantly changing conditions in the industry to the end that all his production and sales plans may be sound from his customers' viewpoint.

Definite sales and promotion work done in the field on this particular swing around the circuit had to do principally with "The Famous Mrs. Fair" and "Hearts of Flame," which the Mayer company is now marketing through Metro Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Mooney's itinerary as outlined in the very comprehensive confidential report which he has submitted to the officers of his company includes the key cities. He was particularly careful to talk to the rank and file of exhibitors, visiting not only the first run accounts but also the smaller exhibitors whom the Mayer organization have always regarded as tremendously important.

It is pretty generally understood in the trade that a producer's representative, interested primarily in the sales end of the business, is never permitted to return to New York with the impression that the motion picture business is wildly booming in the territory which he has visited. However, Mr. Mooney brought back well supported information to warrant the conviction that the approaching fall and winter season is likely to be one of the most active and prosperous which the industry has ever known.

Pettijohn and Willis Back from Long Trip

Charles C. Pettijohn and Lloyd D. Willis of the Will Hays organization, returned to New York during the week after a trip which took them to all parts of America. They visited all but three exchange centers in the interest of the nationalization of F. I. L. M. Clubs under the uniform contract and Hays arbitration plan.

Exhibitors to Aid Choice of Director

FRANCHISE holders and prominent exhibitors have been asked by First National to read Gertrude Atherton's novel "Black Oxen" and name their choice of a director to produce this story upon the screen for First National.

In seeking the opinions of franchise holders First National is acting upon the belief that the exhibitor's point of view will be of practical assistance in selecting the director best qualified.

American Releasing Has New Productions

AMONG the pictures acquired by American Releasing for early distribution are "Clansmen of the North," "Toilers of the Sea" and "The Cricket on the Hearth."

"Clansmen of the North," written and directed by John W. Noble, was produced in its entirety in Nova Scotia with a cast featuring Richard Travers, De Sacia Mooers and Ruth Dwyer.

"Toilers of the Sea," suggested by Victor Hugo's novel, was filmed in Italy by R. Wm. Neill with a cast of American players including Lucy Fox, Holmes Herbert and Lucius Henderson.

"The Cricket on the Hearth" is a picture of Charles Dickens' immortal story of home life. Directed by Lorimer Johnston, the cast comprises Josef Swickard, Virginia Brown Faire, Paul Gerson, Fritzi Ridgway, Margaret Landis, Paul Moore, Joan Standing and Lorimer Johnston.

"To the Last Man" Being Made in Tonto Basin

"To the Last Man," a Zane Grey production adapted from the author's story, will be filmed in the Tonto Basin in Arizona.

The featured players are: Richard Dix, Lois Wilson, Noah Beery, Robert Edeson and Frank Campeau.

Zane Grey is assisting personally and is expected to join the company on location in a few days.

The company left Hollywood by rail for Phoenix, the nearest railway station which is more than 200 miles from location. From here they are motoring to Payson and the remaining nineteen miles is being covered on horseback.

F. B. O. will distribute "Mary of the Movies," from which the scenes above have been taken.

Mayer to Increase Production Arranges for New Stahl Series and Additional Specials, Making Twelve for Year

ANEW series of John M. Stahl productions, for release by First National, was arranged for by Louis B. Mayer, who completed a whirlwind visit to New York on May 1 and is now en route to the Coast.

The next Stahl release, filmed under the title "The Wanters," but likely to be marketed under another name, is being provided First National on an existing contract. The arrangement just made provides for three more.

Mr. Mayer also announces that in addition to three big pictures by Fred Niblo, three by Reginald Barker and three by Mr. Stahl, the Mayer output for the next year will include three specials, of which no previous announcement has been made. A number of stories are being considered and negotiations conducted with directors for these productions.

Three pictures are now in work at the Mayer plant on the Coast. Mr. Niblo is filming "Captain Applejack," Reginald Barker is well along with "The Master of Woman," and Mr. Stahl is shooting on the production now titled "The Wanters." The Niblo and Barker productions are for Metro release.

While none of these releases will be available for play dates before fall, Mr. Mayer said all of them would be in New York completely cut and titled before July 1. The three directors will then start immediately on additional subjects.

There is great activity at the Mayer plant, where the scenario staff, which includes Jack Hawks, Paul Bern, Bernard McConville and Monte Katterjohn, is at work on a number of stories. One of these is the Robert W. Service poem, "The Trail of '98," inspired by the discovery of gold in the Yukon. Mr. Katter-john has drawn this as a special continuity assignment. Tentative plans are to make it a Reginald Barker release.

The Mayer activities, reflected mostly in the current release of "Hearts Aflame" and "The Famous Mrs. Fair" through Metro and "The Dangerous Age" through First National have gained considerable attention in the trade. Irving Thalberg, who recently joined the organization as vice-president, is closely associated with Mr. Mayer in production. Huntly Gordon, Norma Shearer, Renee Adoree, Robert Fraser and John Roche are under long-term contracts to appear in Mayer pictures. To this list Hedda Hopper was recently added. The camera staff includes Alvin Wyckoff, Percy Hilburn and Ernest Palmer.

Blanche Sweet Chosen for "In Palace of King"

The role of the heroine, Dolores, in Goldwyn's film version of the F. Marion Crawford novel, "In the Palace of the King," will be played by Blanche Sweet, wife of Marshall Neilan. Miss Sweet was selected some months ago to play Tess in Neilan's picturization of Thomas Hardy's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," but that production is waiting while Neilan produces "The Rendezvous" for Goldwyn. Emmett Flynn, who is directing "In the Palace of the King," selected the actress for the leading role.

Aside from Miss Sweet, the cast embraces Sam de Grasse as King Philip II of Spain, Hobart Bosworth, Pauline Starke, Aileen Pringle, Charles Clary and others.

"Trilby" has been a stage success for many years. First National now offers it as a screen attraction.

Sam Goldwyn To Start Production

Alexander Carr and Barney Bernard to Get "Potash and Perlmutter" Under Way

ABE POTASH and Mawress Perlmutter will be at home on and after May 15 at Fort Lee, New Jersey, when Clarence Badger will start filming the famous play "Potash and Perlmutter" for Samuel Goldwyn for First National release. Coincident with the announcement that production is soon to start on this picture comes word that the two leading characters of the story, will be portrayed in the screen version by Alexander Carr and Barney Bernard, who played the roles on the stage during the entire run of the play on Broadway.

The third member of the cast to be selected is Vera Gordon, noted portrayor of "mother" roles.

The screen adaption of "Potash and Perlmutter" has been completed by Frances Marion. These two famous personalities, Abe and Mawress, will bring to the screen all the quaint, zestful and characteristic sayings which made them beloved on the American and English stages, it is claimed.

Director Clarence Badger arrived in New York last week and immediately started preliminary arrangements for the production. He will surround himself with an experienced technical cast.

"Potash and Perlmutter" will be a First National attraction, according to the terms of a contract recently signed by Samuel Goldwyn and Associated First National Pictures, whereby the latter company will distribute all of Mr. Goldwyn's product. "Potash and Perlmutter" will be the first of this new product.

George Fitzmaurice is leaving for Rome at an early date to start filming the Hall Caine story, "The Eternal City" for Samuel Goldwyn.

Hopper to Start Work on New Cosmopolitan

Miss Stewart left California for New York this week. Hopper will shortly start work on his next Cosmopolitan production, "Vendetta," a screen adaptation of Marie Corelli's story.

Massive Set Built for "The Alibi"

In the leading roles are Cullen Landis, Alice Calhoun, Percy Marmont and Joseph Kilgour.

Eosta Ekman and Georges Calliga, new players signed by Goldwyn.

Sweden's Matinee Idol Is Coming to Goldwyn

Ekman is said to be the most popular actor in Sweden. Not yet 30, he has been the dominating figure of the Swedish theatre in Stockholm for twelve years.

Ekman will play the principal role in one Goldwyn picture and then return to Stockholm where he is under direction of Albert Ranft, the Scandinavian Belasco, in time for the 1923-24 season.

Drawing on the world for its acting talent, Goldwyn has also signed Georges Calliga, well known as leading man in Paris and London, who will work in his first American picture at the Culver City studios.

Belasco in Tribute to Warners

Declares It Was Their "Sincerity of Purpose" that Made Him Enthusiastic About Alliance

DAVID BELASCO, in the first interview he has given since he formed an alliance with Warner Brothers, this week paid tribute to "the sincerity of purpose" of that concern, and made a number of interesting observations on the relation of stage and screen.

"There are great truths that can only be expressed by silence," so said St. Martin a long time ago. It was this thought in its relation to a new way of telling a story that lured me into moving pictures. The motion picture has come to stay. It has possibilities of amazing delicacy and power and they have come into a consciousness of their purpose," said Mr. Belasco.

"I don't think there should be any rivalry between the stage and the screen. They each have endless possibilities for expressing their story of the human soul, and they can each do it from totally different angles. Every artist wishes to tell his or her story to the greatest number of people. That I suppose is the humanitarian motive back of all art. What possibilities the pictures give for that! How wonderful it would be if only we had a screen record of the greatest and most glorious of actresses—Sarah Bernhardt, during the early part of her career. Bernhardt as she was in Paris when she first played 'Camille.' It was real belief in the Warner Brothers' sincerity of purpose that made me enthusiastic about having Miss Lenore Ulric do 'Tiger Rose' for the screen.

"'Tiger Rose' carries a great message and Lenore Ulric with that intense sincerity that is part of her character will be able I am sure to tell the story, in pictures, of that little French-Canadian girl, who through love found her spiritual outlook on life.

"The stories I think will change, even now they are changing. Audiences today are more analytical. Therefore they seek logic back of the emotions. The trend of the new plays and photoplays will be to represent normal human beings as they are, whose actions spring from their characters, rather than from the old idea of serving the plot.

"Shakespeare's observation about 'The tide in the affairs of men, which taken at its flood, leads on to fortune,' can be understood in more senses than one, but in connection with pictures I think it applies to the Warner Brothers. They have shown wisdom and courage in the selection of their stories and an American intuition in grasping opportunities."

Lucille Rickson Is Given Neilan Lead

Lucille Rickson has at last come into her own in motion pictures, after several years in the films as a child actress. She has been selected by Marshall Neilan and the Goldwyn casting department for the leading feminine role in Neilan's production of Madeleine Ruthven's story, "The Rendezvous."

This is a story of Russia and the role that Miss Rickson will play is that of a peasant girl. This young actress is but sixteen years old.

Opposite her, as leading man, will be Conrad Nagel, who makes his first appearance in a Goldwyn picture in this production. Others selected for the cast are Sydney Chaplin, Emmett Corrigan, Elmo Lincoln, Eugenia Besserer, William Orlamond, Richard Travers and Cecil Holland. "Entertainment and exploitation will go hand in hand as logical twin elements in this series of pictures," said Bennett. Personnel of Pathe Highly Praised

Executive Declares Composition of Board Guarantees Absolute Fairness to All

"THE composition of Pathe's Board of Directors and officers is such that one can forecast the company's policy almost with exactness," says Elmer Pearson, vice president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc. "It is very clear that such men can have no other watchword than absolute fairness to all.

"The dominant note is certain to be aggressive progressiveness.

"It has been demonstrated that they consider it more profitable to lose an investment in a poor subject than to offer it to our trade who are coming rapidly to know that Pathe can be relied upon to offer nothing but the very best of its kind.

"The corporation was never in better financial condition than today.

"Never in its history did it have contracts for product all of which was of such high excellence.

"Pathe Exchange, Inc., enjoys the good will of practically every theatre in the land because of its excellent service and its invariable policy of absolute fairness to its customers.

"We are not content to live upon past laurels but are going to extend that good will to the utmost.

"Our neutral and independent position giving us entree to every theatre, enables us to secure for our producers a very broad distribution, thus enabling us to merchandise at live and let live prices and yet secure a larger gross for any subject than would be possible with restricted distribution even though rental prices be secured that are difficult for the exhibitor.

"As this policy is further developed and becomes better known, Pathe Exchange, Inc., must become a better and better middle man between producer and exhibitor.

"Last year Pathe Exchange, Inc., delivered to exhibitors of the U. S. over one million five hundred thousand shipments of film totaling over two and one-half millions of reels.

"This is an average of 30,000 shipments of film per week and averaged over thirteen thousand exhibitors served per week.

"With the remarkably increased excellence of our product for this year we anticipate a much greater business and will not be content until we number as regular customers every one of America's seventeen thousand exhibitors.

"We are very grateful to our customers for their patronage during the past years and they may depend upon our best efforts to deserve its continuation."

Paramount Executives in Convention

Problems of Organization Are Discussed At First of Series of Gatherings

PARAMOUNT executives and salesmen from all over the East were in New York this week for the semi-annual convention of the Distribution department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which opened Tuesday morning at the Hotel Pennsylvania. More than 125 home office executives, District and Branch managers and salesmen were present.

H. G. Ballance, Divisional Sales Manager, presided and the discussions were led by S. R. Kent, General Manager of Distribution, assisted by executives of the home office. Throughout Tuesday's sessions sales policies were discussed. Mr. Kent, in his opening remarks, declared that reports from the company's forty-six branch offices in this country and Canada showed that in many sections the exhibiting business had returned to the prosperous conditions that prevailed immediately following the war. Several other sections, however, had not yet emerged from the slump, he said.

"Returning prosperity," said Mr. Kent, "means better pictures for motion picture patrons. Reports from Los Angeles are that production in all of the studios has reached a high level. So far as our own company is concerned, some of the biggest pictures we have ever made are scheduled for next Fall's release. 'The Covered Wagon,' the screen version of the late Emerson Hough's novel, which is having a tremendous success in the cities where it has been shown, is a forerunner of the type of big production which will be given to the public next season."

Wednesday's sessions were devoted to detailed discussions of each of the productions scheduled for release during the months of August, September and October, opening the Paramount year. Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production; Robert T. Kane, general production manager, and Mr. Kent led in these discussions. The convention closed with an informal dinner at the Pennsylvania Wednesday evening.

On Thursday evening the home office executives left for Chicago where the second of the four conventions will open at the Drake Hotel Saturday and continue through Sunday. This convention will be in charge of Divisional Sales Managers John D. Clark and George W. Weeks. The party will then entrain for New Orleans for the third convention and then go to Los Angeles where the final convention will open at the Hotel Ambassador Monday, May 21.

Those making the trip are Jesse L. Lasky, S. R. Kent, Eugene Zukor, John D. Clark, George W. Weeks, E. E. Shaner, Mel Shaner, Herman Wobber, Claud Saunders, C. E. McCarthy, A. M. Botsford, G. B. J. Frawley, G. M. Spidell, A. M. Hoggan and A. O. Dillenbeck.

Universal Celebrates Anniversary

Company Launched Eleven Years Ago; Laemmle Again Pledges Every Cooperation

UNIVERSAL this week is celebrating its eleventh anniversary. Just eleven years ago, the company headed by Carl Laemmle, came into being, during an era of the motion picture industry when companies existed for a day and when the outlook for the future was dark. "This week, the Universal chief in a resume of company prosperity, called attention to its immense studio, its branch exchanges in every corner of the world, and its array of super pictures now made or in production."

As a surprise to Mr. Laemmle and in celebration of the anniversary week, the exchange force, headed by Art Schmidt, general sales manager, arranged for Universal Weeks in thousands of theatres.

The results, according to the sales department, speak for themselves. It has been the greatest single week in the history of Universal pictures. The product has appeared upon the screen of practically every theatre in the United States, it is claimed. Many houses, Schmidt reports, played solid Universal programs.

The anniversary celebration arranged by the sales department was a distinct surprise to Mr. Laemmle, and was a source of great gratification to him. He expressed himself in especial sympathy with the new method of putting over anniversary weeks and characterized it as a exhibitor aid, not an exhibitor hindrance.

An indication of the great forward steps taken by Universal under Carl Laemmle's direction during the last decade is to be seen in the array of Jewel production, used by exhibitors during the past week. "The Abysmal Brute," "Baru," "Hunting Big Game in Africa," "Driven," "The Flame of Life," "The Flirt," "The Kentucky Derby," "Under Two Flags," and "The Storm," are in the list of the specials put out by Universal during the last six or eight months.

In commenting upon Universal's great growth and future prospects, Laemmle reiterated his belief in the absolute tie-up between the welfare of the industry as a whole and the industry of the small and independent exhibitor.

"The film industry always has advanced and always will advance step by step with the advancement of the independent exhibitor. No theory of progress which is not based upon the welfare and better business of the independent exhibitor is worth a continental hurrah.

"From the day when the independent producers banded together to fight the General Film Company more than a decade ago, I have constantly preached exhibitor welfare," said the Universal head. "And I have constantly practised what I preached. Today there is not an exhibitor in the United States who can say he had not had fair play at the hands of Universal. Most exhibitors are only too glad to come out and give Universal credit for being their friend."

Of the thousand scenes to be taken, 431 already have been shot, and twenty-one of the forty-five sets have been disposed of.

Robert Priest Moves into New Quarters

Robert W. Priest, independent distributor, announces the establishment of new quarters in the Strauss Building, New York City.

The announcement states that owing to the extension of his activities, including the distribution of projectors in the non-theatrical field, Mr. Priest has found it necessary to desert the Great White Way for the more sedate atmosphere and environment of Fifth Avenue.

George Merritt Added to Cast of "Her Only Son"

George Merritt has been added to the cast of the new Daniel Carson Goodman picture, "Her Only Son," now in the course of construction. Others in the cast include Mary Carr, Charles Mack and Mildred Harris. Merritt has just completed a role in "Barred Doors" for the Distinctive.

Alan Crosland, who directed "Enemies of Women," is directing.

Alfonso and Lloyd George See "Robin Hood"

"Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" was shown recently to King Alfonso of Spain, at the palace in Madrid, and to David Lloyd George at the former British premier's country place in England.

Both were request performances and were arranged by R. W. McFarland, personal representative of Fairbanks in Europe.

"The Good Bad Man" Is Being Edited

John Emerson and Anita Loos are now at work editing "The Good Bad Man," the second of the pictures of famous stars to be released by Harry Aitken and Oscar Price. This picture, acknowledged one of the best Westerns that Douglas Fairbanks ever made, will be released following "The Americano."

Arrow Is Compelled to Enlarge Space

Due to expansion of business the Arrow Film Corporation has enlarged its office space and is now occupying much larger quarters on the same floor in the Candler Building, 220 West 42nd Street, where this concern's headquarters have been located for a number of years.

Mabel Normand's Next Will Be "Mary Ann"

As soon as Mabel Normand has completed "The Extra Girl," she will start work on a new picture, the title of which is to be "Mary Ann." "The Extra Girl," now in production, is being directed by Richard Jones.

Vaudeville Dancer in C. K. Young Film

David Marvel, vaudeville dancer, has been added to the cast of "In Old Madrid," Clara Kimball Young's newest Metro vehicle. It is his first appearance on the screen.

"Circus Days" Is Jackie's Next First National

"CIRCUS DAYS" has been chosen as the title for Jackie Coogan's next First National release. The picture, founded on the story "Toby Tyler," by James Otis, is being given its final editorial touches.

 NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

JACK HERSCHMAN, formerly Goldwyn salesman in the Wisconsin territory, is now connected with Famous Players-Lasky's Chicago organization. Harry O'Brien has been transferred from city to the country territory formerly covered by Joe Wolf, who went to the New York headquarters of Paramount, and Bill Washburn, who has been covering country territory is now selling Paramount pictures in Chicago.

Cecil Maberry has been in Chicago for the past two weeks, and although at present he is not actively connected with the motion picture business, spent considerable time visiting along film row. Oil has been found on properties near the Oklahoma ranch owned by Mr. Maberry and developments indicate that his acres may be included in the oil belt. His many friends are hoping that he soon may be an oil magnate.

Chicago will be Paramount headquarters on May 12 and 13 when the chief executives of this company come to Chicago for a convention at the Drake Hotel. Besides the New York officials, division managers, sales managers and salesmen of the Central West will attend and it is understood that this will be the most important meeting of a series being held throughout the country by the Famous Players-Lasky organization.

District Manager Hickey and Chicago Manager Reingold of Goldwyn were scheduled to leave for Atlantic City this week for a big convention of their organization. District supervisors and branch managers from all over the United States are to attend the meeting, as well as the executive heads of the company.

Bill Brimmer is again connected with the sales department of First National and will cover the territory, of which Quincy, Ill., is the principal key center. Salesman Nelson, formerly with Select, is now traveling country territory for First National.

Manager Jack Sampson of F. B. O.'s Chicago office has recently added Charles E. Elfenbein to his sales staff. Mr. Elfenbein will cover eastern Illinois and northern Indiana territory. He has recently been connected with American Releasing Company's Chicago exchange and is also well known in Minneapolis, where he was engaged in the film business for several years.

Herman Stern presided at a meeting of Universal's Indianapolis district sales staff last week and remained several days in the Hoosier metropolis.

R. C. Seery, who recently returned from First National's annual stockholders meeting in New York, believes he set a traveling record during the month of April, when he rode the Pullmans for 9,000 miles.

Sam Von Ronkel, producer of the Gump Comedies, who has been in Chicago for several days conferring with Cartoonist Sid Smith on the pictures which will be released at an early date, has returned to the West Coast. Mr. Von Ronkel brought working prints of some of the Gump comedies with him and secured the ideas of Mr. Smith on just how the pictures should be cut and the sentiment he wishes to express in them. The Gump Cartoons will be released through Universal.

Carl Laemmle and the Randolph Theatre will be hosts to Chicago orphans Wednesday and shows "Hunting Big Game in Africa With Gun and Camera" at the Auditorium on that day. H. A. Snow, who made this splendid picture, will be present and address the youngsters, and Mayor Dever of Chicago has also promised to appear. Arrangements are being made whereby all the orphans from the different institutions of the city will be brought to the auditorium in Ford cars free of charge.

"Safety Last," Harold Lloyd's laugh producer, is scheduled to open at Orchestra Hall on May 28. Martin Henoch of the Stratford theatre having leased the big Michigan avenue theatre for seventeen weeks and taken over the feature for its Chicago premier. Mr. Henoch, it is understood, has arranged for a large orchestra and other features which will give atmosphere to the picture during its run.

The National Screen Service moved its Chicago office from 738 South Wabash avenue to the seventh floor at 845 South Wabash on May 1. The Automatic Ticket Register Company will also be located at 845 South Wabash after June 1. The Siple Studios are also scheduled to move into the same building.

Daylight saving became effective Sunday, April 29, and the majority of theatres in the city felt the bad effects immediately. While the big loop houses and a few of the larger neighborhood theatres did their usual Sunday business others report as high as 25 per cent decrease in attendance for that day. The Standard Time League, coincident with the daylight saving becoming effective, enlivened its campaign to have the period of daylight saving shortened or abolished altogether, and many theatre men spurred by the bad effects of the change in time on theatre attendance are co-operating with the League in its efforts.

Ground was broken on April 30 for a new 600-seat house in North Chicago. This theatre, which will be a handsome and up-to-date picture house, is expected to be ready to open September 1. It has been leased for ten years by J. P. Dromey and will be managed by A. L. Childers.

Nicolas Young, of Brunhild & Young, took a vacation trip recently in company with one or two friends, motoring to South Bend, Grand Rapids, Lansing, Flint and other Michigan points, and is back on the job this week with renewed pep and energy.

A new picture house costing $350,000 and seating 2,000 persons is to rise on the site of the present Chatterton theatre at Springfield, Ill. George C. Hickox is head of the realty company which has been managing the Chatterton.

Elgin voters defeated the daylight saving proposition by a vote of 6,309 to 5,255.

Another Illinois city is added to those whose residents are privileged to view movies on Sunday as a result of a recent referendum vote in De Kalb. This is the third election held on the question of Sunday opening.

"The Little Girl Next Door," a Blair Coan production, which has the distinction of being the first feature picture made in Chicago for some years, was shown at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Orpheum theatre last week and is scheduled to go into the Washington theatre, Detroit, for the week of May 5.

Nat Royster, well known in Chicago amusement circles, where he has been engaged for many years as an exploitation and publicity man, is handling the publicity for the Motion Picture Palace of Progress and has also opened offices in the Hartford building at 8 South Dearborn street, where he is prepared to handle exploitation for motion picture theatres, producers or other amusement enterprises.

George Larkin, who is en route to the West Coast, stopped off in Chicago last week for a visit at Russell Productions' headquarters in the Hartford building. Mr. Larkin, as soon as he arrives in California, will start work on a series of six features for Russell Productions.

The Aledo Opera House at Aledo, Illinois, has been leased by L. J. Trevor, from J. W. Edwards.

Al Steffes gave a luncheon for officers and directors of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners at the Hotel Sherman last week. Accompanied by Messrs. Kopold and Kaplan, of the Minnesota organization, he was on his way from New York to Minneapolis. Mr. Steffes is enthusiastic over the outlook for a great exhibitors' convention in Chicago and believes that it will have the greatest number of exhibitors attending a similar event.

President Glen Reynolds, of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, has appointed the national convention entertainment committee, which includes, Messrs. Hopp, Silha, M. Siegel, Berve and Frank. The committee already has submitted a program of entertainment to President Sidney S. Cohen for his O. K. which, if carried out as proposed, will assure convention delegates and exhibitors a rousing good time while in the city.

Recent changes in the Chicago censor board are viewed with satisfaction by Chicago motion picture men. The new appointments were made following the inauguration of Mayor Dever. Mrs. Amy Adams became chief censor, succeeding Mrs. Kerr. Other appointees are Mrs. Sorensen and Mrs. Bennett, the latter of whom was reappointed.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy have started work on their new theatre and office building at the southeast corner of Kedzie and 63rd Street and it is hoped to have the new house completed by the 1st of October. The building, it is reported, will cost $400,000. This firm, which operates a large string of theatres, has not been represented in Chicago for several years.

Edward Collins has arrived from New York to assume his new duties as assistant manager of Fox's Chicago exchange. It is understood that Assistant Manager Cavanaugh is slated for a promotion to branch managership, but will remain at the local office until some time in June.

"Safety Last" lobby display at the Liberty theatre, Wenatchee, Wash., making effective use of poster cut-outs

Illuminated Boards Feature of "Souls for Sale" Campaign

Providence, R. I.—An energetic exploitation campaign was put over for "Souls for Sale" at the Emory Majestic theatre, working with Martin Touhey, William Mahoney and Alton C. Emery of the theatre staff.

The special stunt that they used was the placing of a big illuminated board with the "Souls for Sale" 24-sheet poster on it on South Square which is one of the most prominent squares in Providence and which can be seen from three streets converging at that spot. The fact that this board was illuminated made it as effective advertising at night as it was in the day time.

A 24-sheet poster was also put up on the back of the Emory Majestic, which every motorist going down town can not avoid seeing. This sign was also illuminated and it, too, faced three streets, Washington, Aborn and Empire. This gave a wonderful flash on the clear wall that had never been used before for such purposes. This is the finest outdoor advertising space in Providence. Permission was obtained to hang a mounted 24-sheet poster on the front of the Washington Building in Washington street, an exceptionally good location. The building is one of the finest that Providence boasts, and the posting of this 24-sheet cost nothing. Six sheets were also hung in the Emory Billiard Parlors, one of the busiest places in the city.

Flaming Lobby Display for "The Eternal Flame"

SUMTER, S. C.—For a lobby display on "The Eternal Flame," Manager Oscar White of the Rex theatre used a six-sheet cut-out of Norma Talmadge. Strips of red paper were pasted to the edges of this cut-out and an electric fan was put back of it. The breeze from this fan kept the strips of paper shooting out from the cut-out. A red light was placed back of this.

In front of this was a compo board sign reading "Norma Talmadge in 'The Eternal Flame.'" Back of this were more red lights.

The guessing contest was also pulled on the burning candle.

Safety Pin Throwaways Are Used on "Safety Last"

NEWARK, N. J.—During the run of "Safety Last" the lobby of the Rialto theatre displayed a highly amusing cut-out showing a New York sky-scraper skyline with Lloyd performing his thrilling stunts. Throwaway teasers had been scattered broadcast—a small envelope inscribed: "When embarrassed Use the Enclosed." Inside was a card with a safety pin attached containing a miniature reproduction of the lobby cut-out, with the theatre's announcement and the line referring to the pin—"First Aid for Busted Buttons, Use This."

The Rialto's "Safety Last" plans included Saturday morning performances for school children.

"Java Head" Tied Up with Recruiting A-Boards

WILKES-BARRE, PA. — Manager Ted Reilly, of the Savoy theatre, and Vernon Gray, Paramount exploiteer, effected an excellent navy recruiting tie-up on "Java Head."

Reilly and Gray sold the officer the idea of tying up with the Chinese atmosphere of the picture. This got the A-Boards, owned by the Navy and Marine Corps. On one side was yellow Chinese-like lettering, urging men to see the wonders of China by joining the navy, and to see also what China was like by paying a visit to "Java Head."

The other side of the board contained stock publicity scenes from China issued by the Navy Department.

Cuban Shawl Displayed to Aid "Bright Shawl" Showing

Brooklyn, N. Y.—An artistic and unusual window display was arranged on "The Bright Shawl" by Edward L. Hyman, managing director, and Lee S. Ferguson, publicity director, with the Abraham and Straus store for the showing at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre.

On Saturday before the picture opened shoppers along Fulton Street, Brooklyn's principal shopping thoroughfare, had their attention drawn to the display in a large window adjoining the main entrance of the store. The window setting consisted of a lovely Cuban garden with a solitary figure, a woman, standing a little to the left. Around her shoulders and draped from neck to heels was probably the most beautiful Spanish shawl ever displayed in public. Its gorgeous colors drew the attention of those passersby who were on the opposite side of the street, and it was noted that hundreds crossed especially to see it.

On a neatly lettered card in the window was this explanation: "This $25,000 bright shawl was given to Dorothy Gish by the Cuban government when she made scenes of 'The Bright Shawl' in Havana, in appreciation of the story's sympathy for Cuban freedom."

"Make a Gown" Contest Staged to Exploit "Thelma"

Boston, Mass.—A practical and effective exploitation stunt, which is capable of wide adaptation, has just been completed here with the closing of the "Make a Gown" contest.

The tie-up was made by Ed Hurley of the Film Booking Offices between the Tremont Temple, the Boston Evening Telegram and Houghton and Dutton Company department store here. The keystone of the contest was the picture "Thelma."

Daily from April 1st until April 28th the Boston Telegram carried the story on their front page and often gave it as much as a half page on the inside. The nature of the contest was to out-dress Jane Novak and the beautiful gowns she wore in "Thelma." Five hundred dollars in cash were offered to the girls of Greater Boston to make their own gowns.

The success of the contest can be readily seen by the number of entrants. There were one hundred and ten women and girls who entered the affair with eighty-seven of these entering the fashion parade held for the selection of the winners.

The "Make A Gown" contest opened April 1st, the day that "Thelma" opened at the Tremont Temple. The Telegram in announcing it gave it a three column head on the front page, an eight column streamer line and a half page of copy and pictures on the inside. The money offered in prizes was put up by the paper and the department store. The only conditions governing the affair was that no contestant must be a professional dressmaker and that no gown entered should have cost more than twenty dollars to make.

Theatre Takes Own Medicine on Buried Letter Stunt

CHICAGO, ILL.—The management of the Palace theatre figured that if buried letters enhanced the value of merchants' ads in co-operative pages, it should be profitable for themselves.

For the week's ad for "The Leopardess," "Adam and Eva" and "The Headless Horseman," the theatre buried certain letters. Anybody finding them all and arranging them to spell "Marion Davies" received a free ticket to "The Leopardess."

The prizes offered were—first prize, $200; second prize, $100; and four prizes of $50 each.

At the opening of the contest Houghton and Dutton store turned over their entire main floor and two windows on the principal street. In addition to this they had four hundred large cards printed and hung up on the walls on different floors. These cards read—"Join the 'Make a Gown' contest, outdress Jane Novak at Tremont Temple in 'Thelma' and win $500 in cash prizes." The store followed this with turning over part of their advertising space in the other Boston papers.

A coupon was run daily in the paper that, filled out, entitled the bearer to select any pattern they wanted in the store and experts were on hand to guide women in the making of the gowns. As a contestant filed her application at special booth in the store she was presented with a pair of tickets to the Tremont Temple in order to see the gowns worn by Miss Novak in "Thelma."

Newspaper Contest Put Over on "What's Wrong with Women"

Tampa, Fla. — The title of the picture, "What's Wrong with the Women," suggested to Manager Robert C. Frost, of the Strand theatre, a newspaper tie-up along the lines of the title.

The newspaper co-operated with him in this, and every day for a week in advance they had special articles by prominent citizens expressing their ideas as to the glaring faults of the women of today.

On the following Sunday, the day of opening, a co-operative double truck came out in the morning paper. Every ad in the truck used the title, "What's Wrong with the Women" as the slogan for their advertisement.

Manager Has Street Repaired as "Fast Mail" Publicity

Perth, West Australia.—A unique publicity tie-up was arranged with the Perth Council when "The Fast Mail" played at the Theatre Royal. The city authorities had the road in front of the theatre repaired in anticipation of the great crowds expected to see this picture.

The road in front of the theatre was in very bad shape at the time the picture was booked for this particular house. The Australian manager decided to devote extra work to this campaign. In order to land a photo in the Perth newspapers it was necessary to have some unusual tie-up, as they did not favor the usual ballyhoo photos for publicity purposes.

The theatre manager sold the Perth Council on the idea of remaking a stretch of the road in order to take care of the crowds he expected to attend the theatre during the run of "The Fast Mail." A picture of the road repairers at work with an announcement of the coming attraction was then carried in the Perth Sunday Times before the opening date.

Thorough Sales Campaign Put Behind Showing of "Brass"

Macon, Ga.—Manager E. C. Kingman of the Rialto theatre started his campaign on "Brass" early and continued it right through the run.

Posters and accessories were put out eight days in advance. Newspaper teasers were started a week in advance. Slide advertising was started a week in advance.

The central feature of the lobby display was the cut-out from the 24-sheet, the ring with the couple pulling at it. The letters forming the word "Brass" were mounted and hung in the center of the ring on invisible cord, harmonizing with a purple velvet background, immediately behind the ring and title only. Behind the cut-out were gold and yellow streamers, radiating from the floor to the ceiling. In front of these was a row of amber lights. Above and extending across the lobby were four cards with catch lines from the press book on them.

A window display of wedding rings was put on by a local jeweler. In the window was a card reading, "Is your wedding ring brass? It would not be had he bought it from us. See 'Brass' at the Rialto, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday."

A tie-up was also arranged with a music house. They put on a display of musical instruments and in their window was a card reading, "Some of these instruments are brass, but the quality and workmanship is unsurpassed. See 'Brass' at the Rialto Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday."

Special Book Aids "Thorns and Orange Blossoms"

NASHVILLE, TENN.—The special photoplay edition of "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" is being widely used as an exploitation aid on the picture.

The Knickerbocker theatre in Nashville is one of the houses which has recently given away souvenir copies of this story in advance of the picture's run. Every lady in Wednesday's audience, the week before the film opened in that house, received the book, which is illustrated with stills from the picture and features on the cover Estelle Taylor, Edith Roberts and Kenneth Harlan.

Ushers Tell Patrons About "Adam's Rib" Showing

PEORIA, ILL.—Manager R. C. McMullen of Ascher's Palace theatre has his doormen and ushers say to each patron, "Remember 'Adam's Rib' plays here the first week in April," for two weeks before the run.

Mr. McMullen and Norman E. Dixon, Paramount exploiteer, also tied up the paper for an "Adam's Rib Tongue-Twister Contest," for such masterpieces as these: "Paramount Pleases Peoria People Partaking Pleasure Particularly 'Adam's Rib,'" or "Fifty-five flippy, flirting flappers frivolously frolicked from 'Adam's Rib'" and the like, were brought out.

"Broken Chains" Synopsis Is Run by Newspaper

OMAHA, NEB.—Nate Frudenberg, publicity director of the Goldberg theatres, and Charlie Raymond, Goldwynner, engineered a tie-up with the Omaha News on "Broken Chains" in which the synopsis was run on the front page of the late edition in six installments.

The day the story opened, a large layout of pictures was used on the second page. The editor, Neil Jones, reported it one of the most interesting features he had run in some time.

Horse Race Staged in Street to Aid "Kentucky Derby"

Casper, Wyo.—Manager Thomas Villnave of the Wyoming theatre, co-operating with T. Bidwell McCormick, Universal exploiteer, put over a smashing campaign for "The Kentucky Derby."

It was launched by special stories started in the newspapers long before the opening date was announced. A tie-up was then effected with the evening paper which sponsored a horse race held on one of the downtown streets, near the central business district. On the day of the race which marked the opening of "The Kentucky Derby" at the Wyoming theatre banners were to be seen everywhere about the "race track," and in addition the newspaper devoted much space to the event and its connection with the picture. Several thousand persons were on hand to witness the race.

The morning paper tied up to sponsor a children's matinee. A prize of a pair of tickets to see the picture was offered one child in each of the 116 rooms of the school who should receive the best grades for the week in their school work. A special feature of the matinee was that each child attending was given the choice of a big bag of peanuts or an ice cream cone. Although preparations were made for an unusually heavy attendance, more supplies had to be secured before the afternoon was over.

Clever Newspaper Tie-Up Made on "A Front Page Story"

Boulder, Col.—The Daily Camera and the management of the Curran theatre, with the permission of Mayor J. O. Billig, framed up a stunt on "A Front Page Story" that arouse widespread interest.

The newspaper began its week's tie-up in its Saturday edition, in which it announced on the front page with a spread head that the Camera would publish the inside story of a quarrel between the editor and the mayor.

On Monday the editor followed up his statement with another front page story headed, "Louis Herman Favors the Fullest Publicity of the Scrap Between Editor and Mayor," and on Tuesday there was still another story on the front page which carried the head, "Camera Editor Declines to Retract from Stand on Matter of Dispute With Mayor Billig." On Wednesday the Camera published its final advance story, also on the first page, and headed, "Camera Editor Declines to Bulge for Billig or for Mayor's Friends who Advise Silence," and said that, as previously announced, the full story would be printed the following day. The announcement on Wednesday was supplemented by the distribution of thousands of cards reading:

"Don't Miss a Front Page Story. The Truth About the Mayor. It Will Be Published in Thursday Night's Camera."

On Thursday came the punch.

A three-column spread head at the top of the front page of the Camera read: "Mayor of Boulder Has Failed to Make Any Income Tax Return on His Annual Salary as Mayor."

Greensburg Has Tag Day of Its Own as Stunt on "Gimme"

GREENSBURG, P.A.—When "Gimme" was shown at the Strand theatre, Greensburg, had a tag day of its own, engineered by Goldwynner Wm. N. Robson and Manager E. E. Rutter of the Strand.

A special tag bearing the word "Gimme" was printed and two thousand of these were distributed just as tags are on tag days. The school children proved especially valuable in tagging pedestrians and soon had their elders doing the same thing.

A teaser campaign was used in the newspapers, tying the picture up with events of local interest. The word "Gimme" in large type occurred on each of these teasers.

Then followed a cleverly written two-column story in which it was bluntly charged that the mayor had paid no income tax on his salary and that this was the cause of the quarrel between the editor and the mayor. Tucked away down near the end of the story was the following solution:

"Careful inquiry was instituted by the editor of the Camera and the facts elicited are made public today. The mayor pays no income tax on his salary.

"Later: The matter has been referred to the Internal Revenue Collector.

"Still later: City Manager Scott Mitchell notifies the editor that the mayor hasn't been paid any salary.

"The latest: City Attorney Moorhead calls the editor to notify him that the law provides no salary for the mayor of Boulder."

White Gardenia Stunt Worked to Exploit "Grumpy"

Atlanta, Ga.—Inexpensive paper gardenias were used by Howard Price Kingsmore of the Howard theatre, and Oscar Kautner, Paramount exploiter, in their campaign on "Grumpy," based on the fact that a white gardenia plays an important part in the story. Attached to the blossoms was a tag reading:

"Follow the trail of the white gardenia to the Howard theatre to see "Grumpy"—grouchy, lovable, wise, grumpy Theodore Roberts—solve the mystery of the white gardenia and the theft of the $400,000 Lawson diamond."

Suggestion Stirs Up Curiosity in "Lost and Found" Ads

Toronto, Ont.—Manager Ben Cronk, of the Allen theatre, put across a unique newspaper advertising stunt for the recent presentation of the feature, "Lost and Found on a South Sea Island." For several days he used display space in the newspapers to address a general invitation to all residents of Toronto to express frank and personal opinions regarding whether the picture should be shown in Toronto at all or not.

Mr. Cronk referred to the feature as "this startling picture of life and love in the tropics" and "one that created a sensation in New York." He asserted that "if there is a real objection among patrons to its showing here we will be pleased to follow the decision of the majority of our public." Those who knew the story were asked to send their letters of protest to the manager of the theatre if they believed the picture to be too risqué.

Later, Mr. Cronk announced that Toronto had decided to see the feature and it would, therefore, be presented.

Unique "Third Alarm" Prologue Staged in Theatre Alley

Alhambra, Cal.—On the opening night of "The Third Alarm" Manager Rudy Schleusner of the Temple theatre, by pre-arrangement with Fire Chief Frank A. Bovet, turned in an alarm and the entire fire-fighting apparatus of the city dashed out of the fire house and made one of the swiftest runs on record, bringing up at the theatre entrance in exactly 46 seconds by a stop watch.

Announcement of the run had been made in newspaper stories and advertisements and on the screen. Long before the time set for the run the main thoroughfare was lined with people and a crowd blocked the street in front of the theatre.

Manager Schleusner, however, was not satisfied with giving the general public a thrill; he reserved one of the most unique prologues ever staged as a thrilling introduction to the picture. Just before the showing of "The Third Alarm" the operator pulled every light switch in the house. The curtain was raised, disclosing what appeared to be a frame in the distance, the inside ablaze with light. Two pieces of apparatus with headlights blazing and manned by firemen in uniform were stationed 200 feet down an alley back of the theatre and, at a given signal, with siren screaming and gong clanging, dashed past the opening. The screen was lowered and as the main title of the picture was flashed on the sound of gong and siren died down as in the distance. The entire audience that had gasped at the unusual scene arose to its feet and cheered.

"The Hottentot" Exploited Through Collar Tie-Up

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Hottentot brand of Arrow collars arrived in Kansas City just in time to catch the run of "The Hottentot" at Newman's theatre and the hook up was good for an attractive window in many of the leading haberdashery stores, namely those handling Lion collars.

Managing Director Milton Feld, familiar with every merchant in the vicinity of the theatre, made a tie-up on riding togs with the Schmelzer company on Grand avenue, of "Happy Hottentot" records with a prominent music store, and riding boots and saddles with another store. The saddle alleged to have been used by Douglas MacLean in making the picture was there as exhibit A.

The prologue was staged through the opening of a door, 14 feet high by 14 feet wide, in the back wall of the theatre usually used for the handling of scenery. Across the alley two posts were erected and the house street drop hung to serve as a background. Flood lights were set high up on the wall, arranged so as to throw light on the drop. The prologue was staged at every performance during the run of the picture and goes to prove that—if you haven't a stage large enough for a prologue, use the alley.

Paper Declines "Oliver Twist" Serial; Manager Prints It

Washington Court House, Ohio.—When the local newspaper declined to print the serial fictionization of "Oliver Twist," R. J. McLean, manager of the Palace theatre, announced to his patrons that he would publish it himself as a theatre house organ. The result was that a small issue was exhausted shortly after publication and a re-order had to be placed.

Mats for the six instalments were obtained from First National's New York office and a job printer with a casting box did the rest. It was printed under the name of "The Palace News" and the six instalments were sent to a select mailing list, the circulation, in response to written demand, increasing with each instalment.

Coal Mine Entrance Built for "Flame of Life" Lobby

Birmingham, Ala.—Manager Thomas G. Coleman of the Galax theatre played up "The Flame of Life" with a special lobby display in which the front of the theatre was transformed into what appeared to be the entrance to a coal mine. This was accomplished by boarding up the lobby across the front with rough lumber. A large opening was left in the center. This opening was framed up with what appeared to be very heavy timbers, and with diagonal braces across the top to give the desired effect which was that of supporting a very heavy load.

Over these rough boards on each side of the opening a three-sheet was posted. Inside and on the left was a cut-out of Priscilla Dean going down a ladder. A real lantern was put in her hand with a red electric light globe inside. On the right side was a miner ballyhoo, a man dressed as a miner, with cap, lamp, pick and a dinner pail. This man was on duty 10 hours a day. All around inside were hung miners' tools, picks, shovels, etc. The lights under the marquee and inside the lobby were all dyed red. On the top of the marquee was a cut-out of Priscilla Dean wading through the water in the mines.

A special appeal was made to the miners of Ensley, a mining district just outside of Birmingham.

Many Hearts Used in Display for "Hearts Aflame"

Tampa, Fla.—Manager Robert C. Frost, of the Strand theatre, centered his display on "Hearts Aflame" around the box office, which was covered with a large beaver board heart. This was then practically covered with a number of small hearts. A fire effect was produced from the bottom, which gave the impression that flames were leaping over the whole heart and that it was all on fire.

About the lobby and on each side of the box office hearts four feet in diameter were suspended. On each one was mounted a head of one of the principal players, which was cut out from the stock six-sheet.

The marquee was also dressed in keeping with the rest of the display. Criss-crossed along the front and under the marquee were strings of little hearts about four inches in diameter.

Cinderella Shoe Stunt Used to Aid "Adam's Rib"

FRANKLIN, IND.—"Adam's Rib" at the Opera House was given a strong boost through the always reliable Cinderella slipper stunt.

Manager O. I. Demaree and Fred E. Walters, Paramount exploiteer, landed a shoe store which offered pairs of 2-A slippers to persons who could wear them.

The display consisted of the Curtis art stills and the special publicity photographs tying up with the pre-historic footwear seen in the picture.

Puzzle Contest Is Put Over as "The Christian" Tie-Up

Calgary, Canada.—A puzzle contest that proved very effective exploitation of "The Christian" was arranged between the Palace theatre and the Calgary Daily Herald. The contest ran through five issues of the Herald. The first daily prize in the contest was a copy of a fine edition of Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Christian." Free passes to the picturization of the novel at the Palace theatre were given each day to two other persons.

To win the prize, the readers of the Herald were to take the number of mixed letters run in each announcement of the newspaper and from that construct the title of one of Sir Hall Caine's novels. For example, the first mixed letter puzzle was—IAH — TER — HONDN. The announcement of the puzzle in the following issue of the paper gave the answer to the first puzzle. The title to be constructed from the first mixed letter puzzle was "The Iron Hand." Another was—DER — TES — TEM — HE. The novel whose title can be found in these letters is, of course, "The Deemster."

This contest was most popular among the readers of the Calgary Herald, and hundreds of answers were received every day. It formed the most valuable kind of publicity for "The Christian." The management also sent out an announcement of the showing of the film of an invitation to attend it, but at the bottom of the invitation in small letters were the words, "Regular admission prices."

Appeal to Teachers Proves Aid to Showing of "Robin Hood"

Spartanburg, S. C.—Manager Frank Strozier of the Rex theatre created interest in "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" by making a direct appeal by letter to the principals of each school, inviting each teacher to be his guest at the Rex theatre on a certain day to view this film. The teachers, after viewing the picture gave it their personal endorsement to all the children, urging them not to miss it. In the same manner, the Better Films Committee was reached. And their endorsement was given publicity in both the morning and evening papers.

As an additional advance stunt, every family in Spartanburg was approached by telephone, informing them that "Robin Hood" was playing the Rex theatre such and such a time, also giving them the starting hours.

Two Novel Stunts Prove Aid in Exploiting "Racing Hearts"

Faribault, Minn.—Intensive exploitation, with a couple of brand new angles, was used by the Grand theatre on "Racing Hearts," at a total cost of less than $10.

First, Manager M. J. Glaser and Jack Hellman, Paramount exploiter, tied up with the Buick dealer and the newspaper for an announcement of a stunt similar to the one with which the picture opens. The plan was to send up a balloon with a Buick suspended. Of course, the objection came up that it would endanger lives and they withdrew with the greatest of pleasure. The paper went so far to announce that the "balloon stunt can be watched with safety on the screen of the Grand."

The newspaper announced that the man who bobbed Agnes Ayres hair for the race scene in the picture would be in Faribault to bob and trim girls' hair free of charge. The foyer of the theatre was rigged up into an improvised barber shop and a student barber was secured from Minneapolis.

Singer Appears in Prologue to Aid Showings of "Fury"

ROSEVILLE, N. J.—The Tivoli theatre here is one of the houses in middle-sized towns that have found an effective prologue to "Fury" in a personal appearance of Adolph Milar, screen actor and member of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Milar played the part of Yusk in "Fury." In addition to his screen ability he possesses a rich baritone voice. The combination tell the answer to his desirability as a prologue star.

His act has always been a combination of song and story. He tells something about the ships of the sea, the difficulties encountered in making "Fury" and winds up with a sea chanty. When the scene showing the burial of the father comes on he sings "Nearer My God To Thee."

Any good singer will do; but Milar has conceived the idea, put into practice and shown its value from a showman's standpoint.

Manager Starts Free Auto Parking on "Minnie"

MILWAUKEE, Wis.—A real convenience has been made available to patrons of Saxe's Strand by Manager E. J. Weisfeldt, who inaugurated the system during the run of "Minnie."

Owners of motor cars who wish to attend the performance at the Strand need not worry when they go into the theatre, that on their exit they will find the unwelcome red tag, inviting them to appear the following day before "Judge So-and-So." For Manager Weisfeldt has arranged with the Michael Ert garage, within a very short distance from the theatre, for free parking space during the attendance of the Strand theatre performance.

"Mr. Billings Spends His Dime" Given Good Start

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—Manager A. B. Morrison of the Majestic theatre, in exploiting "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," had 5,000 dime tickets printed, size about four by five and one-half inches, with good sales talk, introducing Walter Hiers as a star. These were distributed all over town for three days in advance. A similar ad was run in the newspaper. A ticket or one of the newspaper coupons and a dime was all that anyone needed to get into the Majestic.

A number of dimes were made out of cardboard, large size, and liberally strung over the marquee. In the center of the lobby was a dime about six feet in diameter, with a cut-out of Walter Hiers in the center of it, together with the title of the picture.

Atmospheric Spanish Prologue for "The Bright Shawl"

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Managing Director Edward L. Hyman devised a prologue in three episodes to get his audiences into the proper mood for "The Bright Shawl."

For this a set Spanish house, with balcony, was used on the presentation stage, with Spanish set row and entrance arch and transparent housetop set piece. This was all backed up by a deep blue plush curtain, and the effect was a Spanish garden in the evening. There were rustic chairs and tables, and an electric lantern hung, lighted, over the entrance arch of the garden. Flowers were twined along the wall and through the lattice of the balcony.

As the curtains were drawn, three Spanish dancers were discovered, going through an introductory dance, while native girls and Spanish officers sat at the tables, drinking. Then one of the officers, a tenor, sang "A Maid of Spain," and this was followed by a Spanish dance by the premiere danseuse of the ballet corps. The number closed with "Lolita," sung by baritone, and the picture was flashed on the screen immediately to connect it more closely with the prologue.

Trees and Stuffed Bears in "Hearts Aflame" Lobby

San Diego, Cal.—A comprehensive exploitation campaign which included an elaborate lobby display and the co-operation of the U. S. Forest Service and the San Diego Museum of Natural History, was put over by Richard A. Addison, publicity director of the Pickwick theatre, on "Hearts Aflame."

The climax of "Hearts Aflame" is a spectacular forest fire. One section of the Pickwick lobby presented a duplicate of some of the forest scenes in the picture before the fire. Actual trees and shrubbery were used before a magnificent backdrop.

Another section represented the great forest swept by roaring flames. Here again actual trees were used, but the beautifully painted backdrop in this case showed the giant trees ablaze, and through the burning forest rushed a locomotive, a replica of the little engine that charged through the heart of the fire in "Hearts Aflame." Real stuffed animals, rabbits, bears, foxes, were placed here and there in the shrubbery to duplicate the scene in the picture where the forest animals flee before the oncoming flames.

Addison was extremely successful in obtaining the co-operation of outside bodies, notably the United States Forest Service and the Wild Life Conservation Department of the San Diego Natural History Museum. The stuffed animals which added so much to the effectiveness of the lobby display were lent by the latter institution.

The Forest Service detailed a ranger to accompany Mr. Addison to the woods to get all the trees necessary for the lobby.

Hidden Horn in Front For "Mighty Lak' a Rose"

CINCINNATI, Ohio. — Extensive publicity for the run of "Mighty Lak' a Rose" at the Strand theatre was obtained through tie-ups with music stores, in which advance advertising heralds were distributed to purchasers of phonograph records, etc.

William A. Clark, in charge of advertising for the theatre, designed an imposing front for the lobby and arranged with a talking machine dealer to establish a hidden amplifying horn attached to a phonograph, which played several of the available records of the song from which the picture took its title. An advance advertising campaign conducted through the theatre, linked the picture with the spirit of "Rose Week" and florists' windows in the city consequently blossomed with roses in celebration of the unofficial but attractive event.

Tin Telescope Used in Stunt on "Glimpses of the Moon"

Atlanta, Ga.—Enlisting the services of a tin shop and the Atlanta distributor for Indiana trucks, Howard Price Kingsmore, manager of the Howard theatre, and Oscar A. Kantner, Paramount exploiter, put across an elaborate street ballyhoo for "Glimpses of the Moon."

The tinmer made a fifteen-foot telescope, bronzed and mounted on a tripod, which was placed on a flat platform body of an Indiana truck. The truck was driven in the streets of Atlanta during the daytime and at night was placed on prominent street corners. Larger banners were placed on the sides of the truck reading as follows:

"Tonight, free 'Glimpses of the Moon.' See through this monster telescope."

The banner displaying ad for truck read: "Astronomy is more or less a mystery. Indiana truck performance and reliability are a fact."

Permission was secured from the police department to park the display on the streets at night, and this was done with the "monster telescope" pointing directly on the large Howard theatre sign, which read, "The 'Glimpses of the Moon' with Bebe Daniels and Nita Naldi."

The stunt created a great deal of mouth-to-mouth advertising and hundreds of people ascended the truck platform and looked upon "The Glimpses of the Moon" and the Howard theatre illuminated sign.

Exhibitor Starts Family Night as Permanent Feature

Anniston, Ala.—Manager Roy L. Smart, of the Noble theatre, is a great believer in new stunts, his latest for Anniston being Family Night.

Several weeks in advance he designated Monday night, March 19, as his opening Family Night. This is to be a permanent institution, so he worked hard to get it well established on the opening night.

His campaign was as follows: House slides were used from the first, telling of the idea and listing the Family Night pictures. The Noblette, his house organ, featured the idea for several weeks. One of his best stunts was to tie up with the Anniston Star and let them give the first night. This is how it was done: The Star published a coupon which was good for one admission on the opening night, this coupon ran for a week before opening, during this time the Star gave the Noble much good publicity, including some front page stories. The Family Night idea and program were included in all of the regular ads for the Noble.

Scores of families attended the opening night. Information cards were handed out by the Noble for the people to express their opinions upon. Many signed up their approval.

On Friday before the second performance on Monday a letter was sent to all who attended the first program, thanking them for their co-operation and endorsing the coming picture. This letter also outlined the coming programs, and reviewed the idea of Family Night, stating the advantages that it offered.

The whole idea is sponsored by the Better Films Committee and it is co-operating in every way.

Pleasing "White Flower" display, with use of many white blossoms and one large imitation flower, prepared by Manager E. B. Roberts of the Majestic theatre, Austin, Texas

Operatic Tabloid Presented on "Mighty Lak' a Rose"

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Patrons of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre have shown a great fondness for operatic tabloids well done, and Managing Director Edward L. Hyman gave them an especially good one in conjunction with the showing of "The Miracle Woman" (the title under which "Mighty Lak' a Rose" was played).

Programmed as an operatic potpourri, this number opened with the contralto solo, "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Delilah," sung by Florence Mulholland, after brief orchestral prelude by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra. Following was the ballet from "Thais" by members of the ballet corps, and then an aria from "Ernani," sung by Wilfred Glenn, basso. To close the overture the prison scene from "Faust" was presented with Edna Burbans, soprano; Wilfred Glenn, basso, and Frederick Jagel, tenor.

The opening number was in mountain setting and set rocks, with two deep blue box lamps behind the rocks to throw on the mountain drop. The singer was lighted from the side by light blue and orange. From the booth a Mestrum deep blue flood covered the stage; magenta X-rays on full, green foots small stage and blue foots large stage; one entrance spot blue and one orange; one transparent window light green and one light pink; blue coves; Kliegl flood on orchestra, deep blue.

The ballet was backgrounded by combination cyclorama of dark blue and silver cloth, with lighting on the silver cloth only.

Eye-catching "Jazzmania" front by Arthur Swanke, advertising and exploitation manager of the Rialto, El Dorado, Ark.

"Oliver Twist" Roll Used with Tampa Showing

TAMPA, FLA.—Manager R. C. Frost of the Strand theatre utilized the "Oliver Twist" roll as a hook-up on the picture to good effect.

Six thousand of these rolls were given away in the lobby of the theatre by representatives from the bakery. They were wrapped in parafin sacks supplied by Frost.

The co-operative advertising page was given a new angle in that Frost gave each of the merchants contributing to the page 25 passes for the opening matinee to be given out to customers. These 200 passes represented real word of mouth advertising, built good will among the merchants and established further relations along co-operative lines.

Star Identification Contest Is Given Essay Angle

Lincoln, Ill.—Excellent publicity was obtained by the Lincoln theatre, working in conjunction with the Lincoln Evening Courier, through the medium of a star identification contest.

The Lincoln theatre being a First National house, the First National stars were featured exclusively. More than 2,000 replies were recorded and the theatre gained a column of publicity space for each of the seven days that the battle was on.

The interesting angle of the stunt was that each contestant was asked to submit a 500-word essay as to why he believed his choice was right. Cuts of the stars were used, each one being partly hidden by a mask to conceal the identity. By asking the candidates to give their reason it made the mention of specific attractions almost imperative as the writers had to state that they saw the star in such and such a picture.

Popularity Contest Put Over on "Only a Shopgirl"

Chicago, Ill.—Several Shopgirl Popularity contests have been held as exploitation for "Only a Shopgirl," but the newest is that being put over by Greiver Productions of this city, who have tied up with the Chicago Evening Journal in connection with the coming showing of "Only a Shopgirl" at the Orpheum theatre in Chicago.

This is given a new twist however, in that the C. B. C. people themselves are backing it up and co-operating, and have promised that the girl who is selected as the most beautiful working girl in Chicago shall be sent to California for a four weeks' trial, and her own and a chaperon's fare shall be paid to and from the Coast, together with all other expenses. The successful contestant will be given a chance to make good in motion pictures, by getting a start in the next C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation feature "Pal O' Mine."

The Journal has been giving the contest—and "Only a Shopgirl"—half and full page publicity every day for two weeks on this tie-up. Before leaving for the Coast, the contestant will act as Queen of the Mardi Gras night at the Motion Picture Palace of Progress in Chicago on May 26th, it is announced.

"Haunted Valley" Has Thrilling Start

New Patheserial Starring Ruth Roland Tale of Big Business Staged Among Rugged Desert Backgrounds

Pathé's "Haunted Valley," a serial in fifteen episodes, is a regular picture. There are no two ways about that, it one may judge from the first three chapters. As Edgar O. Brooks, serial sales manager, stated in a short and impromptu talk after the trade showing, the company has aimed to make a production that would have interest for adults as well as children. Certainly it has succeeded. The seven reels shown—three in the first episode—carry an interest, a bite, paralleling that of a first-class melodrama.

The subject is finely photographed and effectively staged among rugged backgrounds of desert and hill. The action is convincing—in other words, there is an absence of the exaggerated, of action ordinarily impossible of execution. As the latter, we may expect the automobile wreck, but the kick is given even though we are sure it is a dummy that pulls down the hill with the overturned machine.

"Haunted Valley"

Thrilling Action, Interesting Story and Capable Performance in Pathe Serial Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Everything that makes for the successful thriller is included in Pathe's new serial, "Haunted Valley." The first three episodes show not only an abundance of exciting action but the progress of an unusually interesting story.

Ruth Roland, as the head and brains of a construction company in the West, has a course of intelligent action which she follows most capably. Her performance is always attractive because of this alert mental and physical quality. Jack Daugherty is likable and forceful in the leading masculine role and Larry Steers is good as the gentleman villain.

The conflict is more one of brains than muscle. There is no lack of physical action but it is more the result of carefully laid plans than impulsive demonstrations just for the sake of thrills. The laying of the plot is in itself highly entertaining. It involves the possession of a valley with hidden wealth, which appears to be haunted because of ingenious electrical devices with which the heroine's enemies try to terrify her. There is considerable novelty in the material which is worked out in detail. Panoramic shots at the beginning reveal beautiful exteriors as the seat of action.

"Bound to the Enemy," the first episode, gives the serial a splendid start. It ends with an effective bit of suspense with Ruth Roland facing a revolver which has just killed one of her aids.

The second, "The Adventure in the Valley," solves the mystery of the valley, revealing a stream of water underneath which by irrigation will make the property valuable as farm land. In the final scene, the heroine and Craig, an engineer who has befriended her, fall into the rushing waters underground.

Third, "Imperilled at Sea," shows the girl being deceived into boarding a foreign-bound vessel in the hopes of visiting a power house belonging to her firm. She is saved by grabbing hold of the rope-ladder on the hydro plane in which Craig has followed.

"Haunted Valley"—Ruth Roland Serials, Inc.—Pathe

Type of production.....15 episode serial

There are thrills aplenty in Ruth Roland's latest serial, "Haunted Valley," and the story while not plausible at all times has been built with the idea of keeping the audience keenly interested always, and giving them a thrill every little while. Of the three episodes that were reviewed, each one built up to a very exciting climax, and ended with a thrill: the first episode ending with a mystery-murder, the second with the hero and heroine falling into an underground whirlpool; and the third with the girl climbing from a speeding motor boat to an airplane overhead by means of a rope ladder.

The locale of the story is in the West, and the girl is the president of a company of construction engineers. There is the usual intrigue and counter-plot incident to all serials, but the interest in this one is really sustained and serial lovers will be well pleased with the results.

There is a large supporting cast which includes many names well-known to serial fans, among them being Jack Daugherty as the hero, Larry Steers, Eulalie Jensen, William Ryno, Francis Ford and Edouard Trebeal. George Marshall has directed from the story and scenario by Frank Leon Smith.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

"Haunted Valley"
(Fifteen Episode Serial—Pathe)
RUTH ROLAND, whose serial escapades in the past have thrilled wherever they have been shown, seems to outdo herself in the matter of daring in the first three reels of the material are an indication of what might be expected to follow. Truly Ruth Roland is a marvel for daring and never has more swift action been crowded into one of her past series of exploits.

"Haunted Valley" simply teems with excitement. It is a gigantic western and along with the swift action, abounds in the usual amount of romance seen in a Western. Just how the star manages to really escape with a whole skin from some of the daring stunts she accomplishes is hard to imagine. The predominant characteristics of this serial, mystery, intrigue and suspense, as usual are the story of business—of a gigantic engineering project with Ruth Roland as its dominating spirit. The project is about to go to smash because of the villainy of a presumed friend. From him Ruth Ranger (Ruth Roland) borrows one million dollars, for which she gives as security Haunted Valley, which she seems entirely inadequate. Along with this security goes her promise to wed unless she meets her obligation at the time specified. Every obstacle, of course, is placed in her way to prevent payment of the loan.

It's a massive melodrama of the New West, where Big Business is reclaiming the desert; where frontier days rub shoulders with the present. Each episode has its thrills and its climaxes. It's a fifteen week goldmine.

Regional News From Correspondents

Around Seattle's Photoplay Trade Circles

FOR the first time in the history of Seattle, a motion picture theatre man has become an executive in the Chamber of Commerce organization. Mr. R. W. Case, manager of

R. W. Case

Columbia theatre, is the showman to receive this honor. He was recently made one of the executives on the Chamber's general membership committee, and as a result was called upon last week to act as chairman at a regular weekly session of the chamber. In addition, Mr. Case is also a member of the tourist committee and is chairman of the theatre committee, which includes the publicity side of the organization. The Seattle Chamber has more than 3,000 members.

Since coming to Seattle to manage the Columbia in July, 1922, Mr. Case has also become affiliated with the Seattle Ad club, the Seattle Press club, the Kiwanis club and other similar organizations, and is also an authorized deputy sheriff in the state of Washington.

"University of Washington Week" was celebrated at the Strand theatre recently by Manager H. B. Wright during the week's engagement of "All the Brothers Were Valiant." In addition to his regular picture program, Mr. Wright showed a special two-reel subject, "Campus Days," which was made for the Jensen-VonHerberg organization by Frank Jacobs, Seattle photographer, who makes the Liberty News each week.

The picture showed classwork and activities going on at the University, and gave an intimate glimpse into college life "as is." The Varsity Quartet was another added feature on the program, rendering three specially arranged musical selections at each performance. The bill was widely advertised in college circles and brought a large turnout from the University, as the students and faculty members were anxious to "see themselves as others see them."

C. C. Pettijohn, assistant to Will Hays, was expected to be in Seattle about the first week in May and plans were being made in the city for his reception by exhibitors and exchange men. The purpose of his visit was not known except for the fact that he is on a partial tour of the United States in an attempt to organize and strengthen Film Boards of Trade and similar organizations, and to promote closer cooperation between all phases of the motion picture industry.

Alan MacKenzie, a motion picture man representing several California producing companies who will soon release photoplays under the title of "Bonded Pictures," was a recent visitor in this city. While here he announced a plan evolved by the new company whereby pictures, instead of remaining on the market for two or three years, will be returned to the producers and will be distributed to prisons and charitable institutions.

"More prints in each territory will make it possible for smaller towns to book pictures within a week or two of their premier showings in the larger cities," Mr. MacKenzie said. "This is not philanthropy. We believe it to be good business. It will mean more efficiency in the producing and distributing line, and will work to the financial advantage of both exhibitors and exchanges, once they get used to it."

All house records for attendance at the Columbia theatre were smashed on the opening Saturday of "Hunting Big Game in Africa" when a total of 5,331 paid admissions were registered. The house seats approximately 1,060 persons, and ran the picture on a six-shows-a-day schedule. Despite the fact that another African hunt feature ran in opposition to "Hunting Big Game" and notwithstanding the fact that the Columbia prices were raised to thirty-five cents and fifty cents for the attraction, the run was one of the most successful of the present season at Manager R. W. Case's house, and the Universal feature was held over for a second week practically by popular demand.

Several changes in the staff of the Fox Film Corporation's exchanges in this territory were announced recently by Guy F. Navarre, manager of the local branch. J. W. Linn, formerly assistant manager at the Seattle office and head salesman out of Seattle in the Oregon territory has been transferred to the Butte exchange as branch manager. He succeeds J. J. Sullivan, who has been promoted from the Butte management into a higher position with the Fox company.

George Ekre will replace Mr. Linn as salesman in the Oregon territory. He was formerly connected with the Butte exchange as salesman in that territory. Jack Cohen has been assigned by Mr. Navarre as assistant manager of the Seattle office. More than 250 circular letters were sent out the end of April from the local exchange advertising Fox's latest short reel, "The Land of Tutankhamen," and within three days thirty-three contracts on the picture had been received from exhibitors of the territory who were anxious to book and show the subject.

J. A. Gage, manager of the local Educational exchange, returned to Seattle recently after a trip around the territory that lasted for about two weeks. During his tour Mr. Gage visited all key cities on Washington, Oregon and Montana and reported heavy bookings on all of Educational's short subjects, especially in the farming country where the prosperous season is just beginning. Practically fifty per cent of all Seattle's first run theatres use at least one Educational reel on every bill, according to figures recently compiled at the exchange.

A new policy was begun by Mr. Hamrick during his visit in Portland. The theatre now plays two bills a week, at admission prices of fifteen cents in the afternoon and twenty-five cents at night. "The Man From Glengarry" and "The Headless Horseman" were the two pictures selected by Mr. Hamrick to start off the theatre under the new plan.

Hal Daigler, manager of the Blue Mouse theatre since the early part of January, has severed his connections with the John Hamrick organization and is no longer in charge of the house here. In connection with the resignation of Mr. Daigler and L. O. Lukan, former general manager of the Blue Mouse circuit, Mr. Hamrick has again taken up his offices in the theatre and will personally manage the Seattle house.

Hal Daigler

Mr. Hamrick and Vic Gauntlett, publicity and advertising manager of the circuit recently returned from Portland, where a general reorganization of the Blue Mouse theatre there was effected. Al Raleigh, formerly manager of the Oregon house, is no longer connected with the organization. Pending the selection of a new manager, the assistant manager in Portland is in direct charge of the theatre.

Briefs from Florida Territory

J. T. Bandy has purchased the chain of houses which have been operated by L. R. Galbreath in Center Hill, Webster and Bushnell. The houses have all been known as the Thelena theatres, and Mr. Bandy says that he will not make any change in the name, for the present, at least, but will make quite a few changes in the equipment and do some remodeling.

John B. Carroll, manager of the Victory, and R. C. (Jack) Frost, manager of the Strand and Grand theatres, Tampa, have returned from a trip to Atlanta, where they filled up their books for the summer season. Both managers landed a fine string of attractions.

The report comes from Arcadia that E. J. Sparks has bought the two motion picture theatres in that city. The Star has been closed temporarily and will be remodeled. New seats will be installed, as well as two big typhoon fans. The houses will be operated by the Sparks Enterprises, who also operate houses in Jacksonville, Orlando, St. Petersburg, Lakeland and other Florida cities.

The Ivanhoe Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar, in conjunction with the Egypt Temple Shriners, brought the well-known photoplay, "The Life of Christ," to the Tampa Bay Casino, Tampa, for two performances last week.

Providence, R. I., Trade Briefs

Juanita Hansen, the motion picture star, appeared at the Empire theatre, a burlesque house, May 9, 10, 11 and 12, making a personal appearance against the evils of the drug habit.

The new Leroy theatre in Pawtucket had a phenomenal opening. Two pictures were shown the entire week and standing room was at a premium every night. Beginning May 7 the programs will be changed twice a week.

Prof. Charles Posser has resigned from the Wurlitzer Organ Company, for which he has been a demonstrator, to be organist at the new Leroy theatre in Pawtucket.

Several of the theatres in this city are following the lead of the Emery Majestic theatre in the matter of placing signs. The Majestic recently put up two large signs that could be read the entire length of two streets, Washington and Empire.

Buffalo Briefs and Western New York Notes

LLOYD WILLIS, representing Will Hays, was in Buffalo on Friday, May 4, to address a meeting of the exchange managers. It is expected that the local film club will be re-organized at once as a result of the talk by Mr. Willis.

Following several weeks of very unsatisfactory box office receipts, the Criterion has closed. The house had been operated by Walter Hays and Moe Mark of the Strand interests, but neither first nor second-run attractions seemed to get the business. It is understood that Messrs. Mark and Hays will erect a big business block on the site of the house. Mr. Mark was in town on this project the first part of this week. Lionel Edel, brother of the late Harold Edel, former manager of the New York Strand, has not as yet made a new connection. He had been managing the Criterion. The Criterion is almost opposite the mammoth new Statler Hotel. This section some day very soon is going to be the classiest in town. A theatre ought to be included in the business block, say many folks.

Eddie Hays, manager of the First National exchange, took a trip to New York partly for pleasure and partly for business, but it seems that he devoted much time to the latter, for it is announced that while in the big city Eddie cornered M. Shea and persuaded him to sign up for a dozen or so of First National's super features for showing at Shea's Hippodrome.

Bruce Fowler, one of the most popular exhibitors that ever operated in Buffalo and who left town six months ago to take over the management of the Indiana theatre in Terre Haute, is now managing director of the Palace, Crystal Queens and Red Mill theatres in Dallas, Texas. Mr. Fowler has received his new appointment from Harold B. Franklin, head of the Paramount theatre department.

Until a new manager is appointed to succeed M. Cohen, resigned, H. A. Seed, special representative, will be in charge of the Buffalo Warner Brothers' exchange. He will be assisted by Norman Speer and Miss Evans, who have been with the exchange since its opening, serving under the three managers the office has had in that time. There is a rumor current that Harry E. Lotz, former manager of Realart and Select, may get the job. Mr. Lotz was in New York last week. He had an invitation in his pocket to drop in for a talk with Morris Kohn, his old Realart boss. Kohn is now interested in the W. B. New York and Buffalo exchanges.

The Paramount office looked deserted this week. Manager Moritz and his "gang" were in New York for the big sales conference in the Hotel Pennsylvania. Malcolm Williams has resigned from the F. P.-L. sales staff.

George E. Williams may get a job as manager of one of the string of Paramount theatres. The manager of the Linden went to New York this week in response to a wire from Harold B. Franklin, head of the Paramount theatre department.

This is the way the program reads at the big surprise birthday party given in honor of Paramount Branch Manager Allan S. Moritz at Brown's Hotel, Tonawanda, N. Y. It was one of the biggest affairs ever held in Buffalo exchange circles. Mrs. Moritz aided in surprising hubby by inveigling him to have dinner with some friends. When Moritz was ushered into the dining room and found the entire personnel of his office in possession, he was knocked cold. It was announced at the dinner that the 31st Annual Moritz Week had gone over the top 100 per cent. In the photo herewith are: Allan S. Moritz, Mrs. Moritz, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Royster, E. M. Kempner, F. Ray Powers, the happy looking guy at this end of the table; Earl L. Brink, Clayton Pfeiffer, Bobby Williams, P. B. Elliott, F. J. A. McCarthy, M. Rose, Malcolm Williams, J. Rothman, Elinor Britz, Gladys Robinson, Adeline Weber, Margaret Arnold, Stella Ludwig, Fanny Buxbaum, Alice Bauer, Emma Bangasser, Agnes Tubridy, Mae Mack, Burton Henning, James Curtin, Bridget Henlock, Lillian Nicholas, Ethel Sterling, Lillian Holmes, Carol Crawford, Lillian Grant, Marie Bachman, Fanny Butler, Louise Wohler and Ed Balser.

The Einstein Theory of Relativity film, accompanied by the Williamson Brothers' undersea picture, "Wonders of the Sea," will be shown in the Majestic theatre the week of May 14, under the auspices of the Rev. Father M. J. Ahern, president of Canisius College. Father Ahern controls the Einstein film for New York State, north of Westchester County.

We present this week an exclusive portrait-photo of the debonair G. W. Carrick, manager of the Buffalo Hodgkinson exchange, who, in spite of his short time in the city in his managerial capacity, has got the long end on business and has put over his chef d'oeuvre by booking "Down to the Sea in Ships" at the big Eastman theatre in Rochester and Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo for indefinite runs. No wonder "Gus" feels light on his feet these days! Mr. Carrick is one of the pioneers of the film business, having had important positions with a number of the leading companies. He is one of the best looking men on Film Row. He has a weakness for visits to Rochester. Dry agents should look into this. He knows all the new stories because he is a close friend of Bill Mack. "Do you get the drift?" is his favorite expression, with "Now the low down on that is" as a close second. We nominate the Hon. "Gus" for the Film Hall of Fame.

Harry Bernstein, manager of the Universal exchange, announces the appointment of Nate Marcus, formerly with Warner Brothers, as Albany salesman for "U." Charlie Goodwin, salesman, underwent an operation in the Homeopathic hospital Friday, May 4.

Fred Gerber, who is interested with Mr. Stowell in the Liberty theatre, Corning, N. Y., is seriously ill. The Liberty has terminated its booking arrangement with Associated Theatres, Inc., of Rochester.

N. I. Filkins, manager of the Merit exchange, was in Utica last week helping to boost "The Streets of New York," which was being shown at one of the theatres there. "Filk" announces the resignation of Howard Riehl of the Merit sales force.

Musical comedy has replaced pictures and vaudeville at the new Palace theatre in Jamestown, N. Y., operated by Peterson & Woods. It is understood that the change in policy is for the summer months only.

Fred M. Zimmerman has returned from New York City, where he was in conference with "Pat" Powers relative to the taking over of the management of the Buffalo F. B. O. office on Monday, May 14. Earl Kramer, present manager, leaves for Gotham this week to assume an executive position at the home office.

Excavators are at work in Batavia, N. Y., on the new Community theatre, which is being erected by local business men in East Main street on the old Holden property, east of the Masonic Temple.

Saint Mary's, Pa., will not be without a theatre long. A new house is to be built at once to replace the opera house which was burned.

Trade Jottings from Central Pennsylvania

THOUGH some cities of Pennsylvania, regardless of the passage by both branches of the Legislature of the bill prohibiting local legislation establishing daylight saving time, have decided to adopt daylight saving without such legal sanction, Harrisburg, the capital city, and most of the other moderate sized cities of the state, as well as practically all of the rural communities, will continue on standard time. In Harrisburg about the only class of people who have gone on daylight saving time are Philadelphia & Reading Railway employees, due to the fact that that road has put trains on daylight time so as to conform with the practice in some states adjoining Pennsylvania. This, however, will not affect the time of the Harrisburg theatres, which are strongly opposed to daylight time.

Edward H. Crawford, who has been business manager of the new Troy, since it was opened, and who was formerly manager of the Lincoln, in the same city, will return to New York within the next week or ten days, severing his connection with the Troy next Saturday night. It is understood that Herman Vineburg, house treasurer, will combine his duties with those performed by Mr. Crawford.

Exchange and Exhibitor Items from St. Louis

ST. LOUIS is overwhelmingly against Daylight Saving, and if the Board of Aldermen's committee on legislation uses good judgment they will file Alderman Samuel Wimer's measure providing for the clock change, is the opinion of some observers.

The St. Louis Times, an afternoon newspaper, conducted a poll to ascertain public feeling on the question. More than twice as many voted against the plan as favored it although proponents of the measure, including automobile interests, had all their friends send in votes for the plan. The ratio was 2,290 against and 1,130 for the change.

It is probable that the committee will hold several public hearings on the bill. It goes without saying that those who will benefit financially by the change will attempt to pack these gatherings and give the impression that the people of St. Louis want their pet scheme.

But the votes sent into the Times show how the people stand. If a referendum election was held Daylight Saving would lose by upwards of 75,000 votes, depending on the number who voted. There are 257,000 registered voters in St. Louis.

Herschel Stuart of the Missouri theatre has hooked-up with the St. Louis Times on an old fiddlers' contest to be staged at the theatre on May 14. The winner will be declared the champion of St. Louis and represent the city at a state-wide contest to be staged at Paris, Mo., in June.

Edward D. Smith has resigned as manager of the American theatre, St. Louis, and has been succeeded by Paul Beisman. The American is controlled by the Shubert interests. Smith intends to devote his time to business interests in Hollywood and Los Angeles.

The Commercial Film studios have moved from 2030 Olive street to 4373 Finney avenue. They have installed new lighting equipment and laboratory facilities.

Motion pictures of the dedication of the Theodore Roosevelt High School made by the General Film Manufacturing Company, 6800 Delmar boulevard, on April 22, have been presented to the Quentin Roosevelt Post, American Legion, by Romaine Fielding, president and director general of the General Film.

Visitors to St. Louis during the week included: J. W. Schuckert, Opera House, Chester, Ill.; S. E. Pertle, Jerseyville, Ill.; Jania Koliopoulous, Grand theatre, Alton, Ill.; J. Bernstein, Quincy, Ill., who motored in his new Cadillac sportcar; Lawrence Watkins and wife, Strand, Petersburg, Ill.; Bob Cluster, Johnston City, Ill.; and Blaine Cook of Beatrice, Nebr., who stopped off on his way to New Orleans.

The St. Louis Exhibitors' League has endorsed Edward Sullivan, manager of the Orpheum Theatre for appointment to the St. Louis Board of Police Commissioners. Governor Hyde has Sullivan under consideration.

A lighted cigarette stub tossed on the floor of the second balcony of the Gayety theatre by a spectator at the conclusion of the last performance of May 1 caused a fire early the next day. A night watchman discovered the blaze before it gained much headway. The damage was estimated at $1,000. The Gayety plays burlesque.

Skouras Brothers have perfected arrangements for the presentation during the Summer months of two notable attractions, the Lee Kids and Isham Jones' Orchestra. They will appear at the Grand Central theatre. The dates will be announced later.

News and Notes of Detroit's Film Circles

AT the May meeting of the local M. P. T. O. one of the subjects which came up for discussion was the suppression of the traveling carnival shows. The Detroit exhibitors decided to endeavor to induce the City Council to pass an ordinance forbidding such shows in the city. They are not considered desirable entertainment and are hurtful to the business of the neighborhood houses. A good show can be seen for a small sum in these theatres, while a comparatively substantial sum is frittered away at these carnivals, while the patron has nothing of value to show for his expenditure.

Small-town exhibitors can take a tip from Manager Eberhard of the Baldwin theatre, Royal Oak, when it comes to dignified exploitation. Eberhard intends to show "Adam's Rib" for a few days. He arranged with the editor of the Royal Oak Tribune, a weekly paper, to print a rotogravure section for issue preceding the filming showing stills of the production. The four-sheet section would do credit to a metropolitan Sunday issue in layout and clearness of print.

Detroit film patrons had plenty of opportunity to judge the respective merits of the two animal pictures now on the market, as Metro's "Trailing African Wild Animals" at the Madison and Universal's "Hunting Big Game In Africa" at the Broadway-Strand played simultaneously this week. Metro's picture was previously shown at the Miles and Regent, vaudeville and picture houses.

Dave Palfreyman, assistant manager of Associated First National, left Monday for division headquarters, Cleveland, Ohio, where he will be assigned as branch manager to an exchange.

Comedies, Short Subjects & Serials

Pathe to Make Serial of Pioneer Days

PATHE'S purchase of picture rights in the novel, "The Way of a Man," by Emerson Hough, turns out to have been the first step in production plans which mark a distinct departure from the path of any Pathe serial heretofore produced.

The production, it is said, will be in ten episodes and made under the supervision of George B. Seitz, who will film many scenes on historical locations along the old "Overland trail" traced by the covered wagon trains of '49 and later dates.

Mr. Seitz left New York on Monday of last week for the Pacific Coast, where most of the actual work of production will be concentrated. His immediate objective is Arizona, where important scenes in "The Way of a Man" are laid; in order to thoroughly familiarize himself with locations, pioneer and Indian character types which are to figure in the serial.

Booklet Is Issued on "Wilderness Tales"

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has just issued an eight-page booklet, printed in sepia on heavy art stock, on the second series of Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce.

This brochure, which shows some of the most beautiful pictures taken by Mr. Bruce on his tour of the Pacific Northwest last summer, is intended as a handsome art souvenir for the exhibitor.

Most of the space on the eight pages is given over to pictures from the six subjects already produced by Mr. Bruce for the current series of Wilderness Tales. The six pictures dealt with in this booklet are "By Lantern Light," "Moonblind," "Jenkins and the Mutt," "From the Windows of My House," "Mixed Trails" and "The Gray Rider." Four more pictures are now in production, Mr. Bruce having recently finished the scenarios and started camera work on the Coast.

The Bruce booklets are now being distributed to exhibitors through the Educational branch exchanges.

Suicide Methods Painlessly Demonstrated

Charlie Murray has the uncanny experience of trying to commit suicide in one of his latest rib-tickling All-Star Comedies. Charlie tries just about every way ever heard of to destroy himself, but without much success. Even an attempt at drowning is frustrated by a swordfish.

Christie Enlarges Stock Company

Plan to Have Featured Players in Every Fourth or Fifth Production

WITH the signing of Jimmie Adams, Babe London, and others under exclusive contracts for Christie Comedies, the two-reel organization has made a line-up of comedy stars by which five or six different "names" will appear alternately in featured positions in the new releases. Pictures have been arranged, owing to the great enlargement of the number of featured players, so that the same people will appear only in about every fourth or fifth picture.

This gives a greater variety than ever before to the personnel appearing in the current releases. For instance the current line-up as follows illustrates the possibilities of different casts:

"A Hula Honeymoon" which is now finishing up most of its first-runs, features Henry Murdock and Babe London. Next comes "Babies Welcome" featuring Dorothy Devore, supported by Anna May Wong and George Stewart.

The next release is Neal Burns in "Hot Water" supported by Duane Thompson, one of the new leading women. After that is Jimmie Adams in "Green As Grass" supported by Charlotte Merriam, Earl Rodney and William Irving.

Bobby Vernon is in "Take Your Choice" supported by five leading women; Duane Thompson, Natalie Joyce, Margaret Cloud, Charlotte Stevens and Gladys Baxter.

Dorothy Devore is in "Winter Has Come" supported by Earl Rodney, Wm. Irving, Babe London, Wm. Chapman, Lydia Yeaman Titus, Bob North, Victor Rodman, and George French. Following "Winter Has Come" will be another of Christie's outstanding novelties, the first blackface comedy, "Roll Along."

Pathe's Releases for May 20th

"Black Shadows," Five-Reel Jungle Picture, Heads Current Schedule

PATHE'S program of 10 releases for May 20 contains "Black Shadows," the feature of the South Seas in which a realistic cannibal "head hunt" is staged, which is presented by World Tours, Inc., was obtained by the Salisbury Expedition. Aboard the "Wisdom II" Edward G. Salisbury and his staff of explorers heading from San Francisco toward the South Pacific made a "journey backward along the worn trail of time to the land of jungle savagery."

At the Solomon Islands they found that the last vestige of any sort of civilization had disappeared. Here, accepting the doubtful hospitality of Chief Gau, mightiest of all the ruling "head-hunters," they filmed their screen epic of the most savage and superstitious race of human beings remaining on the face of the earth.

In this program Ruth Roland's serial, "Haunted Valley," reaches its third thrilling episode called "Imperilled at Sea." Finding herself the victim of a conspiracy on board the ship, the heroine boldly leaps from the deck into the ocean, trusting to chance and a motor boat seen approaching from the distance.

An important item on this program is the first of Hal Roach's new series of 1-reel comedies acted entirely by animals and called "Dippy Doo Dads." This example—which had an auspicious pre-release premiere at the Strand theatre, New York—is entitled, "Don't Flirt." It deals with the barnyard gallantries of Mr. Gander. But

Mrs. Goose, assisted by other sympathizing animals, pursues him through many comic scenes and teaches him the lesson he stands sadly in need of.

"The Crystal Ascension," a Kiser Artfilm, picturing the experiences of a group of tourists ascending to the summit of Mount Hood amid wonderful scenes of snow and clouds and chasms, is presented in the Oregon Trail Series.

Pathe Review No. 20, besides its usual charming studies of nature—in which American Pathecolor figures—interests men and women alike with a beauty parlor novelty called "Fussing Up." All the mysterious details which enter into making plain faces appear enchanting are graphically pictured.

Screen Snapshots No. 26 pictures informally a succession of screen favorites including Ruth Roland, Douglas Fairbanks, Cartoonist Paul Terry working on an Aesop's Fable, Grace Darmond and Nell Shipman.

Topics of the Day No. 20 presents some hearty laughs and Pathe News Nos. 42 and 43 visualize important world events—not forgetting baseball.

Beaudine Is Finishing New Cartoon Comedy

Earl Hurd is putting the finishing touches on his next Bobby Bumps cartoon comedy, "Their Love Grew Gold," presented by C. C. Burr and released through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

Arrow Signs New Series Starring Eddie Lyons

DUE to the success of the series of twelve Eddie Lyons comedies released during the past year by the Arrow Film Corporation, W. E. Shallenberger announces that they have contracted for a new series to be made by and starring Mr. Lyons. This series will be known as the Lyons Comedy Specials.

The first of this new series, "For the Love of Tut," has already been completed, and Arrow officials are enthusiastic over it. As the title implies, it deals with a timely subject and concerns the adventures of Eddie who is in love with the daughter of a collector of mummies. In order to be near her he has himself disguised as a mummy and transported to her home. The resulting complications can well be imagined. This comedy is scheduled for early release.

"Our Gang" Comedy Is Featured in Review

The Chicago Daily News of April 25th, awards feature honors to an "Our Gang" comedy appearing on the program of the McVicker's Theatre. The review after referring to the feature production on the program continues:

"You may enjoy it, but you certainly will have a great time with the 'Gang' of youngsters in the comedy circus. The merry-go-round run by dog power; the moving pictures in which the 'kids' appear as favorite movie actors; the performing pony—all are true to juvenile life. And the menagerie! Nothing, absolutely nothing, could be funnier than the array of domestic animals and barnyard fowl made over into 'very wild animals.' Paint did it in some cases, and again it took a pair of artificial horns, or a stuffed stocking, or something else to give the necessary physical appearance.

"It is worth your time and your money just to sit in with these youngsters at play."

"Fun from the Press" on Broadway

Announcement is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that the Literary Digest's "Fun From the Press," the single reel of laugh makers distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been contracted to appear on Broadway, New York, at either of the Rivoli or Rialto theatres. This one reel subject will appear at one or the other of these theatres for some time to come, it is stated.

"Third Leather Pushers" Announced

FINAL plans for the release of "The Third Leather Pushers," and the next installment of the H. C. Witwer prize fight stories are called, have been made by Universal. It has been decided to release the "Third Leather Pushers" in a series of six, like the other two; and each picture will, like the others, be in two reels. Whereas the first two series followed by some time their appearance in Collier's, the third Leather Pushers will be released almost concurrently with their publication, it is stated. The first of these new Witwer stories is to appear in Collier's on June 9th; therefore, the first Universal release of the third series will be on May 28th.

The title of this first picture will be "The Wandering Two," and details the reason devised by Witwer for bringing Kid Roberts again into the pugilistic arena.

As in the previous releases, Reginald Denny appears in the starring role; Hayden Stevenson is cast as the chief supporting player; and Harry Pollard is the director.

Baby Peggy Contests a Success

Resemblance Competition Tied Up with Newspapers Widely Employed

THE Baby Peggy contests, conducted by the theatre managers with the aid of the local newspapers, is meeting with success. Thousands of mothers all over the country have had the opportunity of comparing their little girls with clever little 4-year-old Peggy.

The latest manager to avail himself of this idea is Will D. Harris of the Olympia theatre, New Haven. Manager Harris, who was running "The Kid Reporter" at his theatre, enlisted the help of the New Haven Times-Leader. A large advertisement appeared in the center of the page announcing the contest and that the Times-Leader would pay $100 in prizes for the child who most resembled Baby Peggy. All around this central ad, there were many others of the leading New Haven stores "tied up" to the Baby Peggy idea. For instance, a candy shop had the line, "After seeing Baby Peggy at the Olympia, stop at Meyer's Candy Shop." Another good slogan was "Quality baby carriages for New Haven's Baby Peggy's." A dairy asked, "Have you a Baby Peggy in Your Home? There's a reason; probably she has been raised on Brock's pure milk."

The New Haven children contestants had to be under 7 years old, and in addition to sending their photographs to The Times and having them printed, they were invited to the theatre at 10 o'clock Saturday morning where a reception was held for them and their parents, and the prizes were distributed. As an additional inducement to see the picture, The Times asked the parents to dress their little girls if possible in one of the costumes worn by Peggy in "The Kid Reporter."

So great was the reply to the advertisement and the editorials in the paper that the editor had to warn parents that the contest was only open to little girls. The theatre beat all its previous records of attendance.

Earl Hurd Comedy Is Shown on Broadway

Earl Hurd's latest animated comedy, produced by C. C. Burr, "The Movie Dare-Devil," played the New York Strand last week. Much favorable comment was tendered the single reeler, it is declared.

Educational's Release Schedule for June

HEADING Educational's June program of releases is the Christie comedy, "Plumb Crazy." This is a light farce of the type which has made the Christie name synonymous with polite comedy. The other Christie comedy on the month's schedule will be "Back to the Woods," to secure scenes for which Christie sent a company to the redwood forests of Northern California. This will be an outdoor picture of the same type as "Winter Has Come."

Lige Conley will be seen in the Mermaid comedy, "Three Strikes," released the last week of the month. This will be a baseball story with Lige Conley as the college hero.

In the single reel releases a larger assortment of diversified subjects is listed. The Earl Hurd Cartoon Comedy heads the month's releases with "Their Love Grew Cold." "Between Showers," a Cameo comedy, and Warren A. Newcombe's beautiful fantasy, "Sea of Dreams" will be released the second week of the month. "Mixed Trails," one of the Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce, the fifth of the 1923 series, is listed for release the week beginning June 17.

"Haunted Valley" Given Good Send-Off

Ruth Roland's new Pathe serial, "Haunted Valley," starts its career with unusual praise from Peggy Wood of the Chicago Herald-Examiner. From the extended article the following paragraphs are quoted:

"This is a serial—one of those guaranteed to make you shiver and shake and gasp in terror and lose your breath from excitement.

"The first three chapters which I saw kept you in a continual state of saying 'Oh, Oh, Oh!'—unless you were gasping so you couldn't even make a sound. If the rest of the episodes continue to get more exciting—and everything promised they would—it is good you can only see one chapter at a time or you would be liable to get shell-shock from shattered nerves.

"Ruth Roland is so wholesome and capable looking you feel you can bank on her to come out of any adventure on top.

"The story is about a haunted valley where all kinds of queer things happen. There are showers of dirt, rocks fall, the ground suddenly opens and lets you into whirlpools and rock caverns. But we are let into the secret that all of these things are not supernatural, but are being done by an inventor who is trying to get the haunted valley away from Ruth.

New Scripts in Preparation for Burr

Gregory La Cava, director of All Star Comedies for C. C. Burr, is busily engaged in whipping two new scenarios into shape for shooting.

Christie Comedies Are Used on Special Bills

In two cities last week, Christie Comedies of the new series distributed through Educational were used as attractions on special programs, and special advertising attention called to them.

In Los Angeles "Babies Welcome" was advertised at Grauman's as one of the numbers on a special bill adapted for the week following Baby Show week, when there was also shown pictures of babies taken during the Baby Show activities of the preceding week. This particular Christie Comedy is specially adaptable for showing during such local shows, because its plot is built around a Baby Show contest.

In Detroit, "Second Childhood" was played at the Capitol theatre during University of Michigan Week.

Telephone Inventor Seen in "Wonders of Sea"

Through the courtesy of J. Ernest Williamson, producer of "Wonders of the Sea," the American Telephone and Telegraph Company now have in their archives a full reel of motion pictures containing interesting views of the famous inventor of the telephone, the late Dr. Alexander Graham Bell and his wife.

During the production of the picture in the Bahama Islands, Dr. and Mrs. Bell were frequent and interested observers of the subscas exploration, and at various times descended to the sea bottom through the Williamson Submarine Tube.

The Bell reel forms one of the most interesting episodes of "Wonders of the Sea," as released throughout the country by F. B. O.

"Topics of Day" Celebrates Birthday

On its fifth birthday, celebrated last week, "Topics of the Day" finds itself strongly fortified as a recognized institution in the motion picture world. As a striking novelty this screen joke reel made its point with its first number. Released by Pathe, it gained steadily in bookings and is now one of the most widely popular items found on short subject programs.

One significant proof of the expert production of "Topics of the Day" is seen in the fact that many newspapers and magazines prefer its selections of current wit and humor to their own, and print them with credit. Several of the important Radio broadcasting stations applied to and received permission from Timely Films, Inc., producers of "Topics of the Day," to use in narrative form selections from reels which had already been screened throughout the country.

Breakers of Endurance Record Shown

The breaking of endurance flight records by Lieutenants Kelley and Macready, U. S. A., who remained in the air for 36 hours, is screened in picturesque scenes by Pathe News No. 34. Just before entering the huge Fokker monoplane, T-2, the aviators are seen in conference with Orville Wright.

At night powerful searchlights sweep the field to guide the course of the machine in the event of its landing. The flight covered a 31-mile triangular course at the rate of 114 miles an hour. A particularly striking closeup shows the army fliers just after the landing—grinning happily, but with soiled faces and eyes half closed through need of sleep.

Nipponese Superstitions in Fox Film

Modern methods of education as portrayed in "School Days in Japan," a Fox Educational Entertainment, should go far toward wiping out any superstitions in the Land of the Rising Sun, it is said.

The cameraman who shot these interesting scenes tells how, for good luck, the Japanese merchants build "toris" in front of their temples—two upright posts with a cross timber at the top. Thousands of these mark the approach to large sanctuaries. Another omen of the gods' favor in the "mato," a geometrical figure, somewhat similar to the totem pole of the American Indian, which the Nipponese place in the doorway of the home. They believe that the "mato" will ward off any evil.

King Tut Music Score for Fox One-Reeler

In order to further help the exhibitors in exploiting the one reel feature, "The Land of Tut-Ankh-Amen," Fox Film Corporation has arranged with Harry Von Tilzer for a special and complete orchestration titled "Old King Tut." This music score was forwarded this week to all the Fox exchanges. Sufficient copies of the orchestration have been supplied each branch office, so that one can ac-

"Sea of Dreams" for Educational Companion Picture to "The Enchanted City" Is Secured for Distribution

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., has secured for distribution Warren A. Newcombe's fantasy, "Sea of Dreams," a companion picture to "The Enchanted City," also made by Mr. Newcombe, which was pronounced by a well known critic "the most exquisitely beautiful thing that has ever been done in films."

"Sea of Dreams," like "The Enchanted City," is more a product of the artist's brush than of a camera. It is a series of beautiful paintings, representing a city beyond the skies, paintings serving as settings for a beautiful love fantasy, in which only two living characters appear.

"The Enchanted City" was inspired by Liszt's "Liebestraume" and the motif of "Sea of Dreams" is Wagner's opera, "Tristan and Isolde." It is a romantic conception of a lover's dream of doubt and separation, entirely imaginative.

Miss Hazel Lindsley is the girl in the picture. Miss Lindsley, a Columbia graduate, was chosen by Mr. Newcombe to portray the girl after an exhaustive study of available screen material. A girl to play the heroine had to be found who would be the romantic type, and whose beauty would blend with the pastel effect of Mr. Newcombe's paintings. Through a picture in a fellow artist's studios, Miss Lindsley was reached, and, after a test, chosen to play the difficult role. Miss Lindsley had no previous motion picture experience, but was a student of dramatic art and expression, and had appeared in amateur theatricals. Since her appearance in "Sea of Dreams" she has been pronounced a "find," and is soon to appear in a prominent role in a picture by an independent producer, after which she is under a starring contract with one of the biggest producers.

"Sea of Dreams" has already had a New York Broadway run, at the Rivoli. Dr. Riesenfeld, during the run at this theatre, prepared a special musical setting for this one-reel picture, which will be available to exhibitors when the picture is released on the Educational program.

Educational will release "Sea of Dreams" by arrangement with Howard Estabrook. The picture will be on Educational's June schedule.

Radio Tie-Ups on "Mystery Box" One-Reel Radio Subject Gets Unusual Promotion in Various Sections

WHAT is considered by Hodkinson officials to be proof that exhibitors throughout the country are losing their opposition to radio is shown in a statement made by J. G. Rohlf's, short subject sales manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Mr. Rohlf's has recently returned from a trip to Washington, D. C., Boston, Mass., and Providence, R. I., where tie-ups have been made in conjunction with the one reel Bray production, "The Mystery Box."

In Washington, D. C., Mr. Rohlf's came upon an unusual situation. He states that according to scientists an air pocket exists between Washington and Baltimore which renders the transmission of messages between the two places difficult. The matter was brought to the attention of the Radio Corporation of America and as a result an extra large broadcasting station has been built. During the running of "The Mystery Box" at Loew's Palace theatre, Washington, D. C., arrangements have been made for special broadcasting to be made with an amplifier on the stage of the theatre which will operate during the running of the picture. At the same time The Washington Post will run a scenario contest. According to Mr. Rohlf's, this tie-up is unusual inasmuch as the Radio Corporation of America, the Washington Post, and Woodward and Lothrop Department store have provided a tie-up on a one reel film which is considered by Mr. Rohlf's to be one of the greatest ever made.

At Boston, where "The Mystery Box" opens at the Park theatre, a similar tie-up has been made. The Radio Corporation of America in this instance has installed a receiving set on the stage of the theatre and has sent a man to operate it. A Radio concert will be given during the running of the picture. At the same time Mr. John J. Fanning, Director of Broadcasting, who has the distinction of being one of the best announcers of radio programs in the country today, will broadcast to over 300,000 listeners all about the film appearing at the Park theatre.

A similar tie-up was also secured in Providence, R. I., with Shepard's Broadcasting station and the Majestic theatre.

Chas. Dudley Cast for Century Comedy Role

Charles Dudley, who played several character parts for Al Herman in his Century Comedies, will be cast for an important part in Herman's next all-star comedy and probably receive a contract from Stern Brothers.

Dudley, who took two parts in "Oh, Nurse," the Century comedy starring Jack Cooper, has a reputation for serial and comedy acting. He appeared in twelve consecutive features with the serial star, William Duncan, and in Sennett and Fox comedies. He appeared in the first two-reel comedy made, about twelve years ago, and has had an acting career for twenty-seven years.

He will be given parts in which his skill in make-up will appear to advantage, and will probably continue to support Jack Cooper.

Will Rogers' Antics Win Praise

Will Rogers in a modest screen offering wins the following in the Cincinnati Times-Star of April 9th:

"Although Mrs. Mary Carr in one of her 'mother' characterizations occupies the greater part of the program at the Lyric theatre this week, the best part of the entertainment is the one that shows you Will Rogers wielding his amazing lariat. 'The Robin' Fool' is the name of this capital picture. It is a demonstration of the scores of clever stunts that Rogers performs while he chews gum and talks for the Ziegfeld 'Follies,' and it adds a few that can only be accomplished out in the open, with cattle and goats to be roped and tied, and other antics to be played when somebody feels his hat lifted from his head or his heels jerked from the ground in the grasp of a coil of hemp."

Duke of York's Wedding in Fox News

There are three outstanding features in the latest issue of Fox News. The first is the wedding at Westminster Abbey of Lady Bowes-Lyon and the Duke of York, second son of King George. This section of the news reel is being rushed special delivery to every exhibitor who uses Fox News. The second unusual bit is the journey of the camel caravan from China to Mongolia. The traders, leading long lines of camels bearing teas and spices, lines that stretch for miles over the winding road, are seen passing through gates in the Great Wall of China. The third striking news note is the opening of the Metropolitan racing season.

Independent Films Gets Arrow Product

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces the closing of a contract between that organization and Independent Films, Inc., of New England, whereby the latter organization secures the distribution rights for the New England territory of the following Arrow specials: "Lost in a Big City," "The Little Red Schoolhouse," "The Rip Tide," "The Broken Violin," "Man and Wife," "One-Eighth Apache," and "Night Life in Hollywood."

This deal gives the Independent Films Company the entire of Arrow's "Great Eight" series for the New England states.

Paul Terry Always on Alert for Novelties

Cartoonist Paul Terry never misses an opportunity to get fresh inspiration from nature. For instance, ever since the big circus and menagerie opened its annual New York engagement at Madison Square Garden, Terry and his sketch pad have been observed to be in frequent attendance. When a giraffe, an elephant, a monkey, some member of the cat kind, or a horse or a dog, illustrates physically a new side to his character, the cartoonist of Farmer Al Falfa and Henry Cat is seen "Terry-izing" it with his pencil.

Brings Touch of France To Broadway

A touch of old France, the sunny France of the early seventeenth century, of the time of King Louis XIII and Cardinal Richelieu, was brought to Broadway this week in replica in the making of Cosmopolitan's "Under the Red Robe."

In picturizing a particular episode of the famous story by Stanley Weyman, the Cosmopolitan Corporation constructed one of the largest and most beautifully picturesque studio sets ever constructed for a photoplay, it is claimed. This particular set, designed by Joseph Urban and built at a cost of $25,000, is so mammoth in size that it was necessary to construct it in the armory of the 104th Field Artillery, Sixty-eighth street and Broadway, where the film company is now at work.

Tourneur Announces New Production Policy

M. C. Levee, producer, and Maurice Tourneur, director, with the current success of "The Isle of Lost Ships," announce a policy of "different screen entertainment" which will be adhered to in the production of all future First National films.

Following this picturization, Tourneur's newest production, "The Brass Bottle," will be the second release under the "different screen entertainment" policy of the producers. The story is said to offer another daring novelty in the way of screen entertainment. Appearing in the cast are Harry Myers, Ernest Torrence, Tully Marshall, Charlotte Merriam, Ford Sterling and other popular players.

Historian Praises Johnson Film

Author Declares "Trailing African Wild Animals" is of Inestimable Value

RIGHT on top of the endorsement of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's picture "Trailing African Wild Animals" by the American Museum of Natural History comes this bit of enthusiastic eulogy in the "New Orleans Item" issue of April 16th. The author is Stanley Clisby Arthur, a well-known natural historian. The occasion was the showing of "Trailing Wild Animals" in the Globe theatre, New Orleans. Mr. Arthur said:

"To say that these pictures are 'wonderful,' 'remarkable,' 'thrilling,' but inadequately describes the 'bag' that took Martin Johnson two years to obtain but which were reeled off in ninety gripping minutes. They were all that—plus.

"As a pure educational feature, "Trailing African Wild Animals" is of inestimable value and truly deserved the seal of approval placed upon it by the American Museum of Natural History. As a thriller it out-thrills all the daredevil spectacular film heroes. The six reels make up the most interesting hour and a half period that man can experience.

"The whole thing brings you to your seat tingling with thrills that come only to the big game hunter. They will amuse you if you are looking for amusement, they will thrill you as no other pictures ever have, they will educate you.

"If theatres do not, local interests should most certainly exhibit this really perfect wild life film for the benefit of every man, woman and child everywhere. It is the most perfect thing of its kind and should be treasured as one of the greatest contributions to the sum of human knowledge."

Mr. Arthur is said to be no mean hunter himself, having gone on several African Wild Game exhibitions. Many of the specimens Mr. Arthur brought back with him are on exhibition in museums throughout the country.

Arrow Closes Big Foreign Deal

Negotiates Contracts for Sale of "Jacqueline" and "The Broken Violin"

D. J. MOUNTAN, manager of the Foreign Department of Arrow Film Corporation, this week announces the closing of contracts for disposal in France, Belgium, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Egypt and Palestine, of the Arrow specials, "Jacqueline, or Blazing Barriers," produced by Pine Tree Pictures, and the Atlantic Features special, "The Broken Violin." Both of these productions were secured by the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, who also secured Arrow's new serial, "The Fighting Skipper," for France and Belgium.

The closing of this contract marks the disposal of over eighty per cent of the foreign territory for "Jacqueline," and Mr. Mountain points out that Arrow is particularly proud of the fact that in every instance "Jacqueline" will be released by the largest organization in its territory. In England it will be released by Pearl Films, Ltd., and will open in a legitimate theatre at top prices. In France it will be released by Gaumont, with its initial showing at the Gaumont Palace in Paris, a theatre seating over six thousand. In Australia, by the Cooperative Film Exchange, Ltd., in Argentine and Chile by the Sociedad General Cinematografica, in Cuba by Liberty Film Company, in South Africa by Jack Sneider, in Spain and Portugal by Gaumont and in Central Europe by Hugo Neudecker.

Mr. Mountain states that he expects to have "Jacqueline" placed for the entire one hundred per cent of the foreign territory within the next ten days.

Special Cartoon for "You Are Guilty"

One of the latest exploitation accessories on the C. C. Burr feature, "You Are Guilty," is a cartoon by Cliff Knight, well-known newspaper cartoonist, showing a number of scenes from the feature and the members of the All-Star cast.

"This 'You Are Guilty' cartoon is available as a mat or electro and in window card form with imprint space for theatre name, play dates, etc.

In the center of the cartoon is a circle showing James Kirkwood, one of the stars, with little Russell Griffin, while other drawings picture Doris Kenyon, Mary Carr, Edmund Breese, Robert Edeson and Carleton Brickert, other members of the all-star cast of "You Are Guilty."

Still another excellent advertising medium for "You Are Guilty" is the series of lobby displays specially produced for the feature. There are ten of these in a set, each one showing one of the numberless big scenes in the picture and carefully selected to "play up" the stars featured in the big cast.

Endorsement Is Given "Ninety and Nine"

Endorsement of "The Ninety and Nine" as the greatest lesson against carelessness to prevent forest fires continues to come to Vitagraph, the producers of this thrilling drama. Paul G. Redington, district forester of the United States Forest Service at San Francisco, has written to the branch of Vitagraph in that city the following letter of commendation:

"I wish to assure you of my most hearty endorsement of your motion picture entitled 'The Ninety and Nine,' just released, which teaches in such a graphic manner the terrible results of forest fires due to human carelessness. The lesson which is carried by this picture is one I should like to see taught to every man, woman and child in California, in order that they might more fully appreciate the value of our forests in the development and prosperity of the state.

"I shall be glad to call the attention of forest officers in this state to the effective fire prevention propaganda featured in 'The Ninety and Nine' and enlist their cooperation in calling public attention to the important message delivered by this film."

Lowell Starts Work at Gloversville

John Lowell, Evangeline Russell, and Mrs. L. Case Russell expect to leave for the Blazed Trail studio in Gloversville, N. Y., the first part of this week. Production on Mr. Lowell's next picture, "He Who Conquers Himself," will start this month.

Feminine Screen Stars with Goldwyn

Goldwyn recently has secured the services of several feminine motion picture stars to play leading roles in forthcoming pictures.

Blanche Sweet has been engaged to play the role of Tess in Marshall-Neilan's production of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," from Thomas Hardy's novel.

Corinne Griffith is portraying for Goldwyn the leading role in Elinor Glyn's "Six Days" now in production.

Marie Prevost, famous as the most beautiful of the Mack Sennett bathing beauties, and now a dramatic star, played the feminine lead in Clarence G. Badger's picturization of Edward E. Rose's "Red Lights." Another star has been engaged for this production—Alice Lake, who has been seen in many Metro pictures.

Mabel Ballin has just completed the first production which her husband, Hugo Ballin, has made for Goldwyn, "Vanity Fair," adapted from Thackeray's novel.

Bessie Love, another well known film star, plays an important part in Marshall Neilan's second Goldwyn production, "The Eternal Three." Claire Windsor, long a Goldwyn leading woman, has the principal feminine role in this production, however.

Eleanor Boardman acted the lead in Goldwyn's new Rupert Hughes picture, "Souls for Sale," and is now cast in "The Day of Faith."

"Enemies of Women" to Resume N. Y. Run

When "Enemies of Women," Cosmopolitan's picturization of the romantic novel by Vincente Blasco Ibanez, resumes its Broadway run on May 13 at the Rivoli theatre it will have the same elaborate setting which featured its showing at the Central theatre. The other features which accompanied the film at the Central will be entailed in the Rivoli showing, including the original musical score specially composed for the production by William Frederick Peters.

Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens head the all-star cast which also includes such prominent players as Pedro de Cordoba, Gareth Hughes, Gladys Hulette, William "Buster" Collier, Jr., W. H. Thompson, Mario Majeroni, Paul Panzer, Ivan Linow and Betty Bouton.

"Good Bad Man" Is Due for Release

John Emerson and Anita Loos have completed their work of editing and tiling "The Good Bad Man," which is to be released by Messrs. Aitken and Price. This is generally conceded to be the best Western picture Doug Fairbanks ever appeared in.

"Girl Who Came Back" Prints Available

Prints of "The Girl Who Came Back," an adaptation of the stage play by Charles E. Blaney and Samuel Ruskin Golding, are now in the Al Lichtman exchanges as ture.

Burns OK's "Human Wreckage"

Mrs. Wallace Reid Accorded Star Position at Anti-Narcotic Conference

AT the National Anti-Narcotic Conference held last week at Washington, D. C., Mrs. Wallace Reid was unanimously accorded the star position of the conference. A message was read from William J. Burns, head of the Bureau of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice, in which Mr. Burns strongly advised the sponsoring of Mrs. Reid's production, "Human Wreckage," declaring it to be the greatest broadaxe which could be wielded on the fight against narcotics.

This endorsement of William J. Burns was only one of the thousands that have come into Mrs. Reid from national, state and city executives, as well as police chiefs and women's clubs from every section of the United States, it is said.

The fact that Mrs. Reid was the outstanding figure in the Washington conference is an indication of the great support that will be given to "Human Wreckage" when it is released by the Film Booking Offices, because the Washington conference was attended and supported by official delegates appointed by the governors of thirty-two states; and most of the big civic associations were represented by delegations.

Another feature of Mrs. Wallace Reid's visit to the national capitol was her meeting with Stephen G. Porter, whom President Harding has just appointed to head the United States Commission to the Geneva League of Nations Committee on Narcotics. Representative Porter is now the world's foremost figure in the international investigation of the narcotic evil, and the sympathy and interest he expressed in Mrs. Reid's work will undoubtedly be reflected in every organized body throughout the civilized world.

Offer Comedy Dramas For Sum

First National Announces Wide Variety Is Available During Hot Months

THERE will be no shortage of feature comedies and comedy dramas for those exhibitors who feel that their audiences demand a lighter grade of screen entertainment during the summer months, as far as First National is concerned.

The problem of how to fill the theatre during the hot weather period, is, in the opinion of many show men, best solved by offering the theatregoer a varied screen fan, including plenty of stories with a comedy element predominating. Respecting this demand, First National will have an attractive list of high-class comedies and comedy dramas available to exhibitors for the summer season.

First National exchanges already report that they are feeling the demand for comedy dramas for summer bookings. Charlie Chaplin's "The Pilgrim" and Thomas H. Ince's "The Hottentot" are two First National releases which are in consistent demand for summer shows and in some territories these two pictures have already been booked solid for July and August, it is said.

Marshall Neilan's "Minnie" is expected to act as a panacea for exhibitors' summertime depression.

"Temptation" Premiere at Special Showing

For the second time within two weeks a C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation release was selected as the feature for the special Sunday night program at the George M. Cohan theatre, New York.

Two weeks ago "Her Accidental Husband," the first of the C. B. C.-Belasco Productions was the feature chosen—and this week "Temptation," starring Bryant Washburn and Eva Novak, was selected as the special feature to be used on this program, which is conducted through the U. B. O. circuit.

The "Temptation" showing on Sunday was of special interest in that it was in reality a pre-release showing in New York. This feature, to which the Apollo exchange has New York franchise rights, was given its New York premiere run at the Broadway theatre, New York, this week, but, in response to a special request, it was permitted that it be shown for one night only at the George M. Cohan theatre, before being taken down to the Broadway.

Snow's Wild Animals Thrill London

"Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera," H. A. Snow's remarkable animal film, now being released by Universal, has taken London by storm, Universal reports. A radio just received from Great Britain indicates that the hunt picture is the talk of the British metropolis and that it has aroused more interest in moving pictures on the part of the average Londoner than any film ever shown there before.

The picture is playing at the London Pavilion. At its opening several nights ago, thousands are reported to have been turned away. The Pavilion is on Piccadilly Circus, London's great amusement center, and during the running of the first show, the overflow jammed into Piccadilly Circus until an extra corps of "bobbies" had to be called out to handle traffic, according to the radio received from E. J. Smith, Universal's British representative.

Unique Press Book for Broadway Gold

In the preparation of the press book on Edward Dillon's "Broadway Gold," in which Elaine Hammerstein makes her bow as a Truist star, it is believed that a new standard has been set in every department of exploitation work, according to Truist.

One of the special features of the book is the exploitation section on which experts have worked for several weeks with the result that the advertising possibilities have been developed from every angle. The exhibitor of both the metropolitan and neighborhood houses will find a wide selection of material and suggestions which they can easily adapt to their local requirements and conditions.

The advertising section carries a large number of newspaper announcement plates and scene illustrations, which present the picture in a many sided appeal. The newspaper stories are another point upon which great care and labor has been expended.

"Girl Who Came Back," Recommended

"THE GIRL WHO CAME BACK," the prison drama of the stage, which is presented by B. P. Schulberg through the Al Lichtman Corporation, is listed by the National Board of Review on their April Photoplay Guide of selected pictures as suitable for the family group. Miriam Cooper, Kenneth Harlan, Gaston Glass and Ethel Shannon are in the cast.

Complete Villa Built for "Old Madrid"

Something new in motion picture settings is said to be introduced for the production of "In Old Madrid," Clara Kimball Young's newest starring vehicle, which is being produced for Metro by Harry Garson under the direction of Thomas Heffron. The novelty is the construction of an entire 10-room Spanish villa on a studio stage.

It was decided to try the plan of building the entire house in one unit. The chief difficulty was in arranging it so that it might be lighted properly. The credit for this engineering feat goes to Joseph Wright, the designer.

Animals Feature "Critical Age"

Take Important Roles in Latest Feature Released Through Hodkinson

ONE of the most interesting features found in the latest production released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation entitled "The Critical Age," adapted from the novel, "Glengarry Schooldays," by Ralph Connor and produced by Ernest Shipman, is the animals which enact very important roles.

Taking into consideration the interest which is manifested among motion picture fans for animals that act in the pictures the director, Henry McRae, placed special emphasis upon that part of the story which places two dogs and a bear strongly in the foreground.

One dog known as "Wolf" is a large Belgian police dog who shows according to those who have seen a pre-release showing of the picture, unusual human intelligence.

He is called upon to do the hazardous feat of swimming through the rapids to save the girl. He is also required, as part of the plot, to perform many unusual and heart touching incidents.

Another dog, a little fluffy French poodle, has the experience of riding through the rapids on the bottom of an upturned canoe. The final thrill of the picture occurs with a grizzly bear. At this point Harlan Knight, who plays the role of old Peter Gorrish, has a realistic tussle with the bear.

"The Critical Age" is an Ernest Shipman production picturized from the Ralph Connor novel "Glengarry Schooldays" and features Pauline Garon, James Harrison, and Wallace Ray in the cast.

Goodman Engages Fine Cast

Additions For Special Production Include Many Well Known Players

TWO weeks ago Daniel Carson Goodman announced to the trade through Equity Pictures Corporation that he had secured Mary Carr, Mildred Harris and Charles Emmet Mack to play important roles in his next Special production for Equity and also stated that, during the course of the production activities, the other luminaries of the film world necessary to complete his all-star cast would be announced.

Dr. Goodman has added to his cast Tyrone Power, Joseph King, Clara Bow, Helen Rowland, Joseph Depew, "Skeets" Gallagher, Jack Richardson and Samuel Sidman. All of these artists will play prominent parts in the new pictures. Produced under the personal supervision of Daniel Carson Goodman, the picture bids fair to be the outstanding Equity production released thus far.

A further evidence of Dr. Goodman's vision is seen in his arrangements for the big cabaret scene in this production. In order to insure perfect background for the scene and perfect atmosphere, he has arranged to have the young ladies in the chorus of "The Gingham Girl," the musical comedy success now on Broadway, dance the well-known "strut" number in this scene.

Equity is greatly elated over wonderful developments and there will be other announcements to be made on the production before the completion of it.

Special Songs on F.B.O. Pictures

Harms, Inc., Publishers, Will Release Popular Theme Song On All Features

RECOGNIZING the hold that music has on the theatre-going public today and appreciating the fact that in more than one instance a song has helped to put over a screen production, the Film Booking Offices have turned to music in their campaign to help the exhibitor sell their product to the public. With this end in view, the F. B. O. has made a tie-up with T. B. Harms, Inc., song and music publishers, who will release a popular theme song on all F. B. O. features. In each instance the song will be written by two of the very best known writers. Among the writers who are under exclusive contract to the Harms company are Victor Herbert, Gene Buck, Con Conrad, Arthur Francis, Lewis Gensler and many others.

The first tie-up made between Harms and the F. B. O. was made this week on the coming release, "Mary of the Movies." Arthur Francis and Lewis Gensler, writers of the score and music of the shows, "Dangerous Maid," "Two Little Girls in Blue," "Molly Darling," Nora Bayes in the "Queen of Hearts," "Forty-Niners," and Raymond Hitchcock's "Hitchy Koo of 1923," also the writers of "I'll Build a Stairway to Paradise" from the George White "Scandals," have just completed a specially written song entitled "Mary Mine," inspired by the F. B. O.'s Hollywood picture.

According to the publishers, the "Mary of the Movies" song is much the same type as "Mickey" and it is the object of the house to popularize the song on the records, rolls and sheet music counters before the general release of the film. As a starter 15,000 dance and orchestra orchestrations have been distributed to the theatres and dance halls throughout the country and all the mechanical companies will carry it on their June releases.

Start Cutting "Richard The Lion Hearted"

ASSOCIATED AUTHORS are now bending every effort toward the cutting of "Richard, the Lion-Hearted," a screen version of Sir Walter Scott's "The Talisman," and the initial production of the trio of authors, Franke E. Woods, Elmer Harris and Thompson Buchanan, for release through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

While final scenes of this film, which features Wallace Beery in the title role, are still being shot the first cut of the picture is being made by Mrs. Margaret Darrell. In view of the stupendous scale on which this production has been photographed, the Authors trio expect to hang up a short-distance record for speed in their work by cutting and assembling the film without waiting for the final scenes to be made. Camera work on the feature will be finished in about ten days.

Roach Congratulates To Pathe Officials

Pathe exchange is in receipt of the following wire from Hal Roach on its selection of a President and other results of the recent annual meetings of Stockholders and Directors:

"Congratulations to your very able President, Mr. Paul Fuller, and to Mr. Pearson, the most capable Vice President and General Manager Pathe has ever had; and to Mr. Lynch, whose name will add dignity and stability as Chairman of the Board of Directors. May Pathe, under the guidance of these executives, continue to be the efficient, honorable and progressive organization that has built up its reputation."

The entire output of the Hal Roach studios is distributed by Pathe, including the comedies of Harold Lloyd, Snub Pollard, Paul Parrott, Stan Laurel, "Our Gang," and the new all-animal 1-reel series called "Dippy Doo Dads," together with other types of pictures now in production.

Chicago Praises "Poor Men's Wives"

The Al Lichtman release, "Poor Men's Wives," opened for a week's run at the Chicago theatre, Chicago, to the same high praise from the local press that it received from the New York dailies during its premier at the Criterion on Broadway according to the Lichtman offices.

Mae Tinee of the Chicago Tribune said: "First you laugh, then you cry and then you laugh again. But you'll do more laughing than crying when you see 'Poor Men's Wives.'"

Polly Wood, reviewer for the Chicago Herald-Examiner, wrote: "If you are fond of the sentimental you will revel in this picture. Barbara La Marr gets your real sympathy and is very appealing."

"Queen of Sin" An Early Release

Selznick Distributing Corporation
Has Spectacle Picture on Schedule

SELZNICK Distributing Corporation has scheduled for early release "The Queen of Sin," the spectacle picture which had its premiere in New York at the Lyric theatre some weeks ago.

This production was powerful in theme and tremendously impressive, especially in the spectacle scenes which vividly visualized the fall of Sodom and Gomorrah, but the Selznick company felt that it was too long as originally shown and decided to reduce the footage from over ten thousand feet to something less than eight thousand.

This re-editing has been accomplished under the personal supervision of Myron Selznick, and Mr. Doolittle states that in its finished form the picture offers a perfect blending of ancient spectacle and modern drama such as has never been seen on the screen heretofore.

The Evening Telegram in its review said: "From a spectacular standpoint it is perhaps the best cinema that has reached this country from Europe."

The Evening Mail said: "The spectacles are stupendous indeed. You will marvel at the hugeness of the fete given the Queen and wonder at the destruction of Sodom.—A city of marvelous beauty is destroyed by fire and brimstone. You can't help thinking how are they ever going to do anything bigger than this."

The Journal of Commerce says: "Mighty and moving, vast and majestic in pictorial conception and scope, multitudes in ensembles that rival at times any ever before seen on the screen."

Further announcement as to the acquisition of new productions is promised by Mr. Doolittle for the near future, as several contracts have been signed during the past few days.

Huge Set For "Lady of Quality"

Largest Interior Ever at Universal
For Frances Hodgson Burnett Story

THE largest interior set ever constructed at Universal City is to house the big ball scenes of "A Lady of Quality," adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's famous story, in which Virginia Valli is starred.

The set comprises three big rooms, and occupies the entire west end of the largest stage at Universal City. A hall, eighty by fifty feet, forty-five feet high, a stairway hall twenty-five by sixty by forty feet in dimensions, and a dining room of forty by sixty by thirty-five feet are connected in series, the intercommunicating doors being used in the "long shots," in which the camera operates two hundred feet away. The entire frontage of the set is more than 120 feet and the length over 225 feet.

The entire affair is built of wood, and every part is practical. Elaborate carvings, antique furniture, and valuable trappings bedeck this replica of the home of a wealthy man of old-time England.

The design reproduces Wildairs Hall. The details were drawn up by Frank H. Webster, supervised by Elmer E. Sheeley, head of the Universal City technical department, and are from research manuscripts collected by Hobart Henley, director of the picture, and his staff of librarians and research experts.

Five hundred people will be used in the scenes taken in the great interior. A ball scene, a dinner party, and other social events of 1700 will be portrayed in the picture, which gives an accurate view of the customs of the period.

Campaign for "Broadway Gold"

Extensive Advertising and Publicity
Planned for Truart Production

M. H. HOFFMAN, vice-president and general manager of the Truart, is planning a countryside campaign of advertising and publicity of Elaine Hammerstein's first production for Truart, "Broadway Gold."

According to the plans as outlined at present the campaign will start with a four-page insert in the trade papers. This splash will be followed by a twenty-four sheet showing on "Broadway Gold" in New York, which will probably be supplemented by one and three sheet showing on the Elevated Railway Stations and in the Subways of New York and Brooklyn.

Details of a circularization of all the exhibitors are now being worked out. This will be followed by an intensive newspaper publicity campaign of special articles and illustrated sections.

In Philadelphia and Chicago as well as in several other of the larger key centres outdoor advertising will be resorted to.

"Broadway Gold" is the first of a series of super pictures in which Elaine Hammerstein will appear for the Truart. This production, as well as "The Unknown Purple" and several other big pictures now projected, will be offered on the Truart Franchise. Mr. Hoffman is said to be finding the independent exchangemen throughout the country enthusiastic in their interest in the project.

The sets under construction in the cut are for Mary Pickford's latest production, a story dealing with old Spain now in production at the Hollywood studios.

"Youth Triumphant" Near Finish

Distribution Plans for Initial Fisher
Production to be Announced Soon

"YOUTH TRIUMPHANT," the initial Fisher production, and featuring an all star cast, is nearing completion and announcement concerning its distribution is promised in the near future.

Staged at the Hollywood studios under the supervision of Victor B. Fisher and co-directed by Lillian Ducey and Jack Voshell, "Youth Triumphant" marks the entrance of an organization that bids fair to become an important factor in the independent producing field.

The initial picture is an adaptation of the novel by George Gibbs and deals with the struggle of youth for happiness. The early part of the story portrays the tenements of New York and several big street scenes of the lower East Side were faithfully reproduced at the Hollywood studios, it is said. A striking contrast to the early part of the story is developed in the presentation of the lavish scenes of society which figure in the plot.

For its initial offering, Fisher Productions has assembled an exceptionally well known cast, including Virginia Lee Corbin, Anna Q. Nilsson, Raymond Hatton, Joseph Dowling, George Siegman, War Crane, Kate Price, Boyd Irwin and other popular players.

Upon completion of "Youth Triumphant," work will be started immediately on the second production, an adaptation of a popular novel which has also had considerable success in its dramatized form.

Critics Acclaim "Main Street"

Warner Brothers Production Approved
After Premiere in Los Angeles

WARNER BROTHERS pictureization of Sinclair Lewis' popular novel, "Main Street," following its premiers showing at Mack Sennett's Mission theatre, Los Angeles, during the week of April 25, has received the acclaim of the newspaper critics of that city.

Florence Lawrence, Los Angeles Examiner, said: "If your heart doesn't just ache for Karol Kennicott when you see 'Main Street' then you're a sure enough 'Prairie Goof.' Warner Brothers are entitled to high praise. They have translated to the screen a story of humanity, with magnificent success."

Guy Price, Los Angeles Herald, said: "'Main Street' will be seen by everyone who goes to the movies and by some who never go to the movies. It is a safe bet to say that all who perused the book will view the film—and the picture should run until the cows come ding-donging home."

Grace Kingsley, Los Angeles Times, said: "Motion pictures are both the Main Street of art and the art of Main Street. You will be bound to like 'Main Street' on the screen."

Los Angeles Express said: "'Main Street' is excellent entertainment for those who read the book and others as well. The picture has all the earmarks of popular content."

Ted Taylor, Los Angeles Record said: "The village Improvement Society has reason to rejoice. Warner Brothers picture version 'Main Street.'"

The leading roles in the feature are portrayed by Florence Lawrence and Monte Blue, and the supporting cast includes Robert Gordon, Harry Myers, Alan Hale, Louis Fazenda, Otis Harlan and many others. Harry Beaumont directed and Julien Josephson adapted the story.

Metro Gets 4,000 Cattle for Stampede

IN order to stage a real stampede in which 4,000 cattle will participate, Metro Pictures Corporation has found it necessary to take over all the cattle on the Smithson ranch near Bishop, California. This stampede is to take place for an important episode of "The Eagle's Feather," the first of the Metro all-star specials which Edward Sloman will direct.

For two weeks Mr. Sloman and Lou Stroh, Metro location manager, toured Northern California and Western Nevada in search of cattle for the stampede. They found several large herds but were unable to make arrangements with the owners due to the prohibitive rental prices they asked.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" Fame Spreads

The fame of "Down To The Sea in Ships" has reached the far corners of the world, according to the Home office of the W. W. Hodgkinson Corporation.

H. Helbawy, Kasr-el-Doubara, of Cairo, Egypt, wrote a letter requesting information regarding the Elmer Clifton production and giving the names of motion picture theatres in the town.

Hines' Pictures Well Received

Reviewers in Many Cities Highly Praise "Sure Fire Flint" and "Luck"

RECENT newspaper reviews from various parts of the country attest to the fact that the Johnny Hines pictures, sponsored by C. C. Burr, are going over in great style, according to the Burr offices. "Sure Fire Flint" and "Luck" have both been accorded enthusiastic reviews by the critics of the newspapers from Coast to Coast and from Maine to Florida, it is claimed.

Quotations from a few follow:

"Hines has created a type of comedy and a style of acting as individual as Chaplin or Lloyd or any other of our well known screen actors," says the Fairmont, W. Va., Times.

The Washington Post says: "One of the swiftest, most amusing comedies ever offered here."

The Waltham, Mass., Free Press, in reviewing "Luck" which recently played at the Waltham theatre praised the feature in this way: "Luck" was presented at the Waltham theatre last night and met with hearty approval."

The Waltham News critic wrote:

"A sure way to start off any day in the proper spirit is to go and see "Luck" at the Waltham theatre, the night before. Here is a picture which we can recommend as tonic to weary minds and bodies."

From the Houston Post the following is taken:

"'Sure Fire Flint,' Johnny Hines' spectacular feature comely, went over in splendid style Sunday when it opened at the Liberty. It teems with action of the brightest sort and Hines is in his element. There are additional films but the Hines' comedy is the magnet."

The Houston Chronicle critic wrote as follows: "'Sure Fire Flint,' with energetic and comical Johnny Hines as the star, is packed full of thrills and amusing episodes, most of which are supplied by the star himself."

When "Sure Fire Flint" played Crandall's Metropolitan, the critic of the Washington Times had this to say about the feature: "The breeziest and most interesting comedy-melodrama that has been screened in the Capital in months."

The project is further endorsed by the head masters and head mistresses of the following schools, who are members of the benefit committee: Miss Chapin's, Miss Spence's, Miss Nightingale's, Miss Ruutz-Ree's, St. Bernard's, Lincoln School, Buckley School, Bovee School. Many heads of New York public schools also are enlisted for the success of the benefit.

Respecting the objects of the League of Girls' Clubs, Mrs. Barnes, its president, supplies these facts: "In these clubs girls over 16 years of age find an opportunity to make their leisure time count for health, fun, friends and self-development. League clubs are absolutely non-sectarian. They include girls of all creeds, of all nationalities, and from every walk in life. The great majority are young women who work in store, office or factory. League clubs are self-governing. There is a central club house at 15 East 60th street, always open.

"I think the public should know how fine a thing Pathe Exchange has done in bringing out this picture."

Author to Collaborate on "Ponjola"

Cynthia Stockley, the author of "Panjola," the story of the African gold fields, will collaborate with Sam E. Rork in the film production of her novel, which is to be made at the United studios for First National, with James Young directing. Announcement of the purchase of the screen rights of this story and the selection of Anna Q. Nilsson for the leading role, was made recently by First National.

Rork stated that production on the First National picture will begin at the United studios early in June. The cast is now being assembled which, according to this producer, will contain the names of some of the most noted film players of the day, in addition to Miss Nilsson.

Paramount Company on Jamaica Location

ALITTLE bit of Normandy was built last week on the O'Connor estate in Jamaica, L. I., for scenes in Dorothy Dalton's latest Paramount picture, adapted from C. M. C. McLellan's play, "Leah Kleschna," and a company of players headed by Miss Dalton worked in the quaint setting under the direction of Ralph Ince for several days.

James Rennie worked with Miss Dalton in this sequence and fifty extras furnished the foreign atmosphere, along with oxen, goats, geese and chickens.

Serials Are Popular in South America

That Peruvian motion picture fans show a predilection for serials above all other films, was the statement of Alberto F. Leon Porta, consul of Peru in Los Angeles, upon a recent visit to Universal City.

"Art Acord and Louis Lorraine are two of the most popular stars in Peru and especially in Lima, the capital," declared Senor Porta. "Priscilla Dean, too, is very popular in my country. Her vivid, flashing personality appeals to the Latin audience. Also, the fans of Peru, as of other South American countries, like intense emotional acting."

Senor Porta says that American films are the most popular on the southern continent, superseding in number the combined films of all other countries.

While a guest at Universal City, the Latin consul visited the Shanghai set where Priscilla Dean is filming "Drifting," and secured autographed portraits of the star to send to all members of his family in Lima.

U. S. Executive Praises Snow's Animal Film

Simultaneous with the arrival of news of its great London reception, the Universal home office received noteworthy praise and commendation of Snow's "Hunting Big Game in Africa," from Robert Woods Bliss, Third Assistant Secretary of State of the United States. Secretary Bliss saw the picture at its showing in the Rialto theatre in Washington, and was so impressed with its entertainment qualities that he wanted his wife to see it. Mrs. Bliss, however, was ill and could not leave her home.

Charles Parker, of Universal's Washington exchange, arranged for a special sickroom showing, much to the delight of Mrs. Bliss and the gratification of the Government official, who later wrote his thanks and appreciation in glowing terms to Universal.

The Chicago run of "Hunting Big Game in Africa," now in its height at the Randolph theatre, is proving an eye-opener to the Universal sales department. Although in its second week, the picture is playing to crowds which ordinarily characterize a widely exploited opening night, it is claimed.

"Temptation" Sold for United Kingdom

ANOTHER big foreign sale was completed this week by Joseph Simonds on "Temptation," one of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation features. Mr. Simonds has taken over foreign distribution rights on all the C. B. C. feature product. The sale covers the entire United Kingdom and was made to Western Import, Ltd.

According to Mr. Simonds special exploitation plans are under way for launching "Temptation" in Great Britain.

Publishers Make Sale of Screen Rights

Harper & Brothers, publishers, announce the sale of screen rights to fourteen of their most important novels, thus making one of the largest motion picture deals of the year. The purchaser is Harry Sherman.

The books he has chosen are:

Alexander Black's, "The Great Desire" and "The Seventh Angel"; Basil King's "Steps of Honor," "Let Not Men Put Asunder," and "The Garden of Charity"; Margaret Cameron's "The Cat and the Canary"; Will N. Harben's "The Fruit of Desire"; "The House of Happiness," by Kate L. Boshier; "A Successful Wife," by Marie Van Vorst; "Supreme Surrender," by A. M. Low; "The Road That Led Home," by Will E. Ingersoll, and Philip Curtiss' "Between Two Worlds," "Wanted: A Fool," and "Crater's Gold."

The publishers state that they will in all probability, bring out a popular priced edition of each of the above novels as they are produced.

Production Finished on "Brass Bottle"

Maurice Tourneur concluded the production of his newest picturization of M. C. Levee, "The Brass Bottle," last week, with the filming of a spectacular prologue for the picture, in which two hundred harem girls participated.

With the making of this picture, Tourneur offers his initial efforts as a director of a comedy and also makes his first appearance on the American screen in the portrayal of one of the characters in the story. Photographically, it is said, the picture will disclose typical Tourneur effects with gorgeous scenes in a palace from the Arabian Nights.

Harry Myers, whose "Connecticut Yankee" marked him as one of the screen's foremost portrayals of light comedy parts, has a somewhat similar part in the Tourneur-Levee film for First National. Ernest Torrence and Tully Marshall, the two outstanding characters in "The Covered Wagon," appear in new and distinctive portrayals. Charlotte Merriam, Ford Sterling, Otis Harlan, Barbara LeMarr and Aggie Herring are others in the notable cast. The film was photographed by A. L. Todd.

"Scars of Jealousy" at Strand

New York Reviewers and Crowds Approve Ince Production at Broadway House

"SCARS OF JEALOUSY," a Thomas H. Ince production, released by First National, opened at the Strand, New York, Sunday, to crowded houses and was received with enthusiasm. This play, dealing with the lives of an aristocratic youth and a mountain boy and having for its theme the maxim, "Blood Will Tell," contains an excellent cast, consisting of Frank Keenan, Marguerite de la Motte, Lloyd Hughes and Edward Burns.

Following is the substance of what motion picture critics of the New York dailies had to say of it:

Don Allen in the Evening World: "Any feature with Frank Keenan as its featured player is enjoyable to us, and 'Scars of Jealousy,' now on view at the Strand, is a real story of the South, handled as Thomas H. Ince knows so well how to handle such a story.—The photography is remarkably beautiful."

Robert G. Welch in the Evening Telegram: "This latest of Thomas H. Ince photoplay productions, which was directed by Lambert Hillyer, offers as an entertaining example the story of a dissipated son of an Alabama Colonel. The acting honors, of course, go to the two boys first, Edward Burns as the aristocratic son and Lloyd Hughes as the Cajan boy, who proves that he comes from a stock that was as blue-blooded as it was red-blooded. Frank Keenan as the Colonel makes a stoic-impressive figure and Marguerite de la Motte is pretty enough for the two lads to fight over."

Stephen Rathburn in the Evening Sun: "The picture is a first rate melodrama of home life among the moonshiners in the backwoods of Alabama. And it is beautifully acted."

B. F. Holzman in the Mail: "A good movie, thanks to plenty of action and outdoor sets."

Harriette Underhill in the Tribune: "On the way out we heard two men talking and they liked the picture; so do not stay away."

Morning Telegraph: "The picture is somewhat unusual and the dramatic story is told by competent actors and photographers. A real forest fire is the feature of the film and the final rescue of the Cajan boy is full of fast action and tense moments."

"Vanity Fair" Liked by Critics

N. Y. Reviewers Praise Screen Version of Thackeray's Famous Novel

HUGO BALLIN'S screen version of Thackeray's famous novel, "Vanity Fair," is the offering at the Capitol theatre, New York, this week and it found many friends among both critics and the picture-going public.

Alan Dale, reviewing it in the New York American, wrote: "The filmization was undertaken reverently. There was atmosphere; there was characterization; there was a certain charm. The dramatic moment—that of the eternal triangle knocked into smithereens—was extremely neatly presented. Mr. Walsh, Mr. Bosworth and Miss Ballin made this episode a 'highlight.'"

P. W. Gallico in the News: "Hugo Ballin's production of 'Vanity Fair' has everything. It is directed with a fine feeling for detail, mounted as only Mr. Ballin can set a picture, is exquisitely photographed, has a cast of personable and capable actors."

Frederick Mordaunt Hall in the Times: "The production is an elaborate one, done in very good taste, contains many impressive scenes and a number of original ideas in photography and sets."

Robert E. Sherwood in the Herald: "A gallant effort. Some of the scenes are beautiful in the extreme."

The World: "A picture book of fashions a century ago. A series of striking scenes. Excellent portrayal of the Marquis of Steyne by Hobart Bosworth."

The Telegram: "An excellent transcript of one of the classics of fiction. The producer is to be congratulated on the fidelity with which he has confined himself to the precincts of the original story."

The Mail: "An artistic photoplay delightfully executed. Thackeray's most popular novel is skilfully portrayed and contains none of the stock movie incidents to make it move."

The Journal: "A photoplay that holds the attention and charms the eye with the warmth of its settings, its noticeably good lighting and photography and with some striking effects."

The Sun: "Mr. Ballin is deserving of credit for the very evident expenditure of time, money and thought on the production. The detail is nothing short of marvelous. The settings and photography are artistic in the extreme."

Leah Baird Popular on Southern Tour

The personal appearance tour by Leah Baird, in connection with showings of "Is Divorce A Failure?" her 1923 Special for Associated Exhibitors, is proceeding throughout the South and is winning fresh laurels for the popular player, it is said.

Following her visits to several Texas cities, in the course of which she was received by Governor Pat. M. Neff and several Mayors, was guest of honor at receptions by women's clubs, Rotary clubs, and other organizations and officiated at "film type" beauty contests in Dallas and Mexia, Miss Baird continued her tour of the Gulf states, en route to the East.

Next Lowell Production in Six Reels

YIELDING to the expressed desire of exhibitors for shorter length feature pictures, John Lowell, star and producer of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and "Lost in a Big City," plans to condense his next production, work on which will start within the month, into six reels.

This production, which will feature Mr. Lowell, will be directed by George Irving, who directed "Lost in a Big City." The story is by L. Case Russell who adapted both "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and "Lost in a Big City." Evangeline Russell, last seen in "Lost," etc., will have the leading feminine role.

Location Selected for "The Huntress"

After a six-day search for locations for "The Huntress," which will be Colleen Moore's first starring picture for First National, Director Lynn Reynolds, David H. Thompson, studio business manager, James Van Trees, cameraman, and Edward Blackburn, film laboratory expert, have returned to the First National studios. As a result of this trip it has been decided that the Nevada side of the High Sierras will provide the most picturesque settings for exterior scenes.

In order to bring new scenery to the screen the Colleen Moore company will be forced to play their way for miles through mountain trails in rough wagons or on horseback. The locations decided upon are at an average of 7,000 feet above sea level.

High Rating for Metro Animal Picture

Newspaper reviewers are enthusiastic over "Trailing African Wild Animals," the Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson picture for Metro. Norman Clark, of the Baltimore Sun, one of the most influential critics of the Southeast, rated the picture at ninety per cent, which is the highest he ever gave any production, it is claimed. Others throughout the country have expressed an equal enthusiasm and managers of several theatre circuits have personally sent telegrams to all exhibitors, recommending "Trailing African Wild Animals."

Doug's "Robin Hood" Still Breaking Records

"THE magnetism that surrounds the picture 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' has been demonstrated during the past week by the crowds who have daily visited the Capitol theatre," says the Montreal Daily Star in an article concerning this United Artists release. "So widespread has been the desire to see this production that a Canadian record was established by the Capitol during the last week both in the number of people entering the theatre and the amount of the box-office receipts.

"'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' is so vast in its conception, the spirit of realism so thoroughly covers the span of centuries, and there is such an immense amount of detail in the creation, that one should see it more than once in order to appreciate to the full extent the real artistry of the achievement."

Snow Scenes Made for "Master of Woman"

Banff, Alberta, is the present scene of operations of the Reginald Barker production unit, which recently journeyed to Canada to film "The Law Bringers" for Louis B. Mayer. According to telegraphic advices received at the studio, the company detrained at Jasper, a small settlement located in the snowy fastnesses of Jasper National Park, where many of the future episodes will be made in the beautiful and picturesque setting of this enormous government reservation. Wishing to take advantage of an unusually heavy fresh snowfall reported in Banff, the director hurried across country to this district to stage certain scenes for which the story necessitates a snowstorm environment.

Among the members of the Reginald Barker company in the north are Earle Williams, Renee Adoree, Pat O'Malley, Pat Harmon and George Kuwa of the cast; Percy Hilburn, chief cameraman; Harry Schenck, unit manager, and a large force of engineers, electricians and other technical men.

Ray's "Girl I Loved" Is Praised in S. F.

"A new Charles Ray in 'The Girl I Loved'—humorous, whimsical and magnetic as ever, but with a full flowering of dramatic ability to move audiences deeply. The picture sweeps across the screen with striking effect," said the reviewer for the San Francisco Call-Post when this United Artists' release was shown recently at the Granada theatre. "The star translated facts and their implications into a series of thrilling incidents and acted them with great power."

"In 'The Girl I Loved,' based on a little known story of the popular American poet, James Whitcomb Riley, Charles Ray has evolved a drama of powerful appeal," said the critic for the San Francisco Examiner.

"Single Shot Parker" Now Ready

Exclusive Features Offers Tom Mix Thriller For State Right Buyers

EXCLUSIVE Features, Inc., with offices in New York, offer Tom Mix in "Single Shot Parker," for state right buyers. It is a William N. Selig Western production in five reels, adapted from "The Heart of Texas Ryan," Gilson Willet's gripping romance of the borderland.

Mix in the role of a devil-may-care cow puncher on the largest ranch of the Lone Star State comes to the ranch from "nowhere," a man without a country, but proves himself one of the best fellows in the state of Texas.

The picture is said to be a thriller from start to finish and one of the fastest moving ones the popular Western star has ever appeared in. Colonel William N. Selig considers "Single Shot Parker" the greatest five-reel picture he ever produced.

The cast is an exceptionally strong one with Mix in the role of Jack Parker, who turns up the lawless bunch of cattle rustlers after rescuing Texas Ryan, the heroine, from them.

The role of Texas Ryan is played by Bessie Eyton, the belle of the ranch and much sought in marriage. Miss Eyton is said to be eminently suited to the part and during the five reels goes through many hair-raising exploits.

Frank Campeau is "Dice" McAllister, the villain, who under the guise of town Marshall utilizes the law as a cloak to cover up his connection with the band of cattle rustlers. It is Campeau at his best, in a role similar to those in which he played opposite Douglas Fairbanks in some of his biggest successes.

The role of Colonel Ryan, owner of the ranch, is played by George Fawcett, one of the prominent character men of Cecil de Mille productions.

Bessie Eyton is a star in her own right and this season was seen on the coast starring in Oliver Morosco's "Civilian Clothes," one of Broadway's biggest hits.

"Single Shot Parker" was originally announced under the title of "The Heart of Texas Ryan."

Washington Approves "Tents of Allah"

"THE TENTS OF AL-LAH," the E. A. MacManus production, was the feature attraction at the Cosmos Theatre, Washington, last week and proved a great drawing card, according to reports to Associated Exhibitors. Just following the opening of the run, the Washington Herald said:

"One of the best of the sheik pictures of the year, 'The Tents of Allah,' dramatic, beautiful and interesting, with Monte Blue, Mary Alden and Mary Thurman in the leading roles, is being shown at the Cosmos theatre for the first time in Washington this week as one of the big features of the bill.

"It is a romance of Morocco, with an unexpected turn which brings about the happy climax after a number of thrilling episodes. It is well directed and its action moves swiftly and in natural sequence, and there is real drama throughout."

Famous Woman Artist Paints Brownie

A life size painting of Brownie, the Century Wonder Dog, has just been completed by Miss Graziella Boucher of Seattle. Miss Boucher beside being well known for her studies of animals is also a writer for Art Sections of Washington and Oregon newspapers.

The painting which has taken about six months to complete is a splendid study of the clever Century Dog star and copies of it will be used for a press book which Century will issue for Brownie. The portrait which represents Brownie lying in a characteristic pose in the midst of a garden was on exhibition in one of the principal art galleries of Seattle and was pronounced by Percy Taylor, an able judge of animal portraiture in this country and England, as one of the best studies of a dog that he had ever seen.

"Your Friend" Societies are Formed

In several cities throughout the United States special societies are being formed in connection with the showing of the Metro S. L. picture, "Your Friend and Mine." These societies are engaged in pointing out the evils resultant from neglect and inattention on the part of many husbands to their wives, the theme presented in a startling manner in the picture itself.

In several instances theatre parties for the purpose of viewing the picture have been made up by the members, and publicity propaganda in the way of pamphlets and other literature has been issued broadcast throughout the town and State in which the society operates.

The picture is enacted by Willard Mack, Rosemary Theby, Enid Bennett, Allene Ray and other star players.

Tie-Ups on "Masters of Men"

Authentic Picture of Naval Life Has Been Praised by Officers of U. S. Fleet

EXPLOITATION tieups on "Masters of Men" indicate that this Vitagraph super-feature lends itself to more publicity and broader exploitation than even "The Ninety and Nine," released by the same organization. This story of the sea by Morgan Robertson has been accorded the highest praise by United States Navy officers, it is claimed.

"Masters of Men" is a drama dealing with a boy's life on board a man-of-war and before the mast on a deep sea sailing ship. The United States Navy contributed the use of its warships in the making of "Masters of Men" and the fact that naval officers praise it as the most realistic and faithful depiction of naval life that has been screened, is an assurance to the exhibitors and fans of the picture's authenticity, say the producers.

In Minneapolis there was held a parade to which the Navy contributed a Naval Reserve Band and in which the Minneapolis Naval Marine Post No. 472 marched, carrying the ship's bell of the U.S.S. Minneapolis, of Spanish-American War fame. There was a float on which was mounted the 24-sheet and two men dressed as naval blue-jackets boxed. This scene was taken from the picture where Cullen Landis as Halpin wins a decision in a boxing bout on board ship. One hundred thousand persons saw this "Masters of Men" parade.

Adjutant Abbott of the United States Navy Recruiting Station in Los Angeles is lending every cooperation to the theatre showing of "Masters of Men" in that city. He has supplied Vitagraph with various warship equipment such as signal pennants, torpedoes, big gun shells, etc. He will also detail for the theatre a guard of honor during the run of the picture, it is said.

Metro Aids for African Animal Picture

The Metro offices in New York and every Metro exchange is affording every possible aid to the exhibitors in putting Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's "Trailing African Wild Animals" over profitably. A special press sheet is already in the hands of the exchanges and is being distributed among exhibitors.

This press sheet is replete with newspaper stories of feature interest written especially by several New York writers who are experts in animal life, and describes incidents of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson's big game hunt. Special advertising matter of every description calculated to arouse a natural interest in African wild animals is also included. The posters and display ads are of unusual selling power, special effort having been put behind "Trailing African Wild Animals" to make it a success in every way.

The Winchester Arms Company has ordered every branch of its organization to co-operate with every local exhibitor and to that end has had made a special window display, which it has sent out all over the country.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

"The Greatest Menace"

State Rights—Seven Reels
Mayer-Quinn-Resolute Films, Inc.
(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

THE best way to describe this picture is to begin with what would ordinarily be the conclusion by stating that it is entertaining, convincing propaganda against the use of narcotics, clothed in the guise of thrilling melodrama. It is necessarily disagreeable at times for the reason that it is vivid, depicting, as it does, the habits of hopeless drug addicts, showing their haunts and delineating the methods employed by unscrupulous venders, who in turn, depend upon the man "higher up" to negotiate constant supply. It portrays, simultaneously, the touching degeneration of a wholesome, clean-minded young man who is tricked into becoming a victim, tells the story of his new associates and the extent of his becoming involved into a life he wished to write about but never hoped to live. Being a motion picture there is the inevitable satisfactory ending, the regeneration of the lost boy which draws a remarkable comparison and avoids leaving the "bad taste" that otherwise might be the effect. It teems with action, human interest and includes just enough romance to carry the otherwise "down-to-stern reality" happenings.

Robert Gordon in the leading role delivers a perfect performance, in fact almost unbelievable to those who have seen him only in lighter things. The balance of the cast is satisfactory, the direction good and except for a few inconsistencies "The Greatest Menace" is a worth-while attraction, attempting to carry an important message and succeeding with conviction.

The Story—The son of the District Attorney, a happily married youngster, has the desire to become a famous writer about life as it really is. He wishes to expose the desperate evils of the drug habit, and against the advice of his sister, a practicing attorney, he persists in visiting the haunts of addicts for the purpose of gaining facts. The "drug ring" wish to gain the "whip hand" over the District Attorney and plan to make an addict out of his son. He becomes the constant companion of a hopeless woman "dope" and when she, facing death, appeals to him to appease the craving that is driving her mad, he goes forth to get relief. He returns just as she dies and is soon arrested for murder. Without knowing that it is her own brother the attorney seeks the youth, finds it is her own lost brother, negotiates his release and appears in court in his favor. He is found "not guilty" against circumstantial evidence, and is finally restored to his own.

"Crossed Wires"

Universal—4705 Feet

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

WHILE it will no doubt pass muster as a program release, "Crossed Wires" is typical "movie stuff," with its characters acting as people never did in real life, and offering no great opportunity to its star, Gladys Walton.

The idea from which this picture started, that of a socially ambitious "hello-girl" who, through information gleaned at the switchboard, gains admittance to an exclusive ball, had a distinct element of originality. But, once past this point, things drop into a conventional farce comedy groove.

There is a undeniable flippant vitality about Miss Walton that makes interesting at times the most hackneyed sequence, but she deserves better than this story of misunderstandings and lack of sensible explanations. Here is a theme that might have been the basis for a real little human document, but because the obvious path was followed, it fell far short of that.

The action, at times, is in a distinctly slapstick vein, and the work of Harry Gribbon is highly reminiscent of his "slapstick and bladder" days.

On the credit side of the ledger it must be noted that the picture is not without its amusing moments, that it is beautifully photographed and lighted, that the production investiture is satisfactory, that the star appears to good advantage, optically, and that many audiences of fans will probably find no little entertainment in it, even though it fails to strike a convincing note of reality.

Furthermore, the picture offers, it seems to us, a really excellent exploitation tie-up possibility, since most telephone companies are active advertisers these days, and the telephone lends itself to many types of picture promotion.

The Cast

Marcel Murphy.....Gladys Walton
Ralph Benson.....George Stewart
Bellamy Benson.....Tom S. Guise
Mrs. Margaret Benson.....Lillian Langdon
Pat Murphy.....William Robert Daly
Nora Murphy.....Kate Price
Tim Flanagan.....Eddie Gribbon
Madalyn Van Ralston Kemp.....Marie Crisp
Directed by King Baggot. Story by King Baggot. Scenario by Hugh Hoffman.

The Story—Switchboard operator with social ambitions overhears telephone call which enables her to procure invitation to exclusive society ball. After various ludicrous happenings, she is suspected of stealing lavalliere of hostess, but when she confesses deception to elderly host, he protects her. His attitude is misunderstood by her lineman sweetheart, who rouses girl's family. Wild complications ensue, with everyone involved, which are finally straightened out by girl's confession.

Classification—Comedy drama.

Production Highlights—The elaborate ball.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the telephone angle strongly, both in co-operative newspaper advertising and in telephone exploitation.

Drawing Power—Program release, suitable for second class and small town houses.

"Lovebound"

Fox—4407 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE is a "pollyannish" title tacked on to this picture which doesn't belong. Instead of being a sugar-coated romance as its name would indicate, it follows a melodramatic groove and features the blackmailing tactics of a crook who would make an innocent wife pay for being implicated in a crime. Old stuff? Well, it isn't so new, but because it is told inside of five reels and therefore is compact with action it makes a fairly interesting program picture. The author has had some experience as a playwright, and his subject is worked out dramatically.

Here he uses the familiar plot of the district attorney's wife who is frightened into keeping silent because she was an innocent party to a crooked scheme. In building up his story, the author makes the girl ignorant of her father's shady past. He has reformed in prison, but his erstwhile partner in crime bobs up unredeemed. To save her father from being denounced she allows herself to be an accomplice in a jewelry theft without realizing the consequences. She tries to tell her fiancé, the district attorney, but he refuses to listen. Instead he makes her his wife.

There's your plot, which reaches its climax when the crook demands hush money at a fashionable reception. Her happiness is in jeopardy until she confesses everything to her husband. In the subsequent fracas the criminal is killed. The jeweler is reimbursed and the story ends as it should.

The idea has been used so often that there is little or no suspense suggested. But because it is compact and moving it will hold the attention. We are heartily in favor of program pictures being released in five reels or less. There is no excuse for any feature, made per schedule, carrying excess footage. Fox and Universal are showing the way in this respect. "Lovebound" needs a different title. It is acted in a first rate manner by Shirley Mason, Albert Roscoe, Richard Tucker and Joseph Girard.

The Cast

Bess Belwyn.....Shirley Mason
John Mobley.....Albert Roscoe
Paul Meredith.....Richard Tucker
David Belwyn.....Joseph Girard
Stephen Barker.....Edward Martindale
Detective Hahn.....Fred Kelsey

By George Scarborough. Scenario by Jules Furthman and Josephine Quirk. Directed by Henry Otto. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Daughter of criminal who reforms in prison becomes engaged to district attorney. Her father's erstwhile accomplice intrigues her in scheme of which she is innocent. She attempts to break engagement but her fiancé refuses to listen. The accomplice of her father demands hush money and in the subsequent fracas he is killed. She makes a complete confession to the prosecutor who has become her husband and love triumphs.

Classification—Crook melodrama involving an innocent girl who becomes victim of blackmailer.

Production Highlights—The competent work by star, Roscoe and Tucker. The climax when crook is killed.

Exploitation Angles—The star and the other players are well known. Feature them. Tell that the picture carries a satisfactory melodramatic plot which holds the interest. Get out your copy in the form of teaser questions such as these: "If you were an innocent party to a crooked scheme would you tell your wife or husband?" "Would you make a clean breast of an error in your life and suffer the loss of your fiancé, or would you keep silent, trusting that he might never know?"

Drawing Power—A good program picture

"The Prodigal Son"

Stoll Film Company, Ltd.—About Ten Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS adaptation of Hall Caine's vital story of a house divided against itself—of man's inhumanity to man—is the best English production, in our opinion, which has ever been screened. The director has carried out the salient points of the sombre tale, embellishing it with the necessary detail, and carrying out the spirit of the original in a manner which should prove highly gratifying to the author. It is a symphony in gray, naturally, since its major action takes place in the bleak waste-lands of Iceland.

But because it doesn't carry any balancing humor is no reason why it should be disregarded as unsuitable screen material. On the other hand, Caine's stories are always vital. There is backbone—dramatic backbone and substance behind each one of them—and "The Prodigal Son" is especially strong in spiritual quality and dramatic fibre. The figures are unusually realistic and so is the story through which they are piloted. But the English directors have not yet learned to simplify their action. This tale told with sharp dramatic strokes and with less emphasis on explaining every detail would have stood out like a cameo. As it is it resembles in its stark realism some of the fine productions which have been offered by the Swedish Biograph. Pictorially it comes up to the American standards—the lighting and photography being exceptionally fine.

Its plot will linger in the memory because it soars on a tragic theme, telling a tale of a weakling son who steals the love of his brother's sweetheart. This precipitates a real dramatic foundation which releases deep interest and ever-increasing suspense. Even burdened with some extraneous detail the picture is powerfully compelling. One watches the burden of the wronged brother who carries his cross on his back; one watches the degeneration of the other and the crumbling of his house as he sows and reaps the whirlwind. There is another conflict too—of sister against sister—one married to the weakling, the other attempting to steal his love. Tragedy shadows the prodigal in his hectic flight to London, Monte Carlo and Paris. But his regeneration brings him back to the fold and he expiates his sin in his acceptance of divine guidance. Having become famous and rich, his money is turned over to his hard-pressed people and happiness breaks through the clouds.

There is a deep well of pathos in this graphic story of human frailties. It is completely absorbing and competently acted by an English cast. Particularly good is the performance of the wronged sheep-herder. The atmosphere is splendid. We recommend "The Prodigal Son" as something off the beaten path—a picture vivid and vital, carrying tone and quality.

The Players

Cast comprised of English players unknown to American audiences.

By Hall Caine. Directed by A. E. Coleby.

The Story—Factor and governor of Iceland pledge their children to marriage. The governor's younger son returns home and steals the love of the girl and marries her, leaving his brother heart-broken. They are happy until the wife's sister intrudes and attempts to win the affection of the weakling husband. The birth of the child cements the love of the couple, but the mother dies, and after committing forgery the young husband is disinherited. He travels abroad and becomes famous and rich and compensates eventually for his crimes.

Classification—Dramatic cross-section of domestic strife in two families

Production Highlights—The fine production. The atmosphere. The competent acting. The compelling interest and suspense.

Exploitation Angles—Should be presented in a dignified manner—

Drawing Power—Suitable for high class clientele.

MR. AND MRS. MARTIN JOHNSON have a remarkably fine screen record of wild animal life in British East Africa. It is distinctly worth while and entertaining as well as instructive. Seekers after something different for their patrons will find it here. The ideal way to present it, however, will be with another feature, preferably a subject of a light comedy nature. Put on in this way it will make a great bill. Offered alone it tends to become monotonous because of the sameness throughout. It is a constant parading of wild animal closeups, and now and then a thrilling view of Mr. or Mrs. Johnson shooting a savage rhino, lion or other inhabitant of the jungle. The killing of a lion in full view of the audience, the feeling of a great black rhinoceros and the elephant stampede at the close are quite thrilling. These are all genuine shots. There is no staging in this picture. One sees the hunters right in the picture, something rarely seen in hunt films.

From a photographic viewpoint the pictures are unusually beautiful. In fact the background of jungle country is quite fascinating. The views around the lost Lake Paradise would have been great stuff for a scenic subject alone. There are a number of shots of the desert peoples, of innumerable animals in their native haunts, some exceptionally fine closeups of giraffes, zebras, elephants, lions, rhinos, etc. As for monkeys, well we'd hate to let an organ grinder loose in one of the scenes showing thousands of these ancestors of ours.

Mrs. Johnson is the heroine of the picture. She is the pluckiest woman in the films. She even runs after elephants and we wonder what she would have done if she caught them. The pictures were obtained through the use of blinds erected in Never Never Land and the party went through much hardship undoubtedly to obtain them. They are a wonderful record for future generations. Exhibitors booking them should get after the schools and natural history societies and get their co-operation in boosting them. But if you want to get the full box office value, put them on with another feature.

The Story—Treats of the hazardous exploits of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson

Classification—Series of absorbing and interesting pictures of wild animal life in the wilds of British East Africa.

Production Highlights—The marvellous collection of highly interesting shots. The thrills. The long-focus shots of the jungle beasts. The elephant stampede. The close-ups.

Exploitation Angles—The Johnsons have certainly put over their stuff. Play this up as unusual picture of jungle life in British East Africa. Feature the marvelous shots. Get out copy on the Johnsons and how they never have failed in giving the screen highly interesting entertainment. Use all the stills. Cooperate with your local zoo or zoological society in getting exhibits, etc., for your lobby.

Drawing Power—Novel and big enough for first runs everywhere.

"Slander the Woman"

First National—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

THERE is one big thing in this one's favor. It is a good attraction for summer entertainment. When the mercury is soaring around 100 in the shade, put this picture on, and it will help cool off your patrons. Scenically "Slander the Woman" ranks with the best "Canadian Northwest" films ever made and we all know that there have been several. In fact this Allen Holubar offering follows the formula very closely. All that is lacking is the famous Royal Mounted daredevil himself. Frankly designed for thrills, this melodrama of the snow country, will satisfy those seeking spinal quiverings rather than brain exercising. The action starts out with a shooting and there is another later on, accompanied by a stabbing. All of which will please the red-blooded boys who like their stuff rough.

The story aims to show that circumstantial evidence is all wrong, but the way the plot goes on to prove this fact isn't at all convincing. To take a girl out of the "400" and put her down in the Hudson Bay district where she is made to appear as a "gun-woman" ever ready on the trigger or to lash a brute who is beating his Indian wife, is asking one to stretch the imagination to the breaking point. It is to Dorothy Phillips' credit, however, that she works like a Trojan to put her characterization over. Miss Phillips looks very attractive on the screen.

The opening scenes of the skating carnival, the courtroom and the trial and the interiors in the Desmarest home are well done. When the action switches to the "white frontier" we are given some striking exterior shots and a full quota of dramatic moments. The comedy relief, as it is called, has been dragged in by the tail and could well be eliminated throughout much to the improvement of the story. The supporting cast has been well selected and includes some well known players. Technically "Slander the Woman" is well high flawless.

Adapted from "The White Frontier," by Jeffrey Deprend. Scenario by Violet Clark. Directed by Allen Holubar.

The Story—Yvonne becomes innocently involved in a scandal. The trial takes away her good name and honor. Then she flees to the Hudson Bay country, where she tries to forget. A trapper is found in their lodge. He becomes their friend and protector. Meanwhile the judge has learned of the injustice of his stand and goes north to seek forgiveness. Later he is accused of the crime. It's a case of circumstantial evidence. All comes out well, however, and in the end the judge gets Yvonne.

Classification—A Canadian woods romance that lacks only the Mounted Police.

The killing of a mountain lion as it is about to leap on Yvonne. The beautiful winter backgrounds. Molleur's confession that he is a murderer. The appearance of the judge at the lodge.

"The Critical Age"

Shipman-Ottawa-Hodkinson—1500 Feet
(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE may not be much substance to this picture if one considers it from a dramatic standpoint, but through a splendid treatment of its salient points, coupled with a first rate production and a capital interpretation, "The Critical Age" will prove entertaining to every audience that sees it. The sponsors deserve credit for telling it inside of five reels, thus heightening the action and making the scenes compact.

But we don't see the reason for calling it by its present title in view of the fact that the original story was known far and wide as "Glengarry School Days." Perhaps they felt that it might not interest the customers who had emerged from adolescence. Some title more suitable than "The Critical Age" should have been employed. This is the only shaft of criticism which we can hurl at this neat little production, which is strong in atmosphere—which tells a story of political conflict without any tedium being suggested as is often the case in this type of plot.

The original yarn carried quite a school-room background. It has not been neglected here. It serves here in introducing two highly adaptable players in James Harrison and Pauline Garon—as well as establishing the romance. The political sequences follow and bring forth the efforts of a rich Parliament member and his son to put over a bill which would dislodge the homesteaders. The romance carries on apace through the efforts of this son to win the daughter of another lawmaker from a young homesteader. The latter is successful in scenes which carry on with sufficient color and movement—scenes which take in the girl's rescue from the river and a mad ride in a motor car by the champion of the farmers who casts his vote in the nick of time.

"The Critical Age" must be catalogued as light entertainment, but it is thoroughly pleasing and capably conceived and executed in every department. James Harrison makes a likeable fellow of the young farmer. The director deserves a little censure for exaggerating the sartorial make-up of the player. Pauline Garon plays the heroine with charming spirit—the spirit of a gay, little madcap. A neat story not burdened with false heroics.

The Cast

The Story—Son of a rich parliament member in Canada attempts to win the love of daughter of another member of House away from farmer's son. The latter is fighting the hero to prevent the passage of a bill destined to embarrass the farmers. The young man of the soil outwits the parliament member and his son, wins the girl and aids her father to block the passage of the bill.

Classification—Political conflict embroidered with romance. Adaptation of author's "Glengarry School Days."

Production Highlights—The good work contributed by James Harrison and Pauline Garon. The character work by Harlan Knight. The adequate atmosphere. The spirit of book which has been retained in picture version. The school-room episode. The capable direction.

Exploitation Angles—The short length of feature will appeal to picturegoers who have been fed up on too much footage of late. The author and the popularity of book a number of years ago. Get out the younger set. Run with a good selection of short subjects should prove a neat bill for patrons.

Drawing Power—Should draw in program houses anywhere.

"The Remittance Woman"

F. B. O.—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY resort to the dream situation to save this picture from being utterly impossible. As it is most of the footage is given up in an attempt to convince the spectator that he is looking at something approaching reality. Achmed Abdullah is an author who has a knack of fashioning interesting stories. Perhaps upon the printed page "The Remittance Woman" intrigued the imagination with its proper supply of adjectives. But on the screen it is nothing else but a hectic tale which even the dream situation cannot save from being catalogued as "old school" hokum.

It features a lot of Chinese atmosphere which bears a strong resemblance to a wild serial—and Ethel Clayton, always a sincere actress, is thoroughly out of place trying to make anything out of her role of a young woman who has a penchant for running up bills against dad's account. When he threatens to send her to China she is happy because her fiancé is planning to go there on a business trip. So her Chinese maid gives her a little vase which is supposed to be some sort of sacred symbol—and which really furnishes all of the hokum because the Chinks, superstitious about such relics, are determined to gain possession of it even if they have to kill everybody in the cast including themselves.

The action shifts to China and becomes so wild that it really becomes fascinating at times. And when disaster looms ahead for the traveler from the Occident, the fiancé happens on the scene and rescues her from the wily Orientals. Then the girl wakes up to discover that it is all a dream—and a pretty hectic dream at that.

The titling is of an amateurish quality, but no title writer could be expected to heighten this story which smacks of the nickelodion days in theme and treatment. The sets and atmosphere are first rate, but the money used in creating them should have been used in getting suitable material for an actress who can play real dramatic roles. The idea is sound enough but it should have been treated with appreciation for its soundness instead of relying upon the hokum of a dream.

The Cast

Marie Campbell.....Ethel Clayton
George Holt.....Rockcliffe Fellows
Moses d'Acosta.....Mario Carrillo

By Achmed Abdullah. Scenario by Carol Warren. Directed by Wesley Ruggles.

The Story—Treats of a young woman who is threatened to be sent to China by her father for her talent in running up bills. The dream situation is employed in getting her to China where she encounters romance and danger.

Classification—Melodramatic romance featuring dream situation.

Production Highlights—The sincere effort of star to appear convincing. The Chinese atmosphere. The good types.

Exploitation Angles—Might work up good teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—Might interest dyed-in-the-wool fans in small program houses.

"The Last Moment"

J. Parker Read Production-Goldwyn—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

HERE is a combination society and sea tale that is all to the mustard. It should please those jaded folks who complain of the sameness in our screen fare. The picture is fortunate in having a cast of unusual excellence. Henry Hull has the role of a timid bookworm who is transformed into a real he-man when he is shanghaied in a party of three, aboard a bootlegger's craft. His acting here is flawless and his appearance should find a hearty welcome anywhere. Then there is Louis Wolheim who has the role of a ship captain and never a more burly brute has been pictured on our shadow stage. Doris Kenyon has the leading feminine role and she rises to emotional heights when occasion requires—which is often.

The big thrill of the picture is supplied by a wild ape which breaks loose from its cage during a storm at sea and starts in to send the crew to the happy hunting grounds, or rather to a watery grave. There is a real dramatic moment when Alice Winthrop tells Hercules Napoleon of her love for him and the heretofore timid fellow believing "the last moment" has arrived, suddenly finds himself a brave man, faces the beast when it hoves into sight and comes off the master of the situation. This wild ape, portrayed, of course, by a man, is one terrible looking sight and we'll guarantee that the way the director has handled the "brute" will supply sufficient excitement for anyone's evening of entertainment.

The feature is admirably mounted, beautifully photographed and flawlessly directed. Oh, yes, there's a monk in the picture that deserves mention. The simian does some almost human work. "The Last Moment" is pepful! It's worth while!

The Cast

Hercules Napoleon.....Henry Hull
Alice Winthrop.....Doris Kenyon
"The Finn".....Louis Wolheim
Harry Gaines.....Louis Calhoun
By Jack Boyle. Directed by J. Parker Read.
Scenario by J. Clarkson Miller. Photographed by J. O. Taylor.

The Story—Hercules Napoleon, too timid to seek adventure beyond dusty books, is called upon to aid his little pal, a bootblack, rescue his father from "The Red Lamp," a waterfront dive. However, on his mission there he, his sweetheart and a friend are shanghaied. During a terrific storm at sea, a wild ape held captive by the captain in expectation of receiving a fortune for his sale, escapes from his cage and commences to wipe out the crew. When the beast comes after Hercules, Alice confesses her love, the man in him comes to the top, he faces the brute which retires. However, the ape holds the three captive and is only conquered when Hercules and the girl try to make land and the hero goes after the ape, dragging him down in the water, where an Abalone ends his career. Hercules swims to his Alice and all ends well.

Classification—An intensely dramatic drama of the sea and society, possessing a full quota of thrills.

Production Highlights—The excellent cast. The thrills supplied by the ape aboard ship. The battle in the water between Hercules and the beast. The under-water shots. The camera work. The scenes at sea and aboard ship during the storm. The artistic interiors. The comedy in the first part of the picture.

Exploitation Angles—If it is possible to dress a man up like an ape and have another man lead him through the streets with appropriate ads, such a stunt would be very appropriate to boost "The Last Moment." Play up the distinguished actors in the cast and its thrills.

The title could be used in co-operation with stores.

Drawing Power—This picture is an excellent bet for most any house. It should do business anywhere because of its novelty.

Unusually Simple Set Piece for Effective Stage Presentation

Description of Fan Employed by E. L. Hyman, Mark Strand, Brooklyn

A PRESENTATION that has been used by various live-wire exhibitors throughout the country since Edward L. Hyman first put it in at the Brooklyn Mark Strand some time ago has as its background, or atmospheric suggestion, a huge set-piece fan. The field of possibilities with this set piece is very wide, as it may serve as the basis of an idea for a prologue for pictures with an Oriental theme or Colonial setting or for a presentation which has no connection with the picture. It serves equally well for pantomime, dance, vocal renditions or orchestral offerings, thus making its worth almost 100 per cent. as a property which may be introduced from time to time with different color effects and placing.

Uses for Fan

As used by Hyman in Brooklyn, the fan stood about 11 feet high by twice as wide. It was placed directly in the center of the presentation stage and was backed up by a dark plush cyclorama. As shown in the accompanying cut, a small taboret, or stool, was placed to the right and left at the tips of the fan, with an incense vase on each. On a line with the top of the fan a string of lanterns was hung. This is indeed a simple setting, but one that, with the proper lighting, costuming and showmanship moulds into an artistic and effective presentation that is hard to beat. The richest effects may be gained, in fact, with the more simple settings. A presentation should not be cluttered up with properties that are not needed. As explained before in a previous article, when the advanced methods of lighting are employed the necessity of detail is eliminated. The latter

"Back Stage" Series to Be Enlarged

THE "back stage" articles appearing in Motion Picture News from week to week are written solely from the angle of service to the exhibitors.

It is planned to enlarge and diversify the series until every angle of presentation is covered and to this end the cooperation of a number of prominent exhibitors, who have made a specialty of atmospheric prologues, and special numbers, have been secured.

Motion Picture News will also welcome suggestions in this connection.

has really no place in the modern motion picture house. Detail is excellent in a Belasco play, or probably any other play, but it has shown conclusively that the motion picture house may stand upon its own merit and individuality and progressiveness through art in lighting and presentation minus the detail. Taste and showmanship are the main essentials.

Simple to Construct

The construction of the fan is likewise a simple proposition. The frame may be made from any lumber one inch square, cut to the desired length. By fastening these "ribs" in the half-circular base (also of wood) by means of shutter bolts the fan may be folded the same as a real fan, thus making it easier to handle and using less space in storing as well as conserving the surface while not in use. The "ribs" are covered with transparent canvas; or, if all lighting is to be from the front or sides, with oil cloth. The sign painter then paints the designs on, running a stripe down that part of the "ribs" which shows. With canvas the fan may be lighted from behind as well as the front, as was done by Hyman. Note the circular cut of the canvas, the top side slightly scalloped to break the monotony of the straight line. This set-piece is placed about three feet in front of the cyclorama, having a brace behind the base to secure it to the floor. Wiring may come under the cyclorama and run up the "ribs," thus concealing the lighting. The front floods and spots may be thrown from the sides for the purpose of avoiding conflict with the spots which are trained upon the figures. In lighting this fan, or any properties in a presentation, Hyman follows the rule that it is atmosphere, a background, an adornment, a suggestion, an accompaniment, and must not be played up with prominence that detracts from the vocalist, dancer or pantomimist. If, on the other hand, Hyman used this fan alone, without figures, with an orchestral number, he would light it more prominently to center all eyes on it, letting the ears take care of the music. A Japanese fan such as this might be used alone for an overture of "Madam Butterfly," selections from "The Mikado" or for other music in this line.

Color for Lighting

The colors from which combinations may be selected include amber, orange, red, magenta, dark violet, light blue, medium blue, dark blue, medium and dark green and moonlight blue. It will be found these give the

Original Organ Novelty on Marr & Colton Concert Instrument

Reprint from the American Organist
By Geo. A. Bouchard, Organist

VARIOUS organists use various methods to entertain their public. I find that my audience enjoys best the story form of entertainment. It is astonishing the amount of good music they will absorb if presented in a novel manner. The beauties of art need but to be understood to be enjoyed. The story should be told in a simple, direct manner, consistent, picturesque, imaginative, and done artistically.

My own story, "The Indians of Niagara," is built along these lines and has proved immensely popular. I had my audience listening in rapt attention to Cadman's "Land of the Sky Blue Water" and "Moon Drops Low," when otherwise they would have walked away. It is sufficiently flexible to include any other material needed; at least it furnishes suggestions, ideas.

The plot for my "Dances of America" has historical interest and is absolutely American, as most of my novelties are. We simply reach down into the treasure house of our folk-songs, those of the past and those in the making.

As to slides, I've found that for the theater audience the most effective way to get the meaning of the music across is to flash the story on slides, illustrated or not, as required. (Consult the Standard Slide Co.)

Another subject of mine is entitled "A Romance of Niagara Falls." The story deals with local characters. Little Buddy is being rocked in the cradle while his colored nurse from Suspension Bridge (local) sings the charming lullaby, "Mighty Lak' a Rose." The verse is played, with the words on slides.

Later we see him going to school and I played "School Days." A few years later he has a sweetheart and I play "The Sweetest Story Ever Told." Just when everything is going fine, war is declared; Buddy must go. The Reveille is sounded. They arrive in France, "Over There"; a Battle rages, Battle Music; Buddy loses his pal, "Pal o' Mine"; he returns home victorious, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home"; he is met at Falls Organ console of the three manual Marr and Colton organ, Strand theatre, Niagara Falls, N.Y.

Street Station (local) and serenaded by the Shredded Wheat Band (local); they march down Falls Street, Sousa's "Stars and Stripes," to Prospect Point, here he takes a look at beautiful Niagara (roar on Tympani); returning he is escorted through town to the tune of the Eagle Fife and Drum Corps (local); they pass the wonderful Strand

Theatre; just then the Niagara Trust Company's clock chimes the hour (chimes); Buddy soon arrives at his Sweetheart's home, her name is Margie (popular song); one year later—"Rock-a-Bye Baby." This novelty act took the house by storm.

"The Dances of America" proved to be entertaining, historically instructive, and of absorbing interest, though in a light vein. We deal with American dances exclusively. One of the earliest is "Turkey in the Straw"; in due time came the Cake Walk; then the One Step; then the Fox Trot. We digress to show the influence of Hawaiian music on the American dance. The sliding effect on the Ukuleles was promptly appropriated by the ever awake Americans, tacked on to the Fox Trot, when behold, Jazz was born! This sliding effect is illustrated in a popular melody called "Southern Moonlight." The similarity between this number and Hawaiian is striking. The old-fashioned waltz is played; then the slow waltz now in vogue; the Hawaiian effect is added to the slow waltz. This novelty closed with that big dance success, "Dancing Fool," with illustrated slides, with the words on them, closing full organ. (Good for ten bows!)

To do this particular line an organist should possess originality and constructive ability or he is out of luck. One is expected to think up a new one every week. There's the rub.

Power; Its Measurements and Relations

Lesson V—Part 1

ELECTRICAL power is the result of the combined effect of current and voltage at any particular instant. Where neither the current nor voltage are changing, the power, which depends upon these two quantities as just mentioned, is also constant.

Power in D. C. Circuits

Thus, in the case of a direct current circuit, no change in voltage, hence current occurs, unless a switch is opened or the circuit is interrupted in some other manner. Since this is so, the power, as shown in previous lessons, is obtained at any instant by simply multiplying the current by the voltage, thus:

$$P = E \times I$$

Suppose we apply the wave forms used in showing the action of alternating currents and voltages to this case also. The result will be as shown in Fig. 41. Here a voltage of 3 volts is constantly driving a current of 2 amperes against the resistance of the circuit. The power throughout one electrical revolution of 360 degrees will also be constant and is obtained by multiplying the current by the voltage. Thus, at points A, B, C and D corresponding with the 90, 180, 270 and 360 degree positions the power is equal to 3×2 or 6 watts.

Power in A. C., Resistance Circuit

In an alternating current circuit containing nothing but resistance, since the voltage, hence current, is periodically changing, the power must also be periodically changing. Now, in a pure resistance circuit, as has often been said before, the voltage and current are in phase, and if this is so, then the power, which is a result of these two quantities, must also be in phase. The word phase is never used when speaking of power, but it is here used in order to point out the relation.

When multiplying the current by the voltage to obtain the power, we find that during one-half of the cycle both the current and voltage are positive (+), while during the next half of the cycle they are both of the opposite sign, Fig. 42. Since these signs play an important part in determining what the power shall be, an explanation of their use will be given.

a plus sign $\times$ a plus sign = + a plus sign $\times$ a minus sign = - a minus sign $\times$ a minus sign = +

As an example:

$$\begin{aligned} (+3) \times (+3) &= +9 \\ (+3) \times (-3) &= -9 \\ (-3) \times (-3) &= +9 \end{aligned}$$

Referring again to Fig. 42, we see that if these rules are applied to the plus and minus waves, no change in the sign of the resulting power wave will result. That is, the power, while always changing in amount, will always have the plus sign before it. This, of course, applies only in the case of pure resistance circuits. Thus, at 90 degrees the voltage is +3 and the current is +2, so that the power is equal to +6 watts. At the 180-degree position the current is 0 and the voltage is also 0. So the power is $0 \times 0 = 0$.

Power in A. C., Inductive Circuits

In the case of a circuit containing nothing but reactance, we know that the current lags the applied voltage by 90 degrees. This, of course, changes the relations very much, as shown by Fig. 43.

At the 0 degree position the voltage is zero, but the current has its greatest value. The power is zero because if a number is multiplied by zero the result is also zero. At 45 degrees the voltage is plus, while the current is minus, so their product will be minus, as shown. At 90 degrees the current is zero and the voltage is greatest, but the power is zero. At 120 degrees the current and voltage are both plus, so the power will also be plus, etc. We see from this that the power is first minus, then plus, then minus again, etc. Now, what does minus power mean? It simply means that during that part of the cycle power is being pumped back into the line, while the next instant when it is plus the same amount is being drawn out of the line again. The net result is that no power at all is being supplied, yet current is flowing and voltage is applied. In other words, we have all the necessary machinery and do all the work of driving the generator and yet receive no power in return. Hence in a purely inductive circuit the power is zero.

Power in A. C., Series Circuit

Suppose resistance and reactance are placed in series in the same circuit. The current, voltage and power relations will then be as shown in Fig. 44. If the amount of reactance is small compared with the resistance, the angle of lag will also be small.

MAJOR FA SYSTEM

REMOTE CONTROL

After You Agree—that exceptional theater lighting as used by the most successful theaters everywhere is profitable, adding both to the permanent prestige of the house and to its immediate profits—

It Is But A Step—

to the unanimous choice of a Major System of Theater Lighting Control to give those beautiful lighting effects both on the stage and in the auditorium. The reason is not that well over one hundred of the country's most magnificent theaters are Major Equipped,—but that the Major System is the most practical for all sizes and types of theaters; it embodies all of the better features of all other methods and extends numerous advantages not obtained in any other system, method, or switchboard arrangement. It does more for you at less ultimate cost than other kinds and profits you more at the box office.

The Major System is of unit construction, extremely flexible in both construction and operation, occupies less stage space, is noiseless and flashless, capable of extended remote control for any desired number of points and with any desired grouping of lights. It cannot injure the electrician or anyone else, neither can it damage itself by being carelessly handled. There are many other points of superiority too numerous to mention here.

If you are interested in the equipping of a new theater or the reconstruction of an old one you should have "The Control of Lighting in Theaters" a new and elaborate book on the subject. Sent Free upon request.

Now we have just seen that the power in a circuit containing all resistance is positive and hence all useful, whereas the power in a circuit containing nothing but reactance is alternately plus and minus, with the result that average power is zero. Hence in a circuit containing large resistance and little reactance we might expect only a small power loss due to the bad effects of reactance. That this is so is shown by Fig. 44.

At certain points, such as at A, the current and voltage have opposite signs and so the power is minus. At the other points the signs are both the same and so the power is plus. So we see that the more reactance there is present in a circuit the greater will be the non-useful power.

Power Factor

The amount of this non-useful power can be determined by what is known as the power factor of the circuit. It is the actual power divided by the apparent power, or, to express it as an equation:

$$\text{Power Factor} = \frac{\text{Actual Power}}{\text{Apparent Power}}$$

Thus, if 100 volts were driving 20 amperes through a circuit the apparent power would be $100 \times 20 = 2000$ watts. If we took a watt-meter and measured the power, however, we might only measure 1,600 watts. The Power Factor would then be

$$\text{P.F.} = \frac{1600}{2000} = 0.8, \text{ or } 80\%$$

The power factor can never be greater than one (or 100%). The simple power equation, taking into account power factor, would appear as follows:

$$P = EI \times \text{P.F.}$$

Thus a 110 volt, 1 kilowatt motor (single phase) having a power factor of 0.7 would require $\frac{1.0}{0.7} = 0.43$ kw of power to drive it

(This assumes 100% efficiency). The line current for this motor would accordingly be

$$\frac{1430 \text{ watts}}{110} = 12.9 \text{ amperes.}$$

If the efficiency of this particular motor was 80% the power necessary to drive it would be $\frac{1.43 \text{ kw}}{0.8} = 1.8 \text{ kw}$. The line current in this case would be $\frac{1800 \text{ watts}}{110} = 16.4$ amperes.

In order to correct the bad effects of low power factor, power companies use synchronous condensers which give a leading current and so offset, to a certain extent, the lagging current due to reactance loads connected to the lines. It is for this reason that many power companies say that the projection room shall not use equipment having a power factor of less than 0.8.

Low power factor simply means that all the necessary equipment must be used and all the work done to secure the power, but no power is obtained in return.

Takoma Theatre Nearing Completion

The Takoma theatre, located at Takoma Park, a suburb of Washington, with drawing population of 12,000, will be completed and thrown open to the public about Decoration Day. The theatre is thoroughly modern, with 750 seats on the main floor and the equal of any theatre of its size in Washington. The total investment is about $150,000, owners and operators being The Takoma Theatre Corporation; W. G. Platt, president. John J. Zink is the architect. Policy will be motion pictures, but provision has been made to install stake and dressing rooms later on if policy should change to the spoken drama or vaudeville.

New Quarters for Projection Society

The American Projection Society, Inc., have after many months waiting secured quarters more in keeping with their requirements at 304 West Fifty-eighth Street, New York, having taken over the palatial premises formerly occupied by the Indian Head Club. The entire second floor will be used as a meeting and lecture room, and will have all facilities for the testing and trying out of apparatus for the benefit of the members.

A feature of the members' social room is that it is completely installed in weathered oak, with full-timbered ceiling and panelled walls, with provision made for the showing of transparencies, lighted from behind, in each panel, the lighting system consisting of three large domes suspended below stained glass squares, which in turn are lighted from above. The installation of this room cost over $6,000, but it is well worth it.

They now have a home where they can without loss of dignity invite anyone, and where the important work of the society may be carried on under the most favorable conditions. Much credit is due Mr. C. R. Wood, Jr., and Mr. Charles Heffernan for the excellent taste displayed in their selection of these convenient premises.

Casino Theatres to Enlarge

A. Juran, manager of the Casino theatres in Ybor City and West Tampa, has convinced his directors that he must have more room at once. They have bought three lots next to the Ybor City house and will enlarge the house a little later, but for the present the plans are to do away with the stage, which has a depth of 40 feet, and place the screen upon the back wall. Then, by extending the balcony they will increase the capacity of the house about 400 seats.—Leslie.

G-E Motion Picture Projection Apparatus

Success is so dependent upon the equipment of a modern motion picture theater that careless selection in this department would be a blunder of far reaching consequences.

G-E Compensarcs furnish direct current for the projection arc from an alternating current supply. They insure steady, flickerless illumination and are safe, easy to operate, economical and reliable.

G-E Incandescent Lamp Projectors give excellent results at a minimum of cost in theaters having a main floor seating capacity up to 1000 and a throw not exceeding 120 feet with a picture not over 16 feet wide.

G-E High Intensity Arcs give twice the illumination on the screen that can be obtained by the use of low intensity lamps and the light approximates daylight quality.

G-E High Intensity Arc

G-E Projection Apparatus is of assured dependability and progressive design. It can be obtained through G-E offices or distributors everywhere. Write us for detailed information.

best effects. This permits the elimination of lemon in favor of amber; leaves out medium and dark amber in favor of orange, and discards light and dark red because the contrast between them and the red is not enough to cause their use. The magenta is between rose pink and purple.

Another artistic effect that may be gained in using the fan, although a little more costly, is to make only the designs transparent, say one or two to each panel, and light each transparency from behind, using a different colored light for each. If these designs are exceptionally unique, or have special significance, the effect would be heightened by dimming of all lights in front and leaving only the design silhouetted. Again, if the designs of the fan are treated with radium paint and all lights are dimmed out the phosphorescent glow in the darkness is striking. If dancers have costumes outlined with material treated with the radium paint the effect should "get a rise" out of any audience. Hyman was the first to present a specialty of that kind to the people of Brooklyn—he started them talking about something new and the results were well worth the time and effort he put into it.

With invisible wires at the right and left tips of this set-piece fan it could be made to close slowly, folding up toward the center, and as each panel closed a surprise behind it could be brought to light, say such as girls' heads through the cyclorama made up to represent flowers. This would be especially appropriate with a song that brought names of flowers into it or a song about various types of girls or of girls of various countries. An enterprising showman could no doubt get a half dozen of his home beauties to appear in a tableau of that sort, turning a specialty into a box office asset if given the right sort of publicity and handling.

New Theatre for Hyannis, Mass.

A house to seat 1,000 people is to be erected in time for the summer rush at the corner of Main and Sea Streets, Hyannis, for the Hyannis Theatre, Inc. Plans for the structure were drawn up by J. Williams Beal Sons of Boston, cooperating with L. Frank Paine of Hyannis. The contract for construction has been awarded to C. A. Batson & Co. of Brooklyn, Mass., and the work is to start at once. The theatre will be managed by George R. Moore, who has had much experience in managing theatres at Hyannis and Miami, Fla.

The building is to have a 66-foot frontage on Main Street and will be 175 feet in depth. It is to be of the English type, with exterior finish of stucco and half timber. The interior will be finished to show the wood framing and truss work, and will be finished in natural stain. The front of the theatre provides room for two summer shops, and space will be available on the second floor for tea rooms and studios.

While the house is built primarily for the showing of motion pictures, the stage will be equipped and dressing rooms provided to permit the presentation of local theatricals. The architectural features are so planned as to make a distinct addition to the exclusive section of Hyannis in which the site is located, inasmuch as these places are yearly growing more and more artistic in their nature and appearance.—Spencer.

The Wisconsin Nearing Completion

Work is rapidly progressing on Milwaukee's new million and a half dollar house. The substructure of the theatre, which will have a seating capacity of 3,500, is practically complete. C. W. and G. L. Rapp are the architects of the Tivoli theatre in Chicago, and will make the Wisconsin similar. The exterior will be of terra cotta, six stories high, and the interior will hold a beautiful mezzanine floor and grand stairway. The stage will measure 32 feet and the entire building will be fireproof. The basement of the building will be given over to a recreation and amusement floor, bowling alleys, etc. There will be a handsome roof garden and the remainder of the building will comprise shops and offices. The theatre will be exclusively a first-run house.—Pollak.

For New York Projectionists

Under the provisions of a bill introduced in the New York State Senate seeking to amend the general city law relative to miniature picture apparatus, it is provided that any person of 18 years of age or over may register for the purpose of operating such miniature apparatus, using only an inclosed incandescent electric light. Application for registration must be filed with the Secretary of State, the fee being $1. The applicant must present the testimonials of two or more citizens as to his character and intelligence. Only slow-burning film can be used in the miniature machines. The act is to take effect immediately.—Grant.

Merrimac Square Theatre Reopened

New England Theatres, Inc., reopened the Merrimac Square theatre at Lowell, Mass., after rebuilding this popular house at a cost of almost $150,000. The alterations include a new balcony, new lobbies, new seats and new stage settings. The seating capacity has been increased to 1,800. The improvements in the Merrimac Square theatre have made this one of the finest theatres in New England. This theatre will be the home of Paramount Pictures in Lowell.

DURABILITY

DURABILITY, or wearing quality, and photographic excellence are the points by which release prints should be judged. Producers, directors and cinematographers must be assured that their combined artistry and effort is adequately and accurately transmitted to the screen by the laboratory handling negatives and prints. But distributors and exhibitors require all this and more. They are justified in demanding release prints whose photographic quality not only is above criticism, but prints which will stand up under the hard usage given every popular picture.

SOME of the west's foremost producers have found these requirements best satisfied by STANDARD PRINTS. STANDARD PRINTS not only retain all the photographic artistry caught by the camera, but they out-wear other prints because they are made under ideal laboratory conditions by a skillful organization of photographic experts. The best evidence of the superiority of STANDARD PRINTS is found in the steadily increasing number of successful producers whose work goes through STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES from camera to screen.

"THE RUSTLE OF SILK"

WITH BETTY COMPSON
CONWAY TEARLE

PRESENTED BY . . . ADOLPH ZUKOR

"One of those pictures which are said to have everything."—Joseph Mulvaney in NEW YORK AMERICAN.

"Everything" means: A brilliant cast headed by two famous stars and including Anna Q. Nilsson and Cyril Chadwick; the appealingly romantic story of a pretty lady's maid who conquers London society on her nerve and borrowed clothes; gorgeous gowns and mountings.

Played a week of absolute capacity at the Rivoli, New York. A surefire box office hit in any theatre anywhere.

Adapted by Sada Cowan and Ouida Bergere from Cosmo Hamilton's novel.

A Paramount Picture

The advertisement above is from the Paramount Press Sheet on "The Rustle of Silk" and was designed for the use of exhibitors in exploiting the picture. Your exchange has mats and electros.

In the Press Sheet on every Paramount Picture you will find a complete advertising campaign, comprising ads of all shapes and sizes, prepared by an expert in appealing to the public.

Epes Winthrop Sargent, of the Moving Picture World, said recently in commenting upon the excellence of Paramount Press Sheet ads:

"We cannot understand why some managements insist upon offering only original work (in their theatre advertising) when there is so much good stuff in the plan books. You can cut them down or build them up, use part or all, and do pretty much as you please, and generally you get the services of a better artist than you can afford to pay at the mere cost of a mat."

Thousands of exhibitors use Paramount Press Sheet ads regularly with excellent results.

Ten Reasons Why I Show Paramount Pictures

An absolutely unsolicited testimonial from a successful, livewire exhibitor who has been showing Paramount Pictures for eight years

UNIQUE THEATRE Bricelyn, Minn.

Famous Players-Lasky Corp.
Gentlemen:

Why do I play PARAMOUNT PICTURES?

- 1—Because I think they make the best pictures.
- 2—The name PARAMOUNT on a picture means more than any other name connected with the business.
- 3—Their national system of advertising, places their product before my people, even though I live in a TANK town.
- 4—They treat me as near right as any film company, as I guess it is as near perfection as showmen are entitled to receive.
- 5—On account of their having a large output of pictures, by the time I can afford to run their stuff, they have been tried "on the dog" and I can get pictures which have pleased many, many audiences, while if I buy from a small concern, state rights, etc., I would have to play what they have, regardless of merit.
- 6—During eight years as an exhibitor, PARAMOUNT film has been sent to me in better physical condition than the others generally furnish theirs. Also it is sent in ample time so I need have no worries about the film being on hand.
- 7—Their traveling representative has always done his best to help me with problems, and assisted me in picking out features which have pleased throughout the territory, and should do the same with my people.
- 8—Their prices are the same, or less than some of the other top liners in the business.
- 9—When I sign up for a bunch of features from PARAMOUNT, I receive from the office, PRESS, on the whole lot at once. This gives me ample time to look them over and plan my advertising. I have had no other company do this for me. Many times with others I have requested PRESS along with my advertising order, and failed to receive it.
- 10—Guess I will have to fill my ten commandments with the following PARAMOUNT—GOOD AS ANY AND BETTER THAN MOST.

Yours truly,
UNIQUE THEATRE.

UNIVERSAL'S
SUPER THRILLING CHAPTER PLAY

Directed by Duke Worne

As New as the First Glow of Love in Your Sweetheart's Eyes!

You remember how that affected you! You were seeing something new; something you very much hoped to see and wanted to see. And it thrilled you, didn't it?

*Your audiences want to see real life on the screen
How often do they see it?*

When they do, they are delighted, stirred and thrilled just as you were at that love glance

D. W. GRIFFITH

has caught real life and romance in

"The White Rose"

This picture returns MAE MARSH to GRIFFITH direction, and never has she acted so well. It is a revelation in what the screen can show.

It also introduces in his first American picture IVOR NOVELLO, the very talented and handsome English actor whom MR. GRIFFITH has signed for a series of pictures.

With them appears, CAROL DEMPSTER, the beautiful girl with whom you are acquainted; and NEIL HAMILTON, a juvenile who was found in an obscure stock company, and has been signed to a long term contract.

This picture was taken in the picturesque Bayou Teche country of Louisiana. The Griffith company visited twelve states to capture the scenic settings.

One of the girls at the studio said after seeing a showing in fourteen reels,

"I love it, love it, love it."

This picture has a real grip, it holds; it has some of the finest acting ever seen in this country or any other. It is a new thing, far away from the spectacle. GRIFFITH has put an enormous amount of time and work into making his characters real; and that is a lot more difficult than building big sets and rushing action through them.

It will be shown in the Lyric Theater in New York for a limited engagement beginning May 22nd

Then to be released by the United Artists Corporation

A STORY OF LOVE — MYSTERY — THRILLS

The Independent Market

Believing firmly that the independent market not only will absorb, but is anxious for, production of high calibre with stars of known quality and ability, based upon successful stage plays, published stories and novels which have an accepted popularity, TRUART FILM CORPORATION—with this unshakable conviction—is increasing its production activities to a degree that it will offer during the next year, not less than twelve super-pictures.

It is from those factors enumerated above that the value of a picture to the exhibitor is derived, because they present the features which are basically necessary for proper exploitation. With this full realization TRUART has as its initial step signed ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN, the biggest individual star who has ever been offered exclusively to the independent exchangemen.

Each further step in the building of TRUART FILMS will be taken with the sincere purpose of producing motion pictures which will be a credit to it and which will also be money-making attractions for both the exchangeman and the exhibitor.

"ENEMIES OF WOMEN" is established as the season's most sensational success.

It broke all records at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, where it is now in its fifth capacity week.

It broke all records at the Central Theatre, New York, playing Two Dollar top for four capacity weeks.

Continuing its New York engagement at the Rivoli, it took in $6,093 on the opening, one of the biggest Sundays in all Rivoli history.

In these cities "Enemies of Women" has been playing against the strongest opposition picture in the field today.

It is still running capacity at Grauman's Rialto, Los Angeles. Similar triumphs have been scored in Milwaukee and San Francisco.

The greatest romantic drama of all time—the clash of arms—intrigue—conspiracy—the glamor of royal pageantry—and, weaving through the stirring action, the story of the love of a valiant cavalier and the Virgin Queen, Elizabeth.

Superb settings—fabulously costly costumes—a notable cast, headed by Lady Diana Manners and Carlyle Blackwell—the incomparable direction of J. Stuart Blackton—make this the outstanding feature production of the year.

This magnificent picture will be released for the early Fall season and announcement will be made of the distributing corporation from whom it may be secured by the exhibitors.

*Announcing Season —
1923-1924*

YOU CAN DEPEND UPON FIRST NATIONAL

BEING firmly convinced of the upward trend of public demand, First National's big-time theatre-owner members have arranged for by far the strongest line-up of product the company has yet handled. We have been quietly working for months to build a series of supreme quality productions which our experience leads us to believe will bring many capacity weeks' business during the coming season.

We re-state it as our unalterable purpose—First National aims to be first in quality product next season. Few companies have grown more solidly or rapidly—none has striven more consistently to improve its product and service—none can offer a better record for steady business-getting pictures, and we plan that next season's will be more dazzlingly magnificent than ever.

When planning their coming season's attractions, we hope our friends will bear in mind that this organization's product is definitely designed to meet the standards of the country's palatial big-time metropolitan theatres, most of which have come to depend upon us for supplying an increasing share of their requirements.

Consider the following pages. Look up the records of our unrivalled directorial and stellar aggregation. Read and consider the overwhelming popular appeal of the stories and plays. Here you have an array of superlative talent—a wealth of brilliantly scintillating entertainment material—all backed up by a distributing organization which has grown amazingly because its purpose has been to build wisely and deal fairly.

ARTHUR H. JACOBS presents

FRANK BORZAGE

BRILLIANT as a director with "Humoresque" to his credit, doubly so as creator of "Children of Dust," Frank Borzage is an acquisition of whom First National is justly proud. Showmanship, which guides him in the studios and keeps him alert for every dramatic possibility, every exploitation angle, allies him to the exhibitor. From showmanship, acquired through years, he draws the human slant on life which distinguishes his efforts. Again he proves himself in "Dust in the Doorway." And if there had been no "Humoresque," no "Children of Dust," by this one picture Borzage would have attained the place to which those previous two carried him.

"LET THEM call me commercial if they will—box-office value is what counts." Edwin Carewe says that and works to it. Look through the magazines. Many of the best illustrations represent commercial art. And that defines Carewe's position in the producing world; he is the commercial artist; he makes pictures that sell. With "Mighty Lak' a Rose" and "The Girl of the Golden West" as his trophies for 1922-23, he opens 1923-24 with "The Bad Man." Consider that: an outstanding stage hit, screened with Holbrook Blinn, the play's Broadway creator, as star. That's Carewe's method: assuring success from the start.

BOX-OFFICES from Coast to Coast tell "The Bad Man's" record. It ran months and months on Broadway, two years on the road, and is still going strong—a fortune-maker. Everywhere they laugh and thrill over Lopez, genial border bandit, "ver' bad hombre," but under the skin not so bad when he gives a white man a wife, a fortune and a diamond-studded future. Porter Emerson Browne's play has wonderful screen material. Add to that Carewe's direction, Blinn's inimitable characterization, the profitable prestige of a legitimate hit—and cash in!

FIVE REMARKABLE pictures, one after the other, each scoring infallibly, won Frank Lloyd independent producership. "The Eternal Flame," "The Voice from the Minaret," "Within the Law," "Ashes of Vengeance," and "Oliver Twist" constitute his recent directorial record. In making them, he established his genius in five widely divided fields; but the contract which brings his individual productions to First National was given not merely to provide him with even greater opportunity, but to ensure to exhibitors the exclusive services of a man who never has failed and never will fail to deliver. A national reception awaits Lloyd's personal presentations on this season's program.

CONTINUING—repeat the word—continuing through the new season her succession of successes which started with "Smilin' Through," Norma Talmadge will have three starring productions of true magnificence. "Ashes of Vengeance" comes first, "Secrets" second, both impressed with characteristic greatness. Not just greatness in art or personal achievement. More! Greatness which makes permanent friends for the theatre. Of the very few real box-office stars, Miss Talmadge stands pre-eminent by holding the loyalty of the public with portrayals which not only satisfy but surprise. Ashes of Vengeance

From the play by H. B. Somerville.

SELECTED at the outset by Joseph M. Schenck as a production upon which he would expend more time, money and effort than anything he has yet produced, "Ashes of Vengeance" attains the peak of world production. Thousands of players re-create the thrill of old France's festivals, the Huguenot massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day in all its terrors, scene upon scene unattempted hitherto. Each would make a play a milestone. Here they are but backgrounds, vast, kaleidoscopic, for the unforgettable romance of royal maid and Huguenot lover fighting for love across barriers of creed.

NO SECRET in the success of "Secrets," playing to capacity in New York now. It has a theme: Love lasts through the three ages of woman. Success surrounds the pictures they will release through First National. Beginning an ambitious series, George Fitzmaurice will do Hall Caine's "The Eternal City" in memorable manner, transporting his entire company to Rome for scenic magnificence. There are more to follow, each a picture exhibitors will play for profit. DID ever another picture create such discussion as "The Dangerous Age?" Or play so consistently to capacity and so many extended runs? In a flash it established John M. Stahl as the master theme-dramatist, the observer of life, the unseen, all-seeing analyst in every man's home. He has looked again and found "The Wanters." Everyone knows them; they want, want, want; each want satisfied breeds new discontent. A striking idea, true, entertaining; with another just as thrusting in "Why Men Leave Home," Avery Hopwood's Broadway success. Made in Stahl style those two are worth the important places they hold among this season's First National Pictures.

PRODUCTION

AS DEFTLY as he handled "The Dangerous Age," Stahl develops "The Wanters" with action, human-interest and a smile. The longing for luxury moves the characters—and most strongly of all a girl who gets the chance to escape poverty, and finds those who have the things she wants would surrender them all for the happiness she threw away.

Leila Burton Wells wrote the play. J. G. Hawks and Paul Bern adapted it. A top-notch cast including Marie Prevost, Robert Ellis, Richard Headrick.

And Here Stahl Shows Why Men Leave Home

IN AVERY HOPWOOD'S play of wasteful wives, he does it.

Wives unthinkingly wasting youth, happiness, love, he pictures; wives with the squander-lust.

With satire, punch, laughter, tears, he builds the theme to Big-Time tune. The title catches; the story's there with exploitation angles; and you can depend on Stahl to deliver entertainment that measures up to all you say about it. Men and women will all leave home first chance they get to see

MAKING his own pictures, watching others; going from studio to theatre, sitting in darkness, looking, listening, studying what the public wants and what it has tired of—then logically forecasting the next demand. There's James Young's method for all who wish to copy. But one essential duplication is impossible; the factor behind every picture: the intuitive touch. Young's record goes many years back, many years forward. "The Masquerader," "Trilby," "Wandering Daughters" showed his style of generating response from the public he works for. And working still to popular taste, he has chosen for his first production this season Cynthia Stockley's new best-seller—"Ponjola." It's galvanic!

SURPRISING STAR! While the world still chuckled at Ming Toy of "East is West," Ming Toy became Dulcy, the delicious, disastrous, well-meaning young witch of "Dulcy," three-season stage success. And the good news is confirmed. Constance Talmadge stands happily committed to important plays and famous fiction. New York, London and the Continent supply their cleverest, their most bizarre, their infinite variety of favorites from which Miss Talmadge has drawn "The Dangerous Maid," that won fame as "Barbara Winslow, Rebel," and "Madame Pompadour," Vienna's prevailing vogue. Scintillating promises they hold, endorsed by the star who has found her forte, and by the unlimited resources of the Schenck producing organization.

THOMAS H. INCE

THAT this is Mr. Ince's strongest season is not just a forecast, but a fact. His four important productions for First National release are four definite events. Mr. Ince is making "Country Lanes and City Pavements" as his first personally-directed picture since "Civilization." He has secured "Anna Christie," the most discussed play of last season, by Eugene O'Neill whose stage sensations have made him America's foremost dramatist. "Her Reputation," marks a decisive score for Mae McAvoy, while Vaughan Kester's "The Just and the Unjust," expresses Ince-punch in drama to the nth degree. For all, the name Thomas H. Ince is the soundest guarantee.

COUNTRY LANES AND CITY PAVEMENTS

HE CHOSE this story from thousands for the first picture he has personally directed since "Civilization." He chose it because John Fleming Wilson, author of "The Man Who Came Back," filled it with the dramatic conflict of country simplicity and city splendor and created a score of opportunities for the Ince punch, the Ince thrill, when a tidal wave sweeps upon a city and a wandering wife, awakening to love, fights for her husband's rescue.

With Ince on his mettle as producer and director, with Madge Bellamy as star and a talented cast—

Imagine How Ince Will Screen "Anna Christie"

REMEMBER the furore Eugene O'Neill's play aroused? Capacity houses everywhere, critics overshadowed by the public's praise—and gasp. That story of the out-cast girl on the barge, her one chance of marriage blocked by the father whose faith in her was blind—that story screened will win ten thousand for every thousand who acclaimed it on the stage. Different, that's why; driving deep into strange humanity; revealing entertainment they'll rush the moment your theatre announces—

RARELY has popular request played so absolute a part in a star's success. Piquant personality, charming wistfulness, a distinctive quality of screen artistry commanded for Colleen Moore complete honors in "The Lotus Eaters," "The Nth Commandment," "The Wallflower," and other important releases—and commanded, too, that popular enthusiasm by which stars develop. Exhibitorial discrimination will influence her. Books and plays of undoubted merit, directors of proved ability, supporting players chosen for talent rather than for name, will ensure productions worthy of Miss Moore's utmost, and designed from first to last as truly Big Time attractions.

WATCH TULLY. From years of successful legitimate production and play creation, he has drawn the unerring sense of audience value now guiding him in making pictures which take courage to attempt. "Trilby," his most recent, leaves undoubted the practical versatility of the man. More than usual importance therefore attaches to his consent to film "The Bird of Paradise" as a First National Attraction. He wrote it; by long and profitable association with its stage career he can estimate its cinematographic possibilities. Unlimited they are. And under Tully's aegis "The Bird of Paradise" will double in popular appeal by screen transference. "Watch Tully" is the farsighted exhibitor's watchword.

Motion Picture News

The Convention

ON the eve of the Exhibitor Convention, we would like to call attention to the main issues as they appear to a trade paper devoted sincerely and impersonally to exhibitor organization.

FINANCE—We like the Michigan plan as announced recently, or, at least, its principle, to wit: that national organization be adequately financed through membership dues. If national organization accomplishes what it should—with the general admissions tax, the music tax, with insurance—the saving effected will much more than pay back the dues. If aside from these accomplishments, national organization affords its members the protection that national organization should—against outside and inside oppression—then again, the dues are worth much more than the investment. If national organization cannot do these things—to a considerable extent at least—then national organization is purposeless and deserves no financing whatsoever.

If national organization is free, or subject only to a nominal fee, or kept going by donations (principally from other branches of the industry) it will never amount to anything but a political or commercial football, easily kicked about by anyone.

The theatre investment in this business is said to amount to a billion dollars. It is by far the largest, the most substantial and the most vital investment in this industry.

Surely it is worth a protective insurance fee that is a very small fraction of one cent on the dollar of theatre investment; and surely this should go down regularly and without argument at the very head of fixed house charges.

ADMISSIONS TAX—The numerical strength of theatres each with so potent a publicity medium as a motion picture screen carries weight, of course, in practical politics; and a weak organization carries no weight. But the tax situation is simply this: the Ways and Means Committee of Congress wants figures.

Just figures. Its tremendous duty is to meet the government expenses by taxes that are fairly and not destructively levied. Figures and figures alone will prove that the admission tax is oppressive. If not, it cannot be lifted or modified. We have never gone before Congress with figures—with business statistics carrying the picture theatre situation in the country today. Figures can be had—though the job is a difficult one; and the right kind of organization can produce them and draw the brief that will settle this momentous matter one way or another.

PROTECTION—There are big problems looming ahead. Production cost on the West Coast today—because of strenuous competition—is fully one-third higher than ever before. Just how the public can be made to pay the heavy gross demanded by the regular run of new pictures is beyond us. The strain is going to be a critical one. Nothing will be accomplished by blind fighting. You cannot force the producer to control that which he cannot control of his own volition. But together—by working together in an intelligent way—by conference—this situation can be bettered. And so can the problems of credit, of equitable and uniform contracts, series booking, percentage and those other big commercial problems that are, beyond argument, matters of common welfare—common to exhibitor, producer and distributor alike because their prosperity is common.

AND IN CONCLUSION—the kind of a national organization that is worth the financial support it needs and gets this support will have membership enough, backbone enough and intelligence enough to get fair taxes, fair legislation in general and fair treatment from its related branches within the industry.

TOM MOORE'S judgment for selecting a suitable site for a golf course has received another delicate compliment. The Potomac town's newest links are being laid out adjoining the Indian Spring course, sponsored and successfully promoted by Mr. Moore. But, the impresario, though a great golfer among film turf trespassers, is sometimes outclassed by non-theatrical golfers, as was noted in the sport page of a Washington paper in which the cards turned in after last week's tournament at Indian Spring showed Tom as loser in a two-some. He was beaten by an unattached professional.

NAT G. ROTHSTEIN has put aside his niblick and his midiron, and has substituted the pen and the dietaphone. He returned from California this week and announces that the Mrs. Wallace Reid production, "Human Wreckage," is coming along in tip top shape. Nat looks the picture of health after being kissed by the sun. The big HEATING PLANT in the SKY followed him over the golf course at French Lick, Indiana, and made him as brown as the proverbial berry.

WHEN the train announcer at the Grand Central Station announced the Lake Shore Limited last Wednesday and cried forth the towns, Albany, Utica, Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo, Cleveland and Chicago—on Track 17—it was noticed that several of the boys passed up their tickets to be punched while on their way to the convention.

THE National Board of Review is stingy with its * this week, there being no feature picture listed as worthy of winning the six-pointed star. Instead Pathe walks away with the honors, the number selected being an Our Gang two-reel comedy, "Dogs of War." Hal Roach's kid comedians are going through some peppery paces these days and as far as the NEWS is concerned the Board's w. k. * can be awarded to all of their pieces. There is more solid entertainment packed away in these two-reelers than in a dozen so-called features which are being released this spring.

E. K. LINCOLN, who, when he is not busy exhibiting his champion Chows, occupies himself with camera work, has returned from California with a print of his latest picture, "The Right of the Strongest." The star is one of the best known dog fanciers in the country and recently won prizes at the Cambridge and Providence dog shows.

MAIE MURRAY has arrived in New York to close her apartment, the reason being her purchase of a five acre hilltop site overlooking Beverly Hills where she will build a beautiful home. The star brought back a print of her newest opus, "The French Doll," which scored a fair amount of success in New York last season with Irene Bordini in the title role. As soon as she returns to Hollywood she will begin work in "Conquest" and "Mlle. Midnight."

IF plans don't go astray Marshall Neilan will soon emulate Napoleon by marching on Moscow. The director is considering a trip to Russia to film a series of exteriors for "The Rendezvous," a tragic romance by Madelaine Ruthven which he is now producing. But Mickey unlike Napoleon won't beat a hasty retreat once he steps foot upon Tartar terra firma. That isn't his way. He stands his ground like Stonewall Jackson and fights it out along his own lines, like General Grant, if it takes all summer. We predict that Lenin and Trotzky will "yes" him and give him the drotsky rights to any territory he wants to explore.

Meantime work is progressing rapidly on the drama so that if it is decided that they are to go abroad they will be sufficiently ahead of the producing schedule to make up for the loss of time spent in travel. The quartette of principals expected to make the trip are Conrad Nagel, Syd Chaplin, Lucille Ricksen and Emmett Corrigan.

Since sour milk is the chief article of diet in the land of the steppes—and since it contains the germs which lead to longevity, we hope that Mickey drinks volumes of it. Such an able director as the Neilan lad is needed on earth a long, long time. Au revoirsky!

D. W. GRIFFITH has signed up Joseph Carl Briel to write the score for "The White Rose." It was Mr. Briel who furnished the musical score for "The Birth of a Nation," and much of its success depended upon the exceptional arrangement. If you remember the vital stage play, "The Climax," you will recall the song from it which Briel wrote, "The Song of the Soul." If you attended the Metropolitan opera last season you possibly heard his opera, "The Legend." "The White Rose" should be excellently scored since it is a story of the South and Briel is at his best in assembling Southern melodies.

"THE PRODIGAL SON," which has been called Hall Caine's finest work, will soon reach the screen. It is sponsored by Alfred Lever on behalf of the directors of the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., The production was made in England under the direction of A. E. Coleby.

CLIFF BOWES, comedian of Educational-Cameo comedies, was injured recently while on location.

GADZOOKS! Here is Frank Lloyd establishing a school of fencing for the benefit of members of the Norma Talmadge cast who are appearing in "Ashes of Vengeance." He has engaged Frederick Kavens, an expert fencer, to teach the principals how to handle the foils.

THIS seems to be the season of the costume picture. Witness "Robin Hood," "When Knighthood Was In Flower," "The Courtship of Miles Standish," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "Ben-Hur," "Evangeline," Doug's new one, "The Thief of Bagdad," Mary's new one, "The Street Singer," "The Bright Shawl," "Scaramouche," "Barbara Winslow, Rebel," which will present Constance of the Talmadges, "Ashes of Vengeance," which will present Norma of the Talmadges, "Vanity Fair," "Omar the Tentmaker," "The Headless Horseman," "Under Two Flags," "To Have and to Hold," and "Richard the Lion Hearted." Frank Wood's initial production.

THE New York Exchange of Educational has been completely remodeled and now represents the latest in exchange fashions.

BELIEVE it or not, but figures never lie: The war tax for the first quarter in Los Angeles is $1,072,588. This is twice as much as was secured for entire year of 1918. 88,000,000 patrons attended Los Angeles and suburban theatres during the year, against 73,000,000 for the preceding year. This is the retort snappy for those pessimists who are crying HARD TIMES.

THE exhibitors' convention in Chicago will certainly discuss a very important subject when it takes up the shorter films problem. Most of the theatre owners are demanding that features be kept within bounds—which means five reels or less in order that they may pay some attention to a diversified program. Pictures have become so lengthy that it is almost impossible to plan a program with sufficient variety to please an audience.

The NEWS is out strongly for shorter features—features at five or six reels at the most. If the producers and directors who fashion the lengthy products could see the effect of an interminably dragged out line of action upon an impatient audience—and could see that audience walk out on it—they would soon cease their efforts to manufacture miles and miles of footage to build a so-called special. Occasionally a story needs big treatment—if it has a big idea and promises to establish screen history. Then and only then, should lengthy footage be employed. Otherwise the scissors should be applied.

THE mountain breezes say that C. L. (Bill) Yearsley, First National's advertising and publicity director, has convinced himself and his bosses that it's more fun to fish than to work—even on a regular job like Bill has—and in consequence trout streams in Pennsylvania, for three months, are to receive the soundest threshing of their wild-wood life.

The vacation—Bill calls it a leave of absence to make it sound high brow—begins June 1st. A farm and the simple life also figure in on the deal.

Even if Bill is to become a gentleman farmer and professional fisherman for the Summer no fears are felt that his department may not function properly. Bill is one of those rare executives who can not only turn out A1 work himself but also knows how to build an efficient organization. He surrounds himself with good men and welds them into a perfect machine that only needs oiling occasionally.

Bill and P. A. (Pathe) Parsons looked some of the Pennsylvania streams over during the week end. No reports as to the result have been received to date.

IT was just eleven years ago that Carl Laemmle launched the Universal Film Company. He has seen his enterprise prosper and become one of the leading factors in the screen world. So it is fitting and proper that Universal should celebrate its eleventh anniversary. Carl Laemmle had vision and business acumen—and still possesses these qualities. Dark days loomed ahead in 1912, but his skill at organization, coupled with his keen showmanship which indicated a faith in the screen as a medium of entertainment, have brought him to the heights. To-day his company occupies an immense studio, owns branch exchanges in every quarter of the globe, and its pictures have played in practically every theatre in the United States. Which is surely eleven years of concentrated effort to put over a big enterprise. Universal has succeeded.

Which means that Jerry is departing from Hollywood and the F. P. where he has been studio representative, to park himself in the New York offices of Al Lichtman. Jerry Beatty is not a stranger to his new associates. They all said "Howdy" to one another when they walked through the portals of Famous's New York offices. The boys will all be glad to see Jerry back on the job in the metropolis. He has a legion of well wishers who will be glad to know that he is getting on in the world.

C. L. (BILL) YEARSLEY, of First National, invited the trade press over to Mrs. Astor's boarding house last Friday to get really acquainted with M. C. (Mike) Levee, the big chief of United Studios, who recently hit the U. P. Trail for New York to talk over "makin' pictur's" with Richard Rowland, Harry Schwalbe, et. al.

Mike made a speech—a nice speech that wasn't very serious, and appeared to like the boys, the luncheon, etc., etc. He told about graduating from the cloak and suit business into picture production, spoke briefly about United's aims and aspirations, and hinted that big things may be expected on First National's bill of fare, immediately if not sooner.

Responsibility seems to sit lightly on Mr. Levee's shoulders and we'll observe that at "personal appearances" he is quite as successful as at being a "magnet."

There were some other speeches by Dr. Giannini, Joe Dannenburg, Martin Quigley and Fred Beecroft.

In other words the party was a success.

FOR completeness and practical service to the exhibitor, we doubt if the exploitation aids on "Souls For Sale" have ever been surpassed. Prepared by the Goldwyn exploitation department, of which Eddie Bonns is chief, this campaign book is literally packed with meaty ideas—everything from newspaper ad. copy to a script for a tie-up picture to be made in co-operation with local merchants. Every conceivable exploitation slant seems to have been included; and the material is presented in such a way that the exhibitor can use it with ease and speed. The actual novelties or ads. are made an integral part of the book. This, in itself, marks an advance in the art of helping the exhibitor get his message over to the public. Our congratulations to Eddie Bonns and his associates.

Several Candidates in Race for Presidency

LIVELY interest is centered in the choice of the next president of the M. P. T. O. A. Sydney S. Cohen has announced, on several occasions, that he would not be a candidate for reelection and has urged the various states to present the names of favorite sons. The following have declared their candidacy:

W. A. Steffes, president, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Minnesota.

James C. Ritter, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan.

Martin G. Smith, president, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio.

F. J. McWilliams, President, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin.

Joseph Mogler, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri.

Several other leading exhibitors will be placed in nomination, it is understood. Among them:

M. E. Comerford, of Pennsylvania.

R. G. Liggett, president, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas.

Charles T. Sears, president, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri.

W. A. True, president, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut.

Additions will doubtless be made to this list when the delegates assemble in Chicago.

eago representative of the theatre owners, and A. J. Moeller, general manager, will be in charge.

Sessions are also scheduled to be held on Thursday, May 24, and Friday, May 25.

Elaborate plans have been made for the entertainment of delegates and film stars. A number of the latter are expected, including Hope Hampton and Elaine Hammerstein. One event will be a luncheon tendered by the Chicago Chamber of Commerce. Balaban & Katz have provided 5,000 tickets to the Chicago theatre to be distributed. Andrew Karzas has sent a like number of tickets for his Trianon ballroom.

A thousand theatres in Chicago and vicinity have been supplied with slides, trailers and posters announcing the Palace of Progress. Ten thousand cards and posters heralding the Palace have been placed on surface cars, elevated trains and in other prominent places.

Chicago newspapers have been liberal in the use of special stories for the past month. The Evening Journal is finishing a contest for the selection of a cast for a three-reel picture to be made under the direction of David M. Hartford during the convention. The Journal, The Post, The Herald-Examiner and The American have arranged for special supplements on the opening day.

The entire work of exploitation has been handled by Nat Royster.

The Palace of Progress will illustrate the importance of the motion picture to the public. The use of the motion picture in Americanization and naturalization work, the promotion of vocational education and better health will be shown. Other exhibits will indicate graphically the part films play in aiding the Red Cross, the army and navy, the postoffice, industry in general, the city, state, school and church.

The progress of the motion picture will be worked out by a series of exhibits. In contrast to the latest and most perfect films will be run off some of the old thrillers, including "The Great Train Robbery." The latest scientific developments in the film world will be shown, including the new stereoscopic film, submarine photography, X-ray pictures, colored films and the recently invented talking-moving pictures.

Visitors to the Palace of Progress will see exactly how a film is made—from the manufacture of the film and the training of players to the flashing of the drama on the screen.

One of the feature events will be the showing of the Safety First picture, taken by the Atlas Educational Film Co., under auspices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and a special committee on safety appointed by Mayor Dever. The film will be part of a campaign waged in Chicago against speeders and traffic regulation violators in an effort to eliminate the alarming number of deaths from reckless driving. The picture will be made under the direction of Chief of Police Morgan A. Collins and Captain John Naughton, head of the motor traffic department, with Coroner Oscar Wolff co-operating. After being shown at the Coliseum, the picture will be released to some 15,000 movie houses throughout the United States.

The importance of public service to the picture theatre will be emphasized at a special public service day, when theatre owners will be able to get in touch with representatives of seven organizations vitally interested in maintaining pictures at a high standard. These representatives are: Mrs. Charles J. Trainer, Americanization Committee, Federation of Women's Clubs; Marcus Eaton, American Red Cross; Miss Margaret Neal, Girl Scouts of America; Miss Jessie Binford, Juvenile Protective Association; Mrs. H. D. Merriam, Chairman Better Film Committee, National Congress of Mothers' and Parent-Teachers Associations; Peter A. Martinson, Board of Education, and W. O. Lewis, American Sentinels.

The list of those having exhibits at the Palace of Progress follows:

Judge Lindsey Condemns Picture Censorship

"State censorship of motion pictures is today battering down the right of the citizens of the United States to do their own thinking.

This was the statement made in Los Angeles by Judge Ben B. Lindsey, of the Juvenile court of Denver, who is on a tour of the Southern Pacific coast, lecturing on "Young America and the Movies," and "Why Kids Lie."

"The sword of public opinion, a glorious weapon in the defense of our morals, is being dulled by State censorship," said Denver's famous judge. "The public is becoming lazy-minded and the practice of eternal vigilance is waning, all because the right to judge motion pictures has been taken away from the people.

"Instead of arming our children to fight evil, we are trying to hide evil under a thin surface of false civilization. If censors had existed in the days of the brave St. George, no doubt they would have censored dragons and the famous story of St. George's fight against evil would never have been passed down to posterity.

"We must arm our boys and girls with good thoughts. Screen dramas should stand or or fall by public opinion and producers should be taught the disastrous results of making suggestive pictures.

"No boy who ever came into my court," said the judge, "has been sent wrong through the movies. Motion pictures are perhaps the greatest single influence on American life. We want clean movies, but we do not want to be hand-fed by the censors."

New Companies on Increase During Past Month

The month of April added 32 motion picture companies to the records in the secretary of state's office. These companies, capitalized at $851,000, represented a much lower capitalization, however, than the 27 companies formed during March, when a total of $1,442,500 was reached.

Up to May 1, a total of 127 companies, with an aggregate capitalization of $6,449,000, had entered the motion picture business in this state this year.

Brilant Defeated in Suit Against Sennett

The suit brought by Arthur M. Brilant against the Mack Sennett Comedies Corporation charging breach of contract, was decided in the Municipal Court in New York City in favor of the Sennett company. The verdict of the jury was that Brilant did not fulfill his part of the contract. Arthur Butler Graham was attorney for the defendants.

Edison Witness at Famous Players Hearing

Declares Screen's Greatest Future Work Will Be in Education; Exhibitor Continues Testimony

THE motion picture is the most powerful of all agencies for moulding thought and public opinion.

Its greatest future field lies in education. Within twenty years, children will not have to be made to go to school; they will be anxious to go, because teaching will be done mainly through pictures.

These striking utterances were made by Thomas A. Edison, who appeared as an expert witness for the Government this week at the hearing on the Federal Trade Commission charges against the Famous Players-Lasky group.

Mr. Edison, whose testimony was evidently designed to show the power that would come to any agency which dominated or monopolized the screen, sketched briefly his first experiments with the motion picture in 1887, when he patented the Kinetograph, showing forty pictures a second on "an endless tape." In all, he said he had taken out about forty patents relating to motion pictures, the last having been granted about ten years ago, when he "got out of the business." "The show business was out of my line," he added.

Discussing the value of the different senses in obtaining ideas, the great inventor declared that "we get 85% to 90% of all information through the eye."

"I once had a visionary scheme for revolutionizing teaching through the use of the motion picture," he went on. "I made some simple pictures on complex subjects, like physics and chemistry, and got twelve children to look at the films—sort of 'trying it on the dog.' To my surprise, the children understood nearly all of it, and I became convinced that the motion picture was the greatest of all educational agencies."

The New York Board of Education looked at the pictures and were delighted with them, he added, but they never went through with the project to use them widely at that time.

"I finally gave up my plan to put pictures into the schools on a big scale," he explained, "because I found I would be up against the opposition of the school book publishers. I saw I would be defeated."

Mr. Edison's testimony bristled with these epigrams:

"The motion picture is one hundred per cent perfect for teaching anything.

"Its influence on our people is so great that it can improve morals or do the opposite.

"If Darwin was right, we are all merely imitative. People carry out in their lives what they absorb through the motion picture.

"In twenty years, children will all want to go to school, because they will be taught mainly by motion pictures. We'll have plenty of highbrows then.

"Radio will not supplant the motion picture."

Mr. Edison's testimony was followed by that of Dr. John J. Tigert, U. S. Commissioner of Education, who declared that the total effect of the motion picture on the nation's thought was far greater than that of the schools.

"The great future development of the motion picture will be in the educational field," he added. "The commercial or entertainment side has already been highly developed, and is now a great deal further advanced than the educational side. Ultimately, the motion pic-

Ritter Hotly Opposed to Reduced Music Tax

IF the report is true that a proposition to pay a reduced music tax is to be presented to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners at the coming convention in Chicago, such a move will have the unstinted opposition of James C. Ritter, of Michigan, candidate for National president, according to a wire from Mr. Ritter, through H. M. Richey, manager of the Michigan organization.

"There is no compromise between right and wrong," said Mr. Ritter. "By making ourselves a party to such an arrangement we would be admitting the tax is just and that at least a portion should be paid. I believe exhibitors of the United States are demanding that the law be amended or repealed and that such action should be taken by the National organization through Congress to make this possible, with, of course, the one hundred per cent. backing of exhibitor of the country, which I am confident such a movement would have.

"In many sections a rate of seven and one-half cents a seat is nothing new. The entire tax is unfair and should be abolished for the motion picture theatre and other places where paying of taxable music is of benefit to the composer and publisher instead of damaging him."

ture's educational development will forge ahead of its commercial uses."

Pointing out that there are 15,000 picture theatres and 276,000 schools, Dr. Tigert showed that, considering education in its broadest sense, the theatre at present wielded a much greater influence on manners and customs than the schools, despite the disparity in numbers.

"The average daily attendance in the schools is 16,000,000," he declared, "but if I am correctly informed the average daily attendance at the picture theatres is eighteen to twenty millions. When you consider that this latter figure includes a large number of adults, who, of course, are not in the school population, you will see that the screen is a much greater educational influence even today than the schools."

He agreed with Mr. Edison that the average individual receives far more information through the eye than through all the other senses combined. Turning to the problem of Americanization, Dr. Tigert declared that it was possible to show the immigrant all of America through the motion picture and thus impress upon him its institutions and ideals.

"It would be an impossibility to take the immigrant all over the country and show him what America is, but you can do it through the motion picture," he continued.

At the hearing on Tuesday, Sydney S. Cohen, President of the M. P. T. O. A., was on the stand for a short time. He said he was not able to produce at the moment certain documents called for in the subpoena, including the agreement made with Adolph Zukor on theatre acquisition.

Others were minutes of meetings with Mr. Zukor, and correspondence exchanged between Mr. Zukor and the M. P. T. O. A. in 1920, prior to and after the ratification of the agreement; and data on the meetings with Mr. Zukor by M. P. T. O. A. Committee appointed at the Minneapolis convention a year later.

Mr. Cohen explained that these documents had been sent to Chicago for the use of the M. P. T. O. A. Board of Directors at a meeting to be held Saturday, on the eve of the national convention. He agreed to produce them later.

A resolution adopted by the M. P. T. O. A. in 1920 calling on exhibitors to protect themselves from the alleged plan of Famous Players-Lasky to trustify the industry was identified together with a letter from Mr. Cohen to Adolph Zukor, dated June 30, 1920.

This letter declared that the exhibitors had hitherto regarded Mr. Zukor as their friend, but had now come to look upon him as "their most dangerous enemy" because of the theatre acquisitions made by F. P.-L.

Monopoly of the industry, Mr. Cohen's letter averred, would mean poor pictures and higher admissions.

Joseph C. Boss, former exhibitor with theatres at various points in the South, including McAlester, Okla., where he claimed he was deprived of his theatre through alleged unfair tactics of the Lynch interests, continued his testimony begun May 10.

The introduction of the Boss testimony, the first evidence heard from an exhibitor, brought out a complete array of counsel on both sides and considerable wrangling over the admissibility of certain evidence.

The importance of the testimony was shown at the conclusion of the Government's examination of Boss on May 10, when the hearing recessed until Monday, so that the defense could bring the Paramount exchange manager at Dallas, Lester Wilkes, to New York, with a complete file of all correspondence relating to the Boss-Famous Players controversy. There was no session on Monday, however, because of the death of a member of the firm of Cravath, Henderson, Leffingwell and De Gersdorff, Famous Players counsel.

The story told by Mr. Boss on direct examination took up his experiences as an exhibitor in Washington, Elizabeth City, N. C., Norfolk, Va., Newport News, Va., Miami and McAlester.

In Miami he used Paramount service and his relations with the company were very satisfactory, he testified. It was in the Florida city that Mr. Boss had his first understanding with the Lynch interests through Y. F. Freeman, so Boss asserted, to the effect that as long as he used Paramount service they would not come into the town and build or acquire a theatre.

When he decided to go into exhibition at McAlester, the witness said he had a similar promise from Mr. Freeman, but the matter was not reduced to writing, because, said Boss, he trusted Mr. Freeman implicitly.

One of the chief contentions made by Boss related to oral agreements he said he made with Joseph Gilday, then Paramount exchange manager at Oklahoma City, with reference to "repeat" runs, by which he was to be allowed to show a picture for one day, then return it to the exchange, and get it back later for its second day's run.

He testified that his trouble with Paramount began in 1920, when he booked a Wallace Reid picture and gave it lavish advertising, but the film failed to arrive.

Trade Commission Hearing Continues

A long series of letters relating to disputes over bookings and prices were identified for the record, many of which were later introduced in the prolonged cross-examination given Mr. Boss by Robert T. Swaine, chief counsel for the defense.

On direct examination, the witness charged that by the Summer of 1920 he was paying ten times as much for Paramount Pictures as the year before. When he learned that Southern Enterprises was extending its theatre interests in the South, Mr. Boss said he became disturbed and wrote to Mr. Freeman asking him if the company intended to come into McAlester. To this letter, he asserted, he received no reply, but later received a letter from the Dallas Lynch office saying that Mr. Freeman had written that office concerning buying out Boss's interests.

On cross-examination, Boss admitted he had written a letter to Freeman in May, 1920, in which he stated that he wanted to sell out to Southern Enterprises, as he "found the load too heavy to carry." He suggested that the Lynch interests help him with a loan or buy him out.

He declared he "became discouraged" only after Paramount put "a house across the street from me and trained the same guns on me as I had trained on my competitor."

Pressed closely by Mr. Swaine, as to his "dissatisfaction" with Paramount, the witness maintained that his only complaint was the "raise in film prices and sending him second-run pictures" instead of first-runs. He declared that his "oral agreement" with the Oklahoma City exchange on prices was not lived up to. He insisted that he wanted to remain in McAlester and use Paramount service, but that Southern Enterprises acquired the Palace across the street from his house, ran first-run and advertised the theatre as "the new home of Paramount Pictures."

Organized Anti-Censorship Movement Launched

THE first organized anti-censorship movement was initiated at a luncheon Thursday, May 10, at Browne's Chop House, New York, where representatives of the motion picture industry, magazine editors, writers and publishers, joined hands to form a permanent Anti-Censorship organization.

Fred Hume, secretary of the National Publishers' Association, was the leading speaker. Mr. Hume told of the fight to defeat the Clean Books Bill, and the attempts being made by reform organizations to jam through bills in various states.

Samuel Goldwyn and Doctor Daniel Carson Goodman spoke on the lines of motion picture censorship. Among other representatives of the film industry present were George Fitzmaurice, the director, and Lynde Denig of First National Exhibitors.

A committee to represent various elements affected by legislation of this sort, including representatives of organized labor, was formed, and will proceed to construct a permanent organization.

Colonel Butterfield Wants Western President

COLONEL W. S. BUTTERFIELD, a well known exhibitor of the Middle West, is in New York on his honeymoon from Michigan, and strongly advocating the election of a Western man to the presidency of the M. P. T. O. A. The Colonel expressed his first choice as Jim Ritter, whom he declared to be a fine man, but at any rate he wants a Western man for the presidency.

The Palace, he testified, was opened in November. Having started his negotiations with the Lynch interests in May, he was visited by W. R. Lynch and on May 7 gave the latter an option on his theatre. On July 31 he sent the Lynch people a letter in which he gave them 48 hours to accept or reject the proposition and on August 2 he testified he received a letter from Southern Enterprises "calling it all off as far as the Fotoshow (the Boss theatre) was concerned." The Lynch interests had already signified their intention of coming into McAlester, he declared.

Mr. Swaine pointed out to the witness that Paramount might have been dissatisfied with his account. To this Mr. Boss answered that if they were dissatisfied they should have sold their service to his competitors and not themselves acquired a theatre. He claimed that by August 2 he had learned that Southern Enterprises were already negotiating for the acquisition of a theatre in McAlester.

When he attempted to book the output of other companies, after his controversy with the exchange began, Mr. Boss said he discovered that Lynch had tied up the Oklahoma territory for Associated Exhibitors, United Artists, Metro and Universal, which pictures were going to his competitor across the street. Another competitor had a First National franchise, with the result that the witness was shut off from all good pictures, he declared.

The witness said he had sent letters to Messrs. Zukor, Freeman, Lynch and others, in February, 1921, reciting his troubles and declaring that his service had been cut off without notification and that he would never have opened a theatre in McAlester if he had known that the Lynch interests intended coming in there. He also referred, at various points in his testimony, to the "promise" he said Mr. Freeman had given him.

In June, Mr. Boss read an open letter written by Mr. Zukor and published in Motion Picture News, wherein Mr. Zukor pleaded for fair play.

As a delegate from Oklahoma to the M. P. T. O. A. convention at Washington last year, Boss, so he testified, told Sydney Cohen that he had written the facts to Mr. Zukor, and supplied Mr. Cohen with copies of the letters. The M. P. T. O. A. President promised to take the matter up with Mr. Zukor, the witness said, but he never heard from Mr. Cohen again.

His theatre in McAlester was finally sold to Willis Adams, former manager of the Palace. "I got almost nothing for it," the witness added.

On cross-examination, Mr. Boss declared that the Famous Players-Lasky interests still owed him $650 to $800 in advance deposits, besides "damages."

"Your account was closed over two years ago, wasn't it?" queried Swaine. The witness admitted that it was. Asked whether he had brought suit for the alleged damages, Mr. Boss said: "Not yet."

Mr. Swaine brought out, on cross-examination, that Mr. Boss had considerable correspondence with Famous Players-Lasky with reference to a job in the theatre department.

Kansas Exhibitors Hold Important Session

Many important business matters were transacted at a meeting of the executive board of the M. P. T. O. Kansas, Monday, in Kansas City. The budget of $5,000, raised at the recent state convention, was divided into twelve equal portions for the year's expenditures and arrangements made for obtaining new headquarters for the state organization in Kansas City.

A committee, composed of A. F. Baker, R. R. Biechele and M. B. Shanberg, all of Kansas City, Kas., was appointed to select a suitable location for new state headquarters, one of the features of which will be quarters for exhibitors to transact business with exchanges while in Kansas City.

The membership drive, the goal being 400, started this week with the departure of C. E. Cook, business manager, for the key towns territory. There are 540 exhibitors in Kansas and M. P. T. O. K. officials are confident that the drive will result in a membership of more than 400. There is at present enough money in the treasury to operate the state body for a year, and Kansas exhibitors are jubilant. The new state headquarters to be selected will be used only until the completion of a new building at Eighteenth and Baltimore, which will house the executive offices of the Kansas association.

Colorado M.P.T.O. Urges Many Reforms

THE M. P. T. O. of Colorado at their last meeting adopted a resolution urging the attention of the Chicago convention to a number of problems. Theresolution reads as follows:

Whereas, Matters of great import are confronting those engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures, and

Whereas, The motion picture exhibitors of the United States will be in session May 19-26.

Resolved, That the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Colorado earnestly urge action on the following subjects:

Repeal of taxes on admissions of 25 cents and under;

Amendment to Constitution to forbid music tax;

Definite rule on non-theatrical exhibition;

Producer theatre extension;

Credit rating to eliminate deposits; public service.

Excessive film prices.

Demand for Shorter Features Growing

EXHIBITORS—big, little, and middle-sized—continue to raise their voices in emphatic approval of Motion Picture News' editorial campaign for shorter features

In addition to the group of opinions published in the last two issues, a steady flow of letters continues to reach The News, and, without exception, they urge that features should be made in five reels, if possible, but in any event not to exceed seven.

"Variety is the keynote of successful programs in the picture theatres"—that sentence sums up what appears to be the unanimous belief of showmen on this important subject.

Opinions presented this week cover a wide range of territory and several different classes of houses.

George E. Carpenter, Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake City: "More power to you if you can induce the producer to concentrate, condense and generally give us shorter feature pictures. Six reels is ample; with this number of reels it is possible to present an ideal motion picture show. If you turn to the Good Book and count the number of words it took to tell of the creation of the world and then recall the footage some of these directors give us on mundane things of less import.—but what's the use!

George E. Carpenter.

"I have, in my feeble way, been trying to demonstrate to some distributors that both they and we have lost hundreds of dollars owing to the fact that during the peak of business we have turned them away in droves incident to the show being too long and the turnover accordingly curtailed.

"If both exhibitors and distributors played features on percentage basis, they would soon get the viewpoint. When an exhibitor presents daily seven shows and is compelled to cut the number down to five owing to the length of the feature attraction it does not take much arithmetic to demonstrate that a whole lot of business goes down street.

"Cut out the cabaret scenes and the other padding bunk in the modern production and get down to the meat of the story. Give us something that is human, probable, and that rings true for 5,000 feet and I'll take my chance any day against the opposition with a twelve-reel feature padded up with half a million dollars worth of bizarre sets, impossible cabaret and antediluvian scenes and people who live in houses like Pennsylvania depots.

"Variety is the keynote of successful programs. With but mighty few exceptions no feature should be over six reels in length. If you can get the producer to see this, you will be rendering the exhibitor of from 500 to 1,500 seating capacity untold service."

Charles C. Branham, director of theatres, Famous Players Canadian Corp., Ltd.: "Having just screened six new features representing the product of three of the leading distributors, I am more thoroughly convinced than ever that the producers are making the pictures too long. All of the pictures I have just seen have been in seven or eight reels; any one of them could have been made in five or six, and would have been much better entertainment in the shorter length.

"Practically every one of the managers in the forty theatres operated by this company have voiced their protest against the unnecessarily long features. During this season several of these managers have made it their business to create interest in their short subjects. Some of their most successful weeks, from a box office standpoint, have been when they played average length features with well selected one and two reelers. Having got the public enthused over the short subjects, it has been a blow to these houses to be forced to run eight-, nine- and ten-reel pictures, and to have cut down on their snappy, little films. There is no question but that the extra-long productions have cut into many a theatre's revenue because the shows have been too long to get the money while the people were there to spend it.

"A great cry for the good, old five and six reelers has gone up from exhibitors everywhere, and unless we have more of these next season, this business unquestionably will suffer.

"Ask almost any 'dyed in the wool' picture fan what he thinks about it, and he will tell you that most of the features he has seen during the past few months have been too long; some of them so lengthy that they have become actually boring. To hold the public's attention for more than five or six reels at the most, a feature must be highly entertaining, and seventy-five per cent. of those produced in the past year could have been shortened and greatly improved. The public is demanding variety, and you cannot provide this if you have to run seven, eight and nine reel features.

"One of the best posted and most successful film men in Canada just told me that he could increase his business greatly and get so-called super-feature prices, if his productions were no more than the average length.

"The question of feature length is a very serious one, and the efforts of the Motion Picture News to induce producers to 'make 'em snappy' is most commendable and should have the hearty endorsement of every exhibitor. More power to you!"

M. J. Sullivan, Rialto theatre, Butte, Montana: "I am heartily in accord with your views that eight-, nine- and ten-reel features are hurting the box office. It is the hardest thing in the world to put over a long feature successfully.

"Our patrons here in Butte complain bitterly when a picture is longer than six and a half reels. It gets tiresome and monotonous and loses its entertaining value; we have no opportunity to run a good comedy, scenic reel or news on a corner of this kind. It is impossible to make the people wait if your house is filled up, but the exhibitor is the loser in the long run and the patrons are more or less dissatisfied with the very often tiresome program they have to sit through.

"Give me six-reel features. We can build short subjects around it which gives us a balanced program. Movie fans are satisfied and we are in a much better position to get a much bigger play at the box office."

Ross A. McAvoy, Temple theatre, Geneva, N. Y.: "I sincerely believe that in the regular motion picture theatre, or vaudeville-picture theatre, 6,000 feet should be the maximum length of any feature. In this day of hustle, the public seems to want what it wants and wants it fast. Therefore, when they enter their favorite place of amusement, they want a variety; and, if they are forced to sit through a play of extreme length, they become restless, oftentimes leaving in a tired condition, when they should be sent out happy and rested.

J. M. Edgar Hart, city manager, Ft. Worth Palace and Hippodrome theatres, Fort Worth: "If concrete opinion of the exhibitors of the United States can bring about, in their earnest recommendation, the production of shorter feature films, six and seven reels at the most, your campaign, in this direction, will have been one of the most progressive steps ever taken by a leading publication of the motion picture in the world to build a program around a long feature.

"Personally, and after extended experience in the field, I favor five reelers. I have advocated it and urged it as suggestions to several directors.

"We hear everywhere, criticizing a wonderful production, 'Oh, it's too long.' In this 'racing' age the public wants speed. They do not wish to bring their cots to the theatre. They much prefer to have it a small quantity, not draggy, and good. That's the five or six reeler.

Frank L. Newman, Kansas City, Mo.: "I have harped on this subject of long features for the past year along the line that features are entirely too long. Time and again a production has been ruined by stretching it to 8, 9, and 10 reels whereas if it were put into 5½ or 6, the action would be snappier and more entertaining.

"Then again, the large motion picture theatres throughout the country are expected to show more than just a feature and when you have a two-reel comedy, news, and scenic, an overture and generally one or two other musical numbers, the show is so long that you wear the patrons out.

"I am strongly in favor of having features run from five to six reels. Of course, that does not include productions like 'Robin Hood' or similar productions where it is necessary.

"I have talked to hundreds of exhibitors in my territory and I do not know of one who has not been in favor of shorter length features."

Theodore L. Hays, general manager of Finkelstein & Ruben, Minneapolis, calls attention to a resolution on Feature Lengths passed at the recent convention of the Minnesota M. P. T. O. This resolution, which represented the unanimous views of the delegates, read as follows:

Theodore L. Hays

"WHEREAS, it has become the practice of producers to create features of extended length, involving 7, 8 and more reels, and

"WHEREAS, as a rule this departure involves necessarily a great deal of padding and unnecessary footage, and

"WHEREAS, the public as a whole object to features of extreme length and demand as a part of each motion picture program a number of short subjects in order to provide a diversity of entertainment, and

"WHEREAS, the unnecessary footage of such pictures necessarily involves tremendous additional costs of production, which is reflected in the film rentals ultimately paid by the exhibitor, and

"WHEREAS, the showing of such lengthy features seriously interferes with the orderly presentation of the exhibitor's program, in many cases causing financial loss to the exhibitor and great annoyance and discomfort to his patrons.

"NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED by the Minnesota Division M. P. T. O. A. in convention assembled, that we urgently request the producers of pictures to use every effort to confine the length of all features to 5 reels if possible, and in no case to permit them to exceed 7 reels in length, to the end that we may regain much of the patronage which has been weaned away from this form of entertainment through the monotony which necessarily accompanies the viewing of extra reels which in fact detract from the entertainment value of such pictures.

"BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that a copy of this resolution be forthwith transmitted to Will H. Hays."

H.E. Cane, Coudersport, Pa.: "Your discussion of Shorter Features is, indeed, timely. Five reels are enough for ninety per cent. of the features produced. When you can get features in five or at most six reels, there is more action and less repetition. Frequently, my patrons will say: 'Oh, the picture was all right, but too long.'

"Occasionally, a feature like 'Robin Hood' will stand length, but the erroneous impression that any intelligent exhibitor buys film by the yard should be eliminated.

"Frequently, I have turned down salesmen because they had only seven or more reels to each feature, when I could have used the same features if they were in five reels. We are called 'Eighty Per Cent. Exhibitors' and it would help our business if good five-reel features were made.

"The worst obstacle to long features is the difficulty in a small town of running two shows. When I have a feature over six reels I can only run one show, which would not be so bad if I could guarantee weather.

"However, quite frequently a heavy storm will spring up, just before the show commences and then good-bye receipts. One night recently such a storm came on and I had eight people to see nine reels. If the producers would cut out a few hundred feet of close-ups and other useless photography, they would certainly help the industry. Give us action!

"Where elaborate sets are used, we can stand a few feet, but, for heaven's sake, don't cater to the egotism of stars who love to pose. Make them work. They are certainly paid well enough. Frequently, you will see some star blinking and vamping in close-ups for a hundred feet or more. This is not confined to the ladies. The men are just as bad.

"Whatever the big fellows prefer, I am certain the majority of small-town exhibitors prefer shorter features. There may be a few of the old-fashioned exhibitors who advertise 'Big Show Tonight—Twenty Reels,' but they are rapidly being replaced by exhibitors who prefer quality to quantity."

Ray Grombacher, Spokane, Wash.: "Producers are ruining the business by making eight-reel productions. Six-reel pictures are ideal. With few exceptions, every eight-reel production last year and this year could be absolutely improved by cutting it to six reels. The mere fact that the picture is eight reels does not, in our estimation, increase its value."

Exhibitor Defies Ku Klux with "Bella Donna"

Another angle has been added to the censorship worries of North Carolina exhibitors. In Hickory, N. C., where Manager John F. Miller had "Bella Donna" scheduled for showing the local Ku Klux Klan organization came out with a glaring newspaper advertisement warning him against putting this picture on his screen. Mr. Miller had already sensed some opposition and had the picture screened privately ten days in advance before thirty-one representative men and women, the vote being 25 to 6 in favor of the presentation of the picture, so he went right ahead with his advertising in defiance of the edict of the K. K. K.

The picture was shown to capacity audiences after Mr. Miller had replied to the Klan's defi by calling upon the public to take their choice of censors—those representative citizens who had viewed the picture and O. K.'d it or the "invisible" band who, not having seen it, declared it unfit to be shown publicly. The general opinion is that the advertising obtained by the Ku Klux opposition added many dollars to Mr. Miller's till on the run.

Patrick McMahon Estate Value Near Million

McMahon, for many years and until his death, well known motion picture house proprietor and hotel man, left an estate valued at $713,022.95, according to the inventory filed last week in the Probate Court at New Britain, Conn. At one time he was interested in theatre enterprises in New York State, later confining them to New Britain and Hartford, Conn. The Empire theatre property, valued at $175,000, is included. Real estate, railroad and manufacturing stocks comprise the bulk of the estate.

Health Board Picture to Show Malaria Fight

Photographers, armed with motion picture cameras, will visit Laurel, Miss., soon to film a part of the educational picture to be distributed by the International Health Board of New York. The reels will contain much valuable information regarding the fight being waged here against malaria.

Grand Theatre, Hartford, Suits Are Heard

Two matters involving the Grand theatre at Hartford, Conn., formerly conducted by Max Spiegel, now reported in a retreat at Stamford, Conn., were recently heard by Superior Court Judge L. P. W. Marvin at Hartford. One of the actions was an application of Abraham D. and I. E. Goldberg and Charles Finberg, of Hartford, to have a default judgment obtained against them by Ernest W. Michelfelder, of New York, reopened.

Michelfelder claimed that the defendants conspired to defraud him, by inducing him to invest $3,500 in a lease of the Playhouse, representing that they controlled the furniture and equipment. The default was opened.

The other matter was an application of the Goldbergs, owners of the theatre property, to have the lease of the property given to Spiegel in 1914 declared void. It was claimed that the rent has not been paid since last December and that the lease has been broken. The theatre has been vacant, and the Goldbergs desire to have the title cleared so that they can again rent the playhouse. Judge Marvin reserved decision.

Dynamiting Attempted on Kansas City House

An attempt to dynamite the Ashland theatre, a Kansas City suburban house, was made early Tuesday morning. The theatre was not damaged, although approximately $300 damage was done to neighboring residences as a result of broken window panes. The theatre is owned by W. L. Shelton.

It is believed by the police that the attempt to wreck the theatre was done by sympathizers of the Motion Picture Theatre Operators' Union, as Mr. Shelton has refused to employ union men since September, 1920, owing to dissatisfaction in work and wages. The theatre has been picketed since then by union men and twice stench bombs have been thrown into the theatre, as well as a previous attempt to bomb the building last year.

Exhibitor Denies Child Labor Violation

Pleas of not guilty to two charges of violating the Ohio child labor laws were entered by G. M. Taylor, owner of the Garden Theatre, Columbus, when he was arraigned in Municipal Court, Tuesday, May 8.

The warrants against Taylor were filed by an inspector of the state department of public welfare. It is alleged that he employed in his theater children under the minimum age required by law. The case was tried before Judge Berry, who continued it until May 22.

Merle Johnson Wins Suit Against Iroquois

The Appellate Term of the Supreme Court has just affirmed, with costs, a judgment in favor of Merle Johnson against the Iroquois Productions, Inc.

Judgment was rendered for Johnson in the lower court after Caryl S. Fleming had testified for Iroquois Productions, Inc., that he had not hired the services of Johnson as scenarist. Johnson and Agnes Egan Cobb testified otherwise. M. Henry Ring of 120 West 42nd Street, argued the appeal for Johnson.

Famed Writers for Art Congress

Rex Beach Announces Acceptances from Distinguished Dramatists and Artists

MANY of the best known writers of this country, England and France have been invited to attend the International Congress on Motion Picture Arts to be held at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, on June 7 and 8, it was announced this week by Rex Beach, who is acting as chairman of the Author's League Committee. The league is arranging the gathering in cooperation with Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky, president and vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"The acceptances already received from distinguished writers, dramatists, artists, educators and other recognized leaders in American life," Mr. Beach said, "indicate that the congress will be a notable contribution toward the artistic development of motion pictures, we sincerely trust, through formulating a set of principles which should be of vital interest to both the public and the producers—as well as to the writers themselves.

"From an artistic standpoint, this prospective congress is our first really big, constructive step for the development of the motion picture."

Those who are serving with Mr. Beach on the committee are: Samuel Hopkins Adams, George Barr Baker, Edwin Bjorkman, Ellis Parker Butler, Irvin S. Cobb, George Creel, C. B. Falls, Charles Dana Gibson, John Golden, Clayton Hamilton, Rupert Hughes, Edward Hungerford, Will Irwin, Orson Lowell, George Barr McCutcheon, George Mallon, George Middleton, Harvey O'Higgins, Floyd W. Martin G. Smith, Presidential Candidate, Urges Cooperation In Statement

MARTIN G. SMITH, president of the M. P. T. O., Ohio, and one of the candidates for president of the M. P. T. O. A. at the Chicago session next week sets forth the following statement of the needs of the M. P. T. O. A. and some of the things he hopes to accomplish in the event of his election.

"Our present chief executive, Sydney S. Cohen, has led us faithfully, honestly and efficiently to our fourth milestone.

"This accomplishment, unparalleled in our industry, is to his credit only—not to ours. Our organization is alive today only because of the incomparable sagacity, ability and strength of a mental giant.

"Our organization is the result of the sacrifice and effort of the individual—not of the mass.

"To me, the paramount task of our gathering in Chicago is the formulation of, first, a permanent and practical plan of financing, and second, an intensive nation-wide campaign of recruiting the ranks and of building up the backbone of the organization.

"Then, the selection of officers—men of undoubted integrity and honesty who will consider as mandates the policies formulated by the convention, and who will, without delay, efficiently and effectively carry them out in a business-like manner.

"The announcement of my candidacy for president of the national organization was the desire of the Executive Committee and members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, of which I have been president since its inception, as well as that of my friends elsewhere in motion picture circles.

"There will be no campaign committee to extol my virtues. Personally, I intend to spend no money to advance my candidacy, and I have requested that my friends do the same. The wolves will not.

"I have suggested to the members of the Ohio delegation that they not make any commitments prior to their arrival in Chicago on any matters pertaining to the convention, but instead to go into session with an open mind to decide for themselves what is best to protect their investments.

"From all indications, our national convention will be the largest in attendance in the history of our industry.

"But at the same time it should be made to be the most constructive and helpful gathering as well, with its sessions devoted exclusively to the discussion of exhibitor problems and to the making of such plans as seem best suited to care for them.

"The so-called 'differences within our ranks' cannot be compromised. They must be ignored. Let us not allow personalities to interfere with the accomplishment of the really important and tremendous task now confronting us.

"Let us not have politics, but clean, healthy competition for the honor and responsibility of leading the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"And above all, let us not forget, 'It ain't the individual, nor the army as a whole, but the everlasting team work of every blooming soul.'

(Signed) "MARTIN G. SMITH, President,
"Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio."

Smith, president of the Western New York Motion Picture Theatres, Inc., invited to sit on the board or to appoint a representative, has replied to Mr. Samson as follows:

"Our organization has adopted a policy of taking part in no arbitration, but of letting all matters in dispute in this business go to the courts for settlement. On account of this policy we are unable to accept your invitation. Also on account of this policy all of our members will be unable to sign any contract which compels arbitration and under any and all circumstances will refuse to appear before, submit to or be bound by your so-called arbitration committee."

Must Operate on Standard Time, Is Edict

Motion picture theatres at New London, Conn., must be operated Sundays under standard time, according to the edict of Prosecuting Attorney Daniel M. Cronin, irrespective of the fact that daylight savings is generally being followed throughout that state. The New London theatre managers had adopted the daylight savings schedule and were highly in favor of the change, especially because it permitted them to stage two programs Sunday evenings.

Prosecutor Cronin has instructed Chief of Police Charles A. Pinney to see that there be no violations of the law, in permitting the theatres to operate only under standard time Sundays. Orders of the prosecuting attorney went into effect for the first time last Sunday. The motion picture men do not favor the order, as they will have to dispense with Sunday evening programs—or be content with staging but one program.

Chevy Chase Would Close Sunday Theatre

The new Chevy Chase theatre is to be a test of Sunday amusements sentiment in that prosperous residential suburb of Washington. Six civic organizations and four churches are endeavoring to arouse public opinion against Manager E. J. Stutz, for "treating the community ideals with contempt," by opening his theatre after three 6. m. Sundays, as permitted by law. Something like a boycott may result.

The opponents of Sunday exhibitions allege that the promoters of the theatre promised to keep it dark on Sundays. Some of them take the position that while they are tolerant of Sunday amusements under ordinary circumstances, the Chevy Chase residence section does not welcome a Sunday theatre, "in its midst." So far Mr. Stutz has not answered a formal communication from the citizens' committee, asking him to close the theatre Sundays, a fact that has not tended to calm the situation.

The son of the former censor board head received a broken collarbone, a broken jawbone, front teeth loosened and severely bruised about the head and chest. Results of an X-ray taken May 8 have not as yet been made known by hospital physicians.

The conference, which was held at the Wine-coff Hotel on May 7, was the largest and most successful meeting of interests identified with the better films movement that has been held since the first Atlanta Conference on Better Films held more than a year ago and which marked the inception of the idea generally throughout the Southeastern states.

The meeting was presided over by Mrs. Boykin and lasted for several hours. Among those who were in attendance were the following: Mrs. Myrtle Snell, Birmingham, Ala.; Mrs. James Eugene Reilly, president of the Charlotte committee; Colonel Jason N. Joy, representative of the Will Hays organization; Miss Ruth Rich, Jacksonville, Fla.; Mrs. W. N. Whitaker, Chattanooga, Tenn., and Clarence A. Perry, associate director of the Russell Sage Foundation. Addresses were also made by Willard Patterson, manager of the Metropolitan theatre, and A. C. Cowles, of the Public Relations Department of Southern Enterprises.

Great interest is being shown in the fight by other Virginia and southern exhibitors in the territory, and even in the Atlanta region.

In connection with this flotation, it is pointed out that the Famous Players Canadian Corporation was formed as a subsidiary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of New York, which has a capital of $30,000,000, on which 8 per cent has been paid for years. The Canadian company was organized in 1919 and in that year it owned 16 theatres seating 37,000 persons. The company now owns 32 theatres in Canada.

Despite heavy construction costs, earnings in the first full operating year, ending August 28, 1920, were $291,987, against first preferred dividends to be paid of $180,000. In the year ended August 31, 1922, one of severe depression in the theatre business, earnings of the company in Canada totalled $320,000 and first preferred dividends were maintained. During the half year ending February 24 last, earnings of the company amounted to $297,553, against first preferred dividends of $160,000.

Announcement is made that earnings for the current year, ending next August, are expected to reach $500,000, which will be available for preferred dividends of $320,000. All earnings mentioned were after operation, maintenance, renewals, taxes and depreciation costs had been deducted.

The new issue is to be used for further expansion, it is understood.

Preferred Program Is Announced

Leading Plays, Books and Stories Are Acquired for Output for Next Year

Al Lichtman, B. P. Schulberg, and J. G. Bachmann announce the purchase of a list of plays, books, and stories, which will form Preferred's output for next year.

Frank Craven's play "The First Year," heads the list. It ran on Broadway two years and recently closed a year's engagement in Chicago.

A series of conferences between David Belasco and the Lichtman Preferred organization resulted in the acquisition by the latter of "The Boomerang," the Belasco play, of which Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes are authors. The stage play set a long run record, a few seasons ago, on Broadway.

"The Virginian," by Owen Wister, stands next in importance on Preferred's list.

Rida Johnson Young's "Maytime," has also been purchased from the Messrs. Shubert.

Robert W. Service's novel "Poisoned Paradise," is another included in the announcement.

A story of modern society, "The Breath of Scandal," by Edwin Balmer is another purchase. This recently ran as a serial in Cosmopolitan Magazine and later the novel was published in book form by Doubleday Page.

Contracts have also been closed by Preferred for the screen rights of Zona Gale's novel, "Faint Perfume," a recently published story.

After several months of negotiations, "White Man," was secured for filming. "White Man" is the work of George Agnew Chamberlain, and has gone into several editions since its first publication in 1919.

Lichtman, Schulberg and Bachmann also list "The Triflers," a novel of today by Frederick Orin Bartlett.

In addition to these properties which have just come into the hands of Preferred Pictures, their future plans include the production of "A Mansion of Aching Hearts," adapted from the song by Harry Von Tilzer and Arthur J. Lamb, "My Lady's Lips," a drama of modern society by Edward Locke, "The Aristocrat," a Hearst's Magazine story by Larry Evans and Royal A. Baker's screen drama, "When A Woman Reaches Forty."

Willard-Johnson Fight for Witwer Color

E. MASON HOPPER, Cosmopolitan director, was in charge of a battery of six cameramen, headed by George Barnes, which "shot" the Jess Willard-Floyd Johnson fight at the new Yankee Stadium last Saturday. In making scenes of the great fistic encounter, the Cosmopolitan cameramen worked from every conceivable part of the gigantic field and took more than 5,000 feet of film.

In addition to the actual fight scenes which were made for the International News Reel and which are being shown this week on the screen at the Rialto theatre, New York, Director Hopper made some colorful scenes of the great crowd of fight fans. These scenes were made by Hopper for the Cosmopolitan Corporation's picturization of H. C. Witwer's popular fight story, "Cain and Mabel," production of which will be started this week. Hopper will direct the film from the scenario of Frederick and Fanny Hatton. An all-star cast of players is now being selected to impersonate the characters created by Witwer.

Three Preferred Pictures already completed will be added to the foregoing on the releasing schedule of the Al Lichtman Corporation for the season of 1923-1924. They are "April Showers," a Tom Forman Production featuring Colleen Moore, Kenneth Harlan and Ruth Clifford. "The Broken Wing," the Broadway play directed by Tom Forman with Kenneth Harlan, Miriam Cooper, Miss Dupont and Walter Long, and "Mothers-in-Law," a Gasnier production by Frank Dazey and Agnes Christine Johnston, authors of "Rich Men's Wives" and "Poor Men's Wives."

West Coast Theatres In Expansion

Deal Closed Whereby Marcus Loew California Houses Go to Lesser Interests

NEGOTIATIONS through Joseph Schenck, West Coast Theatres, Inc., and Marcus Loew, closed a deal whereby West Coast Theatres takes over all the Loew theatres in the state of California, including Loew State in Los Angeles and Loew's Warfield in San Francisco. The transaction is said to be in excess of seven and one-half million dollars for the twenty-five-year lease of the two houses. The entire consideration is not disclosed.

The deal secures for the Loew houses, both Metro and First National releases, each handling through their own exchanges, as a result of the recent purchase by Gore Brothers, Adolph Rauh and Sol Lesser, of the First National Northern California franchise in connection with the taking over of the Turner, Dahnken and Langley houses. West Coast theatres include a chain over the state of one hundred and ten houses, with seven additional under construction.

Sol Lesser, vice-president of West Coast Theatres, Inc., and president of Principal Pictures Corporation, has completed organization for the distribution of independent pictures. Prominent in affiliation with him are Albert Rosenberg, of Seattle; Fabian interests of New Jersey, A. H. Blank Enterprises, of Des Moines; R. D. Craver interests, of the Southern States; the Stanley Amusement Company, of Philadelphia; Nathan Gordon Enterprises, of Boston; Balaban and Katz, of Chicago; Finkelstein and Ruben, of Minneapolis.

with the finished negative to seek an outlet. The producer is assured a channel of distribution worthy of the production. The new company is to operate independently of other interests involved by those concerned."

Tully to Do "Bird of Paradise"

Production Will Be Made in Hawaiian Islands Upon Completion of "Trilby"

"THE BIRD OF PARADISE," Richard Walton Tully's famous stage success, is to be produced in photoplay form. It was announced this week that the play would be brought to the screen by Mr. Tully himself, for First National release. The producer has consistently refused to sell the screen rights to this play, always stating that he would produce it himself when the time was propitious.

It is probable that Mr. Tully will turn his attention to "The Bird of Paradise" immediately upon the completion of "Trilby" which is now in production under Tully's supervision and the direction of James Young. The cast for this play is now under consideration and while Mr. Tully has not yet made final selection either of players or director, he states that the production will be filmed in the Hawaiian Islands, where the story is laid. No time limit has been placed, nor will be placed upon the production and it is liable to be anywhere from three months to a year in the making.

"The Bird of Paradise," as a stage play, is twelve years old and has been one of the few perennial favorites of the American theatre-going public.

Many a famous player has received his or her start on the road to success in "The Bird of Paradise." The part of the Hawaiian princess, Luana, elevated Laurette Taylor, Leonore Ulric, Carlotta Monterey, Bessie Barriscale, Florence Rockwell, and Muriel Starr, to stardom. Guy Bates Post played "Ten Thousand Dollar" Dean the beach comber in "The Bird of Paradise" for three years. Theodore Roberts, the famous screen character actor, created the role of Hatch, the quick tempered planter, on the stage, and Lewis Stone originated the part of Paul Wilson, Luana's lover.

Mr. Tully is not yet ready to announce if any of the original stage cast will be drafted for the screen version or whether the famous roles will be interpreted by established motion picture stars.

Fall Universal Releases Selected

Six Jewel Productions to Be Distributed During September to February Period

UNIVERSAL'S 1923-24 super-pictures, the Universal-Jewel productions to be placed in the hands of the exhibitor during the coming year, have been definitely selected. A set order of release and release date schedule have been arrived at for the first six, covering the period from September to February.

Although a tentative release schedule for fall was made public by Universal several months ago, when some of the pictures in question were first put into production, there have been several important changes in plan, due to conditions which have arisen during the last two months.

The opening of Universal's fall season will be marked by the release of "Merry-Go-Round."

This will be released on Labor Day.

The next Jewel production to be offered will be "A Lady of Quality," adapted from the novel of that name by Frances Hodgson Burnett.

This will be a Hobart Henley production. It will be Virginia Valli's first individual starring vehicle released by Universal. As a novel and as a play it was a great success. Included in the cast are Milton Sills and Mary Philbin. The Virginia Valli-Hobart Henley picture will be released early in October. It will be followed by "Jewel," an all-star production, directed by Lois Weber. This feature is a screen adaptation of Clara Louise Burnham's story. The cast includes Claude Gillingwater, Jane Mercer, Jacqueline Gadsden, Robert Frazer, Frances Raymond, Evelyn Thatcher, Ralph Yearsley and others.

The Universal-Jewel release for December will be a Priscilla Dean production adapted from Rita Weiman's stage success, "The Acquittal," of several seasons ago. "The Acquittal" is being directed by Clarence L. Brown.

Universal will open the new year with the release of "Turmoil" made from Booth Tarkington's story of that name.

In February, 1924, Universal will release "Up the Ladder," another Hobart Henley production, co-starring Virginia Valli and Reginald Denny. In the cast will be seen Bert Roach, Dorothea Wolbert, Wallace Beery, Lucille Ricksen, Tully Marshall, Craufurd Kent, June Elvidge and Charles Clary.

Three More Features for Associated Release

Roy Crawford, vice-president of Associated Exhibitors, closed contracts this week for the distribution by that company of three features.

"David Copperfield," an adaptation of the Dickens classic, will be released in the fall. Negotiations for the handling of this film by Associated were carried on with Andre Olsen, representing the Nordisk Film Compagni of Copenhagen.

Another Associated release will be "Harbor Lights," a Tom Terris production, obtained from Harry Rowson, of Ideal, through Sidney Garrett and Milton Cohen, of Inter-Globe Export Company.

The third Associated acquisition this week was "The Man Between," a Finis Fox production.

In addition to the six Universal-Jewel productions listed herewith, Universal also will release another Super-Jewel. It is to be "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the deluxe production now being made by Wallace Worsley from Victor Hugo's famous novel of 15th Century Paris. Lon Chaney, Norman Kerry and Patsy Ruth Miller have featured roles.

The second half of the 1923-1924 season will see five or six more Universal-Jewel productions placed in the hands of exhibitors.

Although the pictures to be released after February have been selected with one exception, no definite release date has been allotted to them. However, in the order of their probable release, they will be as follows:

"White Tiger," a Priscilla Dean Jewel, directed by Tod Browning from a story by himself, in which Miss Dean is supported by Wallace Beery, Matt Moore, and Ray Griffith.

"Wanted, at Home," a Universal Jewel starring Baby Peggy, the diminutive star of Century Comedies, who has been loaned to Universal for this production. This will be a King Baggot production. It will be Baby Peggy's first appearance in feature productions.

"The Magician," a screen adaptation of W. Somerset Maugham. This will be a Virginia Valli Picture.

"The Storm Daughter," from the story by Leet Renick Brown, which will be used as a Priscilla Dean starring vehicle.

"Court Martialed," a Reginald Denny starring vehicle.

Century Publicity Chief Tenders Resignation

Mrs. Maud Robinson Toombs has resigned from her position as Director of Publicity for Century Comedies. David Bader, West Coast representative for the Stern Brothers, will take her place.

The booklet, which will soon be ready for publication, is built around the thought that Schulberg had in mind that an attractive title may be made the basis of a dramatic plot.

The book will receive wide advertising, and its author has acknowledged his indebtedness to Mr. Schulberg for the idea which prompted it by publishing his picture on the cover. Several of the titles incorporated in it have been submitted to Preferred Pictures for Schulberg's consideration. Truart Launches Sales Campaign

Hoffman Makes Intensive Move for Franchising 12 Special Productions

AFTER many months of intensive planning during which definite arrangements were made for various production units and an extensive administrative organization was carefully built up, M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Truart Film Corporation is launching an intensive campaign for the franchising of not less than twelve special productions during the season of 1923-24.

As the first step in this campaign sales representatives have left New York to confer with various independent exchanges about the country including such as have already subscribed to the Truart franchise plan, and it is expected that within the next sixty days arrangements will have been made for the release of Truart product in every exchange center of the country.

Negotiations have already been consummated for the distribution of Truart Films in the New England territory, New York State and Northern New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, California, Nevada and Arizona, while tentative negotiations are awaiting completion in excess of twenty-five per cent of the territory in addition to those already closed. Included among the franchise holders are the Renown Pictures, Inc., New York and Chicago, Franklin Film Corporation, Boston, of which William Shapiro is manager, and All Star Features of Los Angeles and San Francisco.

While Truart Film Corporation has a number of pictures which are being played successfully about the country, including Edward Dillon's production, "Women Men Marry" and "The Empty Cradle," featuring Mary Alden and Harry T. Morey, the first production of the new franchise units will be "Broadway Gold," the Elaine Hammerstein starring vehicle, directed by Edward Dillon from the story by W. Carey Wonderly in Young's Magazine.

The cast assembled in support of Miss Hammerstein, includes among others, Elliot Dexter, Kathryn Williams, Harry Northrup and Eloise Goodale.

duction, Inc. and directed by Roland West, from Mr. West's New York stage play of the same name.

There will be four additional productions from the Elaine Hammerstein studios, to be directed by Edward Dillon, and at least two more pictures by the Carlos Production-Roland West unit. In addition contracts are ready to be signed with at least two other units for special feature productions.

In short subjects Mr. Hoffman has just consummated an arrangement for the production of six two-reel subjects to be produced by Arthur Maude, and to be based upon famous paintings. This type of production will carry on the work which Mr. Maude so successfully originated in the productions of "The Beggar Maid" and "Hope."

It is contemplated from time to time sales conferences will be held at the various centers between the franchise holders of Truart product and executives of the producing organization, during which Mr. Hoffman will have an opportunity to go in detail into the requirements of the exchanges to the end that the product furnished by Truart will be of a calibre and type that will bring them the best results.

Steffes Outlines Platform for Candidacy

"Through the elimination of the tremendous waste now attending the production and marketing of films, rental reduction will be made possible. I undertake to work for the elimination of such waste through securing a form of contract that will be equitable and inviolable, and if necessary, enlisting the aid of the public in curtailing picture lengths, in convincing producers of the fallacy of exorbitant salaries for players, duplication of effort and needless expenditures.

"I commend producers on the efforts they have made in raising the moral standards of motion pictures. Through the support they have given clean pictures, members have aided greatly in improving the moral quality of films. I pledge untiring effort in behalf of still greater improvements, that we may better discharge our duty to the American people.

"The practice of producers in inserting paid advertisements in pictures which they make and lease to exhibitors as entertainment, is essentially unfair. Our members are protesting against this practice, and rightly so. I pledge a firm and unswerving policy against this practice.

"I congratulate the administration on the steps it has taken in assuming and discharging its duties with respect to the public. The public relation policy it has adopted is a constructive and commendable one, and I undertake to continue and extend the program adopted.

"I solicit and invite the support and co-operation of all those who favor a national organization of material strength, functioning constructively in the interest of all of the independent exhibitors of this country.

"Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) "W. A. STEFFES."

The principle role in "Post Haste" is that of a postman. The story honors and glorifies the honesty and integrity of the men in the mail service. And because it will be a faithful document of the problems of these men it is said the moral support and co-operation of the Post Office Department has been secured for the production.

Around the Trade

ONE of Chicago's largest transactions involving theatre properties, was closed last week when Frank J. Godsol, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, purchased the Roosevelt theatre property on State street for $1,800,000 from the Ascher-Roosevelt Theatre Company, subject to mortgages aggregating approximately $1,388,000. It is understood that Mr. Godsol bought the property as his personal venture and not as head of Goldwyn Pictures, although that corporation is reported to already own fifty per cent of the stock in Ascher Brothers' theatres. The Roosevelt seats sixteen hundred and is under lease for five years, beginning last June, to Balaban & Katz, at a rental which is reported to be $260,000 annually. H. A. Snow was on hand and gave an interesting talk on how the pictures were taken. He was introduced by Frank Busch, representing Mayor Dever. Manager McCurdy, of the Randolph theatre, where the picture is being shown, and who is responsible for the children's matinee idea, also gave a brief address. The musical accompaniment to the picture was rendered by Charles A. Shamp. Two hundred and fifty Boy Scouts, under the personal direction of George Stevenson, Chicago head of the scouts, patrolled Michigan avenue, Grant Park, Wabash avenue, Congress and State street, to make the way safe for the kiddies attending the matinee, many of whom were transported to the theatre in Ford motor cars through the courtesy of Henry Ford and A. W. L. Gilpin, Chicago branch manager of the Ford Motor Car Company and Chicago dealers.

McVicker's Jazz Week, which started May 14th, proved a very elaborate entertainment and brought big crowds to the theatre. It was a novelty, which was watched with much interest by theatre owners throughout the country.

Among the Exchanges

WHEN the New York officials of Paramount arrived in Chicago last Friday, to attend their organization's convention, they were met at the station by Dan Roche with a horse drawn "covered wagon," which led a parade of automobiles from the depot to the Drake Hotel, which was convention headquarters. On the front seat of the wagon was a banjo player in costume of '49 and the cavalcade was the center of attraction for the Loop crowds during its march. Otto Bolle, Paramount's Chicago sales manager, has been promoted and is leaving to become manager of the Detroit exchange. Exploiteer Danziger is also leaving Chicago, having been assigned to the Cincinnati office.

George Bromley was given a hearty welcome by his many friends on Film Row when he arrived in town this week to take up his new duties as manager of American Releasing Corporation, succeeding Manager Manske, who returns to Minneapolis to take charge of American's office there. Mr. Bromley has been in Buffalo and other eastern points for some time past.

William Tracy is now covering suburban territory for Celebrated, having resigned his position with Universal to join the Friedman organization.

E. L. Morgan is now managing the Chicago showing of "The Covered Wagon" and Randolph Hartley is in charge of publicity, as it has been necessary for Dan Roche to resume his duties as exploitation manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Chicago exchange.

"Down to the Sea in Ships," the widely advertised Hodkinson feature, which has been going over big in the East, but has been delayed here owing to the downtown first-run situation, has been booked into the Roosevelt theatre for an indefinite run, starting July 29th, according to Manager Simmons, of Hodkinson.

Tie-Up with Newsstands Made on Fight Picture Cards

New York, N. Y.—The run at the Rialto theatre of the motion pictures of the Willard vs. Johnson and Firpo vs. McAuliffe fights in New York recently for the benefit of the Free Milk Fund Campaign was given the support of an exploitation tie-up in which large cards with pictures of the fighters were placed extensively about New York, principally on newsstands. Back of this same stunt is a record-breaking campaign of preparation by the Universal publicity department.

It was late Saturday evening before the last of the exposed negative of the fights reached the Universal Fort Lee laboratories. On Sunday afternoon the pictures showed at the Rialto theatre.

Up until Saturday afternoon at two o'clock it was uncertain as to whether or not the weather would permit holding the fights at all. When the clouds rolled away and the sun came peeking through, the printing presses immediately started running full blast on the posters and window cards. By Monday morning the bill posters had started sniping the fight paper around New York and shops and newsstands were already displaying the window cards on the fight pictures.

Fashion Show Tied Up with "Poor Men's Wives" Run

PORTLAND, ORE.—The Liberty theatre, one of the Jensen and Von Herberg houses, featured a fashion show with the recent exhibition of "Poor Men's Wives" in that house. The show was made timely as a style fete to introduce spring fashions and served as a unique follow-up for a similar display staged at the Liberty in connection with "Rich Men's Wives" some months ago, when the new fall models were shown to their patrons.

The latest tie-up was effected through the co-operation of two large dry goods firms in Portland. Four presentations were given daily. Many of the gowns displayed were similar to those used in the ball scene in "Poor Men's Wives."

of business executive conferences without end are held before a single poster is decided upon or the wording of a slide selected, the work on the fight pictures offers a splendid example of the pep and initiative in the motion picture industry. Here we have a full length film, cut, titled, exploited, and shown all within the time limit of twenty-four hours.

Horseless Jockey on Street Is "The Hottentot" Ballyhoo

New York City.—Jose Fernandes, ballyhoo specialist, and Manager O. J. Lustig of the Arena theatre, worked together on an effective little street ballyhoo on "The Hottentot."

Fernandes, in vivid jockey's costume, worked on the sidewalks to ask passersby:

"Have you seen 'The Hottentot'? I've lost my horse. I'm wondering how a horse could walk away. I'm looking for the Hottentot."

At the moment when the spectators' interest was at a white heat, the ballyhoo expert would turn suddenly, point to the poster above the theatre and say:

"There's 'The Hottentot.' If you want to see him go inside the house."

Window Displays Boost Run of "Trailing African Animals"

New Orleans, La.—An extensive exploitation campaign was used to put "Trailing African Wild Animals" over at the Liberty theatre.

Several window displays gave great prominence to the run at the Liberty. Notable was the display of the Winchester Arms Company which gave a large centre window to "Trailing African Wild Animals." This was enhanced by a special display sent to the store by the Winchester Arms Company, New Haven, the central plants and offices of the company which is co-operating throughout the country.

In addition there was several exploitation novelties which aroused great curiosity.

A special school children's matinee was given which had the support and encouragement of the school officials. The matinee was decided upon only after these school officials had viewed the picture and had endorsed it as an educational feature.

"Hunting Big Game" Exploited Well on Short Notice

Houston, Texas.—Manager E. F. Collins of the Capitol theatre had little time in which to advertise "Hunting Big Game in Africa" in advance because of the short booking notice, but he got busy as soon as notified and covered the town with plenty of poster paper which was paralleled in the newspapers by convincing ads with plenty of cuts and special stories.

More than one thousand special invitations were mailed to the school teachers, newspaper men and scout masters of Houston to attend the opening day's show—and Mr. Collins writes that more than half of this number were present. Besides this special showing, another showing was held for the school children, which was attended by a large crowd.

Small toy elephants were placed in the windows around town with the window cards, and also a special tie-up with Piggly-Wiggly people resulted in window displays of animal crackers in all of their stores.

The lobby of the theatre was dressed in jungle atmosphere and placed here and there were cut-outs of animals with a few stuffed animals loaned the theater by a local taxidermist.

Fake Phonograph in Lobby On "Mighty Lak' a Rose"

HAMILTON, Ont.—A double deception was worked on the public when "Mighty Lak' a Rose" was played at the Temple theatre. A replica of a phonograph was made of beaver board, but with this difference: The imitation measured seven feet in height and was obviously a "dupe."

It was first placed in the lobby, where a real phonograph, hidden in the leaves of the trellis, played "Mighty Lak' a Rose." Hundreds of people, attracted by the chords of the music, wandered up to the cardboard instrument to hear the strains, only to turn away disgusted at their own simplicity when the dodge was discovered.

Later the "dummy" was taken out on an automobile for a street ballyhoo. A cornet soloist inside the beaver board machine played the title song and again amazement was registered as to where the music was coming from.

Calling Cards Good Stunt on "The Christian"

WOONSOCKET, R. I.—The distribution of Richard Dix calling cards proved valuable publicity for the showing of "The Christian" at the Park theatre. Goldwynner Buddy Stuart of the Boston Exchange and Manager Joe Donahue had several thousand of the calling cards printed and distributed them from house to house throughout the city. They were also left on the counters of drug, cigar and candy stores. Woonsocket had not seen this stunt worked before and got all "het up" over it.

A banner was run across the street in front of the Park, reading, "See 'The Christian,' Park theatre, starts Monday." Heralds were distributed at the theatre, on the streets and in the big stores.

Vocal Prologue Featured On "Glimpses of Moon"

COLUMBIA, S. C.—In contrast to his usual method of procedure, Manager C. W. Irwin of the Imperial theatre decided to feature a prologue, which consisted of the singing of the song, "Glimpses of the Moon," especially written for this picture, and appropriate stage settings.

A cut-out of the moon in the 24-sheet was rigged up with flasher attached, so that the eyes winked during the singing of the song by a prominent young society girl of Columbia. Since prologues are so seldom used in the Imperial, this made quite a hit.

"Robin Hood" Is Given Strong Exploitation Campaign

Tampa, Fla.—"Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" was given the benefit of an unusually heavy exploitation by Manager John B. Carroll, of the Victory theatre. Mr. Carroll believes in publicity and uses the papers liberally. He also used a street ballyhoo on this picture. A float was built representing the turret wall of an old English castle. Two live "knights," in costume, rode upon the top of the turret.

Mr. Carroll also arranged a very striking lobby display. The entire lobby was covered with wall board with cut out spaces for the box office window, and the exit and entrance doors. This board was then painted to represent the massive rock walls of an ancient castle. There was nothing modern showing in the lobby, back of the regular frames for photos and posters at the front pillars.

An attractive prologue was also given. He used a wood set for the scene and the set resembled very much the scene in Sherwood Forest, as shown in the picture. Right in the center of the stage was a fountain with real water. In the costume of a Knight of old, Mr. Nino Ruisi sang the famous "Brown October Ale" song from the opera, and Mrs. Ruisi, who was dressed in a handsome costume of the Maid Marion style, sang "Oh, Promise Me." This prologue was greatly appreciated and several encores had to be given.

"Third Alarm" Campaign Put Over Without Co-operation

Peoria, Ill.—Despite a last minute turn of events that deprived him of Fire Department co-operation, such as has been obtained elsewhere, R. C. McMullen, manager of Ascher's Palace theatre, put over a complete campaign on "The Third Alarm."

He made a direct tie-up with the Fire Department, the Boy Scouts, and the Fire Prevention Bureau of Peoria. Arrangements were made to place old apparatus in front of the theatre for a parade. Just as the apparatus was leaving the station to form the parade three days before the opening, the Mayor of Peoria stopped same, refusing to allow the Fire Department to co-operate in any way with the presentation of the production.

"Tol'able David" Sent to Lloyd George, Guarded

LONDON, ENG.—A forward step in practical exploitation was taken recently by First National's English organization, when it despatched a special print of "Tol'able David" to be shown to Lloyd George.

The sending of the film can by special escort was all in the day's work. It carried a little touch of sensationalism; but it has been done in America in the case of "Robin Hood" and other pictures whose despatch was attended by special guards and armed escorts, all for publicity purposes.

The surprising part of it is that the staid English cinema world is waking up to the exploitation possibilities of sending the print to Britain's most famous man and not to be merely satisfied with the prestige and self-satisfaction gained in having him see the film.

The special uniformed escort was a bit of stage effect that attracted attention and gained the same publicity that an armed guard for a can of "Robin Hood" did in this country.

"World's Applause" Display Is Strong Attention Getter

El Paso, Texas.—What is considered locally one of the Palace's best lobby displays was prepared by Manager W. E. Paschall for "The World's Applause" at the Palace theatre.

The central display was particularly effective, and was built to represent a stage. The front was arched, real stage foot-lights, the entire stage setting draped on the sides and in the rear with real nice curtain material. A good reproduction of Bebe Daniels in the center with a sun-burst behind. The gown, headdress and sun-burst were decorated with brilliants of several different colors. At night with the foot-lights shining on this display it was very effective.

What made this center piece so particularly good was the fact that the curtains were made with draw-strings just as they would be on a real stage, and the curtain ropes were attached to an eccentric operated by a small motor. The result was that the curtains opened and closed automatically as long as the motor was in operation.

The device was so effective and worked so well that it was a matter of interest to all passers-by just how the result was accomplished. It was also a matter of interest to the employees and manager to hear the interesting discussions.

Lobby and marquee display for "Trailing African Wild Animals" at the New theatre, Baltimore

Not discouraged, McMullen immediately rearranged his entire campaign. The Journal Transcript newsboys' band headed the parade on the day of the opening. This band consisted of twenty members in uniform. The Boy Scouts then covered the whole town collecting rubbish to be burned at a public bonfire. In all, nineteen dump wagons filled with rubbish were collected. It was impossible to get fire apparatus. McMullen secured a red service wagon of the Cadillac Motor Sales Company in Peoria, and this was rigged up to look like a hook and ladder, and was kept in the streets for two days.

McMullen then went to the old Volunteer Organization of Peoria and secured from them an old hand pump used in 1855. This relic was placed in front of the theatre. At 5 o'clock on the opening day the Boy Scouts, the Journal Transit Band, the Cadillac Service wagon, the repair wagon of the Peoria Street Car Company, were placed in a parade a little over a block long and marched to the foot of main street.

"The Kid Reporter" Boosted by Resemblance Contest

Denver, Colo. A Baby Peggy resemblance contest, in which 1,500 contestants took part, was put over by the Denver Post and the Princess theatre, through T. B. McCormick, Universal exploiter, and it is estimated that 10,000 spectators saw the judging of the contest.

For a week the contest had been announced by front page stories and pictures, and the little contestants poured in from all parts of the state, and even from Wyoming, Nebraska and New Mexico. Many were cleverly costumed to represent Baby Peggy in her many characterizations. The number of little girlies taking part was so great that the time required for the line to pass the judges' stand was two hours and twenty minutes.

Manager H. E. Ellison, of the Princess and Rialto theatres, and his publicity director, Al. G. Birch, engineered the contest through the Post to exploit "The Kid Reporter" and forthcoming Baby Peggy pictures which will be regular features at the Princess.

Fifty cash prizes, totaling $150, were offered to the youngsters; who most closely resembled the popular little star, and each of the fifteen hundred contestants were given a nice box of candy. A special prize was offered by the Berkowitz Shop, an exclusive children's store. This same establishment created the Baby Peggy hair cut and offered to cut free of charge every contestant's hair to resemble the Baby Peggy "Bob."

During the hours set aside for this work the firm's whole staff of barbers and an extra force were kept busy.

Ties Up With Kresge Store on "The Christian"

FALL RIVER, Mass.—The S. S. Kresge chain of five- and ten-cent stores, which usually reserves its windows for its own displays, was tied up for the first time when "The Christian" was shown at the Rialto theatre.

Goldwynner Buddy Stuart induced the Fall River store to give one big window over to the display of a large book made of beaver board, painted red, carrying the title of the Hall Caine story and the fact that it was produced in pictures by Maurice Tourneur for Goldwyn and was then showing at the Rialto theatre. The book was two and one-half feet wide by four feet high.

Displays of novel, together with photographs, posters and window cards were obtained in Adams Book Store, City News and Book Store and in Banford's Stationery and Book Store.

Hyman Makes Strong Tie-up on "Safety Last" with School

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, with the assistance of Lee S. Ferguson, publicity director, put over an excellent tie-up on "Safety Last" that paid directly as well as indirectly, when a special morning performance was given for a Brooklyn high school.

The idea, which may be utilized by various exhibitors throughout the country, was this: Cordial relations between the high school and the Brooklyn Mark Strand had been promoted by Ferguson previously through the arrangement of a special morning show of "Robin Hood," which brought out a full house of students at a price per ticket slightly lower than the usual box office admission. The Brooklyn Mark Strand seats 3,000 people. The "Safety Last" showing was along different lines, as to get the benefit of the advertising among the students an arrangement was made to let a share of the receipts go to the school fund, to help pay for equipment being bought. This fact made the Strand talked about for a whole week, and if you think those high school pupils cannot spread news you have another guess coming. The theatre got a good guarantee from the principal and a share of the receipts above a certain figure, and the school printed tickets and sold them in advance. Thus the tie-up was complete—the Brooklyn Mark Strand was well paid in cash for advertising itself in a high school that has 6,000 students.

"Dangerous Age" Traffic Signs Are Put Up Anonymously

Sandusky, Ohio.—"Dangerous Age" signs and anti-speeding campaigns to exploit this picture are not new, but George Schade of the Schade theatre put this stunt over with a new slant, when he made no mention of the theatre.

At the time Schade played the picture the Sandusky Automobile Club was in the midst of a strenuous "Safety First" campaign. This was about a week before "The Dangerous Age" was to open and before any announcement was made of its coming.

Suddenly one morning Sanduskians were amazed to see every pillar and post in the main business section placarded with signs reading: "This is The Dangerous Age. Do not park here."

Not a word of advertising for the theatre. Motorists puzzled over the identity of the mysterious "angel" and the identity was kept a secret until Schade was ready to announce the coming run of "The Dangerous Age" after which it was impossible to keep the secret any longer. The inference was too obvious. His cooperation without seeking a line of credit for the theatre was cause for wide comment and the newspaper stories that followed gave him more valuable publicity than if he had subordinated the purposes of the safety first campaign to theatre advertising on his cards.

Mystery Girl Wins Space for "Mighty Lak' a Rose"

Omaha, Neb.—An exploitation campaign that included several novel features was conducted by Manager Julius K. Johnson of the Rialto theatre on "Mighty Lak' a Rose."

One of the best attractors was the mystery story that the hospital reporter for the Omaha Bee managed to catch. An attractive but mysterious young girl made the rounds of the hospitals for several days, giving roses to the patients. She also visited the Orphans' home and the Child Savings' Institute. The first day she refused to answer any questions or to give her name. On the second day she admitted, in a special interview with the Bee representative, that she had seen "Mighty Lak' a Rose" and that the impression it had created had been so profound that she had decided to give part of her time to doing good work and spreading cheer among children and hospital patients. The story was good news and was played up by the paper, creating a tremendous prestige for the picture.

An old fiddlers' competition was run by Mr. Johnson at the Strand theatre, the cue being

Old Boys' Night is Stunt to Exploit "Grumpy"

TORONTO, ONT.—An exploitation angle that can be applied in almost any town was used in connection with "Grumpy" playing at Shea's Hippodrome.

The well-known Dufferin School has an alumni association known as the Dufferin Old Boys' Association, now composed of the leading business men of the Dominion, who were given a special showing of the film.

The central character "Grumpy," portrayed by Theodore Roberts, is a characteristic "old boy," and other exhibitors can follow suit and arrange an "Old Boys' Night" for the members of the various school alumni associations in their towns.

supplied by the predominating influence of violin music in the picture. The competition was well advertised for the Thursday night of the picture's run. Competition was limited to fiddlers of 50 years of age and over. Each fiddler was allowed to select his own melody, the one condition being that it must be an old-time favorite selection. Fifteen fiddlers showed up.

Toledo Well Billed in Varied "Down to the Sea" Campaign

Toledo, Ohio.—General Manager A. C. Hogganson of the Alhambra theatre, aided by C. D. Peavey, Hodgkinson branch manager, and Jack Edwards from the home office, obtained unusual publicity for "Down to the Sea in Ships."

Eighty 24-sheet boards were secured throughout the city. Twenty-five cut-outs were used in windows and other important junction points. Twenty thousand Heralds were distributed from house to house in all sections of the town. Twenty-five two-column stories appeared in nearby suburban newspapers. Prior to the opening the Alhambra theatre came out with a full page smash in all of the leading newspapers.

A special show was given free to 400 newsboys which gave the production 400 enthusiastic boosters.

Stanley Company Gets Behind "Down to the Sea in Ships"

Philadelphia, Pa.—To put over the run of "Down to the Sea in Ships" at the Karlton theatre, the Stanley Company of America used one of the most detailed exploitation campaigns it has employed in some time.

Fifteen trailers were used in fifteen different theatres. Fifty thousand heralds were distributed at all of the Stanley theatres in Philadelphia and vicinity, as well as a house-to-house canvass. Special novelty news window posters were distributed in prominent windows all over the business section of the city.

Large window displays were secured in prominent windows which attracted crowds, blocking the sidewalks for hours at a time. A very attractive lobby display was used in the theatre with a display of harpoons and relics captured by Elmer Clifton on the whaling cruise, together with stills and miniature square-rigger.

BLACK SHADOWS

See the Sinuous Sirens and Untameable
Savages of the South Seas

A few short years and the South Sea Islands will be the land of Yesterday.

Civilization is wiping the splendid natives of the Marquesas, Tahiti and Samoa off the map. Travellers and scientists call them physically the finest people in the world. Soon it will be impossible to get such pictures as these, showing them as they are, at work and at play.

Still farther off are the fiercest and most untameable savages known. The American Indian was gentle compared with them. They are happiest when fighting. In "Black Shadows" you see these beast-like Solomon Islanders not only in their homes, but at their favorite pursuit,—warfare!

Thrilling, educational, interesting.

Regional News From Correspondents

Washington Film Row and Theatre Brevities

GEORGE C. BACKUS, well known in Virginia film circles, was a visitor last week in local exchanges, booking attractions for his new Rivoli theatre which opened Thursday, May 10, at Hampton, Va. Located on South King street, this 270-seat house was thronged with patrons to see the opening and the feature film, Johnny Hines in "Sure Fire Flint," secured by Mr. Backus on the heels of the Metropolitan theatre, Washington, run. Mr. Backus has taken the News for six years regularly and would not be without it. His knowledge of the film theatre business runs back twelve years, putting him in the pioneer class. Most of this time he was in the service of the Scott circuit of theatres in Hampton and Phoebus, Va.

Lee Ainslee of Cambridge, Md., paid a visit to the office of George Fuller, Metro branch manager, on Monday.

The first local pre-view of "Hungry Hearts," is to be given at the Parish of the Holy Name, under the auspices of the Holy Name Society. Manager Walter Price of the Goldwyn offices, says that at the request of Father McShane, a relative of film salesman Ed McShane, the church showing was arranged. This takes precedence over the former plan of having a showing under the patronage of Secretary of Labor Davis.

Warner Bros. announce through their local representative, Manager Lester Rosenthal of Independent, the initial showing in this territory of "The Little Church Around the Corner," one of the Warner Book Classics, at the Rialto, the week of May 13.

George Faulkner, who has made himself very popular in the territory since last December, has been transferred from the management of W. W. Hodkinson's Washington exchange to the Buffalo branch. He is being succeeded here by Mr. Dewalt of the Hodkinson organization, who reached here Friday.

Robert Smeltzer of New York and Washington, has severed his connection with the Pathe Exchanges and Associated Exhibitors, and has definitely accepted the appointment as manager of the Washington Franchise exchange of Associated First National Pictures. He was for many years manager of exchanges here, and so is no stranger. Recently he was associated with Messrs. Harry Kane and Gene Crandall, et al., in the Associated Exhibitors unit of Pathe, supervising the sales in the eastern exchanges. Rumor has it that Smeltzer will see the trade in a Standard All-Steel Eight, and that he hopes his sales hit on all eight. J. Louis Rome and J. Back of the Baltimore theatre ring were early callers last week, renewing amicable relations with Manager Smeltzer.

Mrs. Harriet Hawley Locher and her secretary, Miss Gladys Mills, spent a recent weekend in a river trip to Norfolk. During her absence the girls of the Capital Athletic Club held their weekly meeting at the Metropolitan screen room, as usual.

Efforts are being made to have Miss Leah Baird, who appears here the week of May 13, with the "Is Divorce A Failure?" picture at the Cosmos, appear in person for the clubwomen and committees active in the work of Mrs. Locher's department in the Crandall organization. Publicity Director Wood of Los Angeles, special representative and advance man for Miss Baird, has been at the Willard since last Friday.

Nelson Bell says that "Despite the 'May winter' that struck the Capital, preparations are under way for the opening of the Al Fresco summer gardens at the Apollo and Savoy theatres during the warm weather. The parks will be completely redecorated and refurbished, in the usual efficient Crandall manner. This work is under the direct supervision of General Manager Joseph P. Morgan.

Nat Glasser, chief mechanic of the Crandall chain, and managing the York theatre, last week took motion pictures of the Washington White High Schools Shakespeare pageant. These prints will be presented to the Board of Education of the District for its permanent record and such further exhibition as it sees fit.

Al Garner celebrated the return of his pretty and popular wife, Kitty Garner, from her year in burlesque, with the purchase of a new Buick. Al and Kitty will now tour the region selling films; for every sale means a chance to hear Kitty sing "Eilli, Eilli," the Jewish melody of sympathy and pathos.

N. Mirskey of the Crandall music department, is offering the Charles J. Roberts arrangement, "Old Folks at Home and in Foreign Lands," as the concert overture to "Safety Last." Musical folk lore of France, Scotland, Spain, Germany, Ireland, Italy and Hungary is blended harmoniously into the plantation ballad of Dixie.

Tom Moore's Rialto offered a unique new musical novelty the past week, as a foil to "Racing Hearts." The Salb Brothers, John and Walter, appeared on the stage in a Baby Grand piano duet, with the members of the Melody Boys orchestra soloists, as accompanists and soloists. The saxophone work in the chamber music numbers was well done, and the piano duet was the equal of any traveling combination offered. Elias Breeskin, now concertmeister for the Rialto, was for several years billed with the late Enrico Caruso, in all the tenor's operatic and concert tours in the United States and foreign countries. Later he appeared alone, and recently accepted the contract offered him by Mr. Moore, as it gives him an opportunity to be near his brother, Daniel Breeskin of Crandall's Savoy.

In preparation for a return of hot weather, the Crandall theatres are overhauling their typhoon fans and cooling systems. LaBelle, in a motion picture enterprise. The latter has been in the Islands for the past year. He is well known in the industry as having been director of publicity for the M. P. T. O. of America. Photoplay Personals and Events in Southeast

FOR the second time since E. E. Heller has been connected with the Charlotte Pathe office it has been found necessary to move to larger quarters to accommodate the constantly increasing business of this office. Five years ago Pathe moved into their large and commodious quarters at 235 South Tryon street, then by far the largest exchange quarters in Charlotte. Last week they were compelled to give up this place and are now in the new fireproof Dowd building, corner Fourth and Poplar streets, in much larger and more convenient quarters. Manager Heller has been connected with the Charlotte office for many years and has made for himself a warm place in the hearts of all in the business through his territory, as well as being one of the most popular members of the exchange set in Charlotte.

E. E. Heller.

Manager E. F. Dardine, of the Charlotte Universal office, during the last week in May will celebrate the completion of his tenth year as manager of the Charlotte office, an undisturbed record that will be hard to equal by any manager now doing business at their original stand. To celebrate the event Dardine has christened it "Dardine's Tenth Anniversary Week" and is calling upon his exhibitor friends to shoot in huge blocks of dates for that week, pointing out that this is the first time in his ten year's connection with the office that he has made a similar request. It is declared by Mr. Dardine that he is meeting the most spontaneous response to his request, even beyond his fondest hopes, which is a high testimonial of the esteem in which he is held throughout his territory.

Mrs. J. Ernest Williamson, Sr., was an interesting guest at the Norva theatre, Norfolk, Va., during the first showing of the Williamson "Wonders of the Sea" picture. She is the mother of the noted producer of the picture and still lives in Norfolk, the old family home, where J. Ernest, Jr., was formerly a member of the staff of the "Virginian Pilot" before embarking in the business of undersea photography. Many Norfolk people are owners of large blocks of stock in the Williamson corporation, it is declared.

C. E. Peppiatt, manager of the Charlotte Famous Players office, and J. U. McCormick, formerly of Select but now Al Lichtman manager in Charlotte, will shortly open a complete theatrical supply house in Charlotte, carrying complete theatre equipment and supply stocks of every description. The new business will be placed under the management of a competent and experienced supply man, both of its owners retaining their managerial positions with their respective exchanges.

A New York non-theatrical motion picture interest, the Pictorial Clubs, Inc., are spending considerable effort and money to educate people in the larger southern cities regarding the potentialities of the motion picture in the non-theatrical field and its influence over the young mind and scope to which its usefulness in this field can be enlarged. Last week Charles F. Abbott, vice-president of the corporation, lectured and demonstrated the theory before many educators, preachers and teachers at John Marshall School, Norfolk, Va. The meeting was sponsored by Rev. D. N. McLaughlin, member of a local organization interested in promoting the showing of wholesome motion pictures in the schools and social halls of the churches.

Ford Anderson, who has been appointed supervisor of North Carolina theatres of Southern Enterprises, will make his headquarters in Charlotte, where his company operates the Imperial and Alhambra theatres. He has just completed a circuit of the towns in which they operate theatres in company with Carl Bamford, retiring supervisor, who in future will devote his interests to his own theatre.

Charlotte's Strand theatre closed its vaudeville-picture combination program May 12 and beginning May 14 opened with a few weeks of pictures. It is stated, however, that they will present dramatic stock during the summer months.

M. H. French, owner of the New Garden theatre, Rockingham, N. C., has secured control of the Star theatre, which gives him both of the Rockingham houses. They are under the direction of Jack Marcus, formerly of Florence, S. C.

Actual work of construction on Charlotte's new theatre for legitimate road shows and big pictures will be under way soon, it is announced, and it is planned to be finished by the fall opening.

Dan F. O'Connor, for the past three years Associated Exhibitors representative out of the Charlotte Pathe office, has been transferred to Massachusetts territory. His successor has not been named.

Pathe has added another salesman to their road forces out of Charlotte, Manager Heller declaring this necessary on account of their constantly increasing business. George B. Hendrickson, of Darlington, S. C., is the latest recruit to the forces of this exchange and has been assigned to South Carolina territory.

The first class has been graduated from the Paramount school for salesmen, inaugurated by District Manager Fred Creswell soon after coming to Atlanta. Mr. Creswell announces himself as highly pleased with the results obtained by their first class and has eight graduates who will be assigned as zone managers to the various Southern exchanges.

Theatrical interests of Atlanta, Ga., were instrumental in aiding largely in the entertainment events in honor of the Biennial Council of the Federation of Women's Clubs, which met in Atlanta last week for the entire week, co-operating enthusiastically with the press of Atlanta in arranging a program for their edification while in Atlanta.

Arthur T. Amm, for eight months manager of the gorgeous Eastman theatre, Rochester, N. Y., has been made Florida supervisor of Southern Enterprises theatres, succeeding E. J. Sparks, who has left the organization to devote his time to his own rapidly growing circuit of houses. Mr. Amm has an enviable reputation as a showman and has already entered upon his duties with headquarters in Jacksonville, Fla.

Fred Creswell, district manager, together with David Price, manager, Oscar Kantner, exploiteer, and other executives from the Atlanta offices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, have gone to New Orleans, where an elaborate and lengthy sales conference is in progress, having opened May 15. Almost all of the home office executives are in attendance at the conference and will go from New Orleans to the West Coast.

Mr. and Mrs. William K. Jenkins are already making plans to attend the North Carolina exhibitor convention at Wrightsville Beach, June 28 and 29. Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins are always honored guests at the Carolina conventions and enjoy the warm friendship of almost every theatre owner in the state.

I. C. Holloway, formerly in charge of the Columbus, Ga., theatres for Southern Enterprises, has resigned and is succeeded by J. Wright Brown, who was connected with the exploitation department in Atlanta under Lem Stewart.

M. J. Sparks, of American Releasing Corporation, has added two new road men to his force, Grady Kirbo being assigned to Alabama territory and H. P. Laseter to Georgia and Tennessee.

R. A. Davis has moved the Atlanta Al Lichtman office to the third floor of the Samuels building. The Physical distribution is being handled by the Select office.

News and Notes of Detroit's Film Circles

THE last of the Sunday noon concerts with the combined orchestras of the Adams, Capitol and Madison theatres, under the direction of Conductor Edward Werner, was given at the Capitol theatre on May 6. More than 3,500 persons were present. These concerts have been a feature of Detroit's musical events for the past season and have preceded the regular film presentation. The programs have been assembled from classical, semi-classical and popular compositions. The concerts will be resumed in the fall and it is announced that Conductor Werner has still more ambitious plans in view.

H. A. Snow, who is in the city the week of May 6 for the purpose of lecturing and giving his experiences in connection with the showing of his film, "Hunting Big Game in Africa," at the Broadway-Strand has been variously entertained and honored.

On Monday the explorer met Mayor Doremus at noon and later was presented with a hunting gun, a companion piece to the elephant gun given him by Mayor Hylan of New York, by M. A. Demass, president of the Wayne County Sportsmen's Association. The afternoon was spent in a visit with Henry Ford at his Dearborn home. Sam Morris, general manager of distribution for Warner Bros. of New York, visited the local exchange last Tuesday.

When Carl Sonin of the Warner Bros. exchange and P. Gleichman of the Broadway-Strand were in New York recently they attended the annual famous Naked Truth Dinner.

Spokane Exhibitor Puts Theatre On "Open Shop" Basis

The union moving picture operating staff of the Hippodrome theatre here was paid off Saturday, April 28, by Manager Maurice Oppenheimer when he put into effect his plan for running his theatre on an open shop basis.

The Hippodrome, a variety house featuring some first run pictures, will be conducted strictly open shop, according to Manager Oppenheimer. He discharged his union musicians and stage hands. Organized labor of Spokane is expected to make application to the international organizations to place the Hippodrome on the "unfair" list.

Theatre and Film Row Items from Cleveland

ARTHUR WHITE, of the B. F. Keith enterprises, was in Cleveland one day last week looking over the motion picture situation, preparatory to putting pictures in the Keith East 105th Street theatre. This theatre has heretofore played straight vaudeville. In addition to pictures, there will be special vaudeville attractions. White did not book any pictures while in Cleveland.

Joe Trunk, of the Dome theatre, Youngstown, was a prominent guest of the Cleveland exchanges while in Cleveland.

E. E. Russell, of the Mystic theatre, Coshoc-ton, doesn't come up to the base of film supplies very often. That's one reason why he got such a cordial reception last week on his tour of exchanges.

A. R. Freeman, of the Academy theatre, Con-neaut, left his business to fate and the snow-storm that struck this section of the country last week, and visited Cleveland for a few days.

J. S. Jossey, president and general manager of the Progress Pictures Company, was in Cin-cinnati last week. He more than made his travelling expenses, for he closed bookings on "The Streets of New York" for Gift's theatre in Cincinnati, and the Majestic in Columbus.

The Ducan theatre, Broadway, Cleveland, has changed hands. August Pahrig has bought it from John Elles.

Carl Hoague, is no longer office manager for the local First National Exchange. Hoague has not announced his future connections.

David Palfreyman, formerly of Detroit, has come to Cleveland to succeed Carl Hoague as office manager for First National.

Bill Finkel has graduated from Cleveland manager of the Lande Film Distributing Com-pany to district manager for Lande, with head-quarters in Pittsburgh. But that doesn't keep him from spending a day once in a while with his erstwhile Cleveland associates. Last Friday was one of the days.

'Tis said that Charles Barbian, of the Waldorf theatre, Akron, is receiving bids for his new Akron theatre, which will be a regular hum-ding of a house, according to present plans.

There was a general exodus from the local Famous Players exchange this week-end. Among those from Cleveland who attended the two-day central western F. P.-L. convention in Chicago were Exchange Manager Eddie Fon-taine, Exploitation Manager S. G. Sladdin, Booking Manager Ray Morris, Accessory Man-ager Mark Cummings, S. Blakeley, head of the lithographing department, and five salesmen. They left Cleveland Thursday, and will return Monday.

P. Rettig, of the Mystic theatre, Galion, has sent out a call for whitewashers, painters, deco-raters and the like. When he gets through the Mystic will look like new.

Also it's reported on authority that Manager Manthos is remodelling and redecorating his American theatre in Alliancc.

Norman Moray has been appointed manager of the Cleveland Pathe exchange, a position that has been unfilled for the past four weeks, during which time District Manager R. S. Schroed-er has been at the helm. Moray comes from the Pathe Indianapolis office. Manager Plughs of the Pathe Des Moines exchange succeeds Moray as manager of the Indianapolis ex-change.

G. L. Stiles, special Pathe representative, is spending several weeks in the Cleveland terri-tory and making his headquarters in the Cleve-land exchange.

T. P. McLaughlin, formerly of Pittsburgh, and W. H. Hickey, formerly of Kansas City, have joined the Cleveland Pathe sales force.

It is stated that the Capitol theatre, Youngs-town, is closed for an indefinite period.

The McKinley theatre, Niles, one of the most beautiful motion picture houses in the terri-tory, just completed, is ready to be leased. Several negotiations are now under way and as soon as completed further announcements will be made.

It is reported that Allen T. Simmons of Akron, who owns and operates the Allen and Dome theatres, is preparing to build another fine motion picture house in Akron. Akron is booming again, and it is said that there is room for more picture houses.

M. B. Horwitz, of the Washington Circuit of motion picture theatres, Cleveland, made a fly-ing trip to New York the end of the week, looking for a colored show for his Globe thea-tre, that has made such a success of colored shows this season.

Charles Brill has taken over the Empress theatre, Akron, previously owned by Sam Kasse.

The Grand Opera House, Canton, one of the string of houses controlled by the Feiber-Shea interests, has just completed a three weeks' sea-son of pictures during which "Robin Hood," "One Exciting Night" and "Tess of the Storm Country" were shown, and is now playing three weeks of stock. From Canton, the stock com-pany goes to Akron to play all summer at the Colonial, also a Feiber-Shea house.

John Romwebber opened the Music Hall, Akron, last Sunday with "The Innocent Cheat," a Progress picture, and Gus Sun tab shows.

The Opera House at Wooster, under the man-agement of Charles Ellison, is closed for the summer, according to advices received.

"Masters of Men," Vitagraph special, has a good start in Ohio. It is already booked for early showing at the Grand, Columbus; Mozart, Canton; Alhambra, Toledo; State, Alliance, and a prominent Cleveland theatre.

R. S. Gooding has sold the Ohio theatre, Shadyside, Ohio, to H. J. Graybell.

Dan Gutilla has purchased the Royal theatre, Kenton, from Ed Rose.

J. Peruzzi and F. Scott have taken over the Market Street theatre from M. Mancinelli.

E. J. Georgople, manager of the Grand thea-tre, Elyria, was in town last week for the first time in many months. Georgople has been very ill and only recently has been able to be active in his business.

Ray Gould of the Temple theatre, Toledo, was seen on Film Row during the week.

Jottings from Kansas City and Vicinity

AT the annual election of the Kansas City Film Board of Trade last week, Harry Graham, Pathe branch manager, was re-elected president. Other officers are: Marty Williams, Vitagraph, vice-president; W. T. Truog, Goldwyn, secretary and treasurer; Roy E. Churchill, I. F. B. O., H. E. Schiller, Edu-cational, and Bert E. Ed-wards, Fox, members of the board of directors.

A joint board of arbi-tration will be formed, consisting of three ex-change men and three ex-hibitors, to settle all dis-putes between exchanges and exhibitors in the Kansas City territory.

M. A. Levy, former manager of the Fox ex-change in Charlotte, N. C., has succeeded Bert E. Edwards as manager of the Kansas City exchange. Mr. Edwards, who resigned, has no definite plans for the future.

W. E. Truog, district Goldwyn manager, left Kansas City for Des Moines, Iowa, this week, where a new branch office will be opened. Mr. Truog also will go to Oklahoma City to open a new Goldwyn branch before returning to Kansas City.

Quite a number of changes in the personnels of Kansas City exchanges were made last week. Arthur Johnson, former assistant manager of the Kansas City Universal office, has joined the ranks of the American Releasing Corporation's sales force in Kansas City, while "Rube"

Melcher, veteran film salesman, has been added to the Fox force. S. Davidson temporarily has replaced Art Jacobson of the Universal sales force, the latter having gone to New York on business.

A new and profitable custom has been estab-lished at the Universal Kansas City office. Each Wednesday afternoon the motion picture com-mittee of the Kansas City Parent-Teacher Association reviews new Universal products in the exchange's projection room.

What appeared as a promising career in the motion picture field was cut short last week by the unexpected death of Edwin L. Schooler, manager of the Memorial Auditorium theatre, Rock Port, Mo. Mr. Schooler had opened the house only a few weeks ago, when illness forced him to be confined in a Kansas City hospital. He was one of the most prominent citizens of his town.

A film, to cost $800, will be the principal medium to be used by members of the Kansas City Real Estate Board in its campaign next week to impress Kansas citizens with Kansas City. The production will be about 400 feet long and will be shown at all larger downtown houses.

Instead of waiting until this fall, as originally was planned, to continue a series of "Discovery Concerts," which proved a great box office attraction at Frank L. Newman's Newman theatre last month, the concerts will be resumed again this month. High school, grade school students; in fact, any citizen, is eligible to "tryout" for a place on the programs, which will be given each Sunday this month.

A. R. Dalby, who operated the Grand theatre at Ash Grove, Mo., died unexpectedly last week, causing no small amount of grief in Kansas City's film colony, as Mr. Dalby was one of the most popular exhibitors in the Kansas City territory.

The Dixie Airdome, Lebanon, Kas., has been opened by Charles French. The airdome is the "last word" in neatness and modern construc-tion.

Columbus, O., Paper to Launch Cinema Digest of Events

A cinema digest of news events of Central Ohio will be released by the Columbus Dispatch, a local newspaper, the second to conduct such a film in Columbus, May 13.

Photoplay Notes of Connecticut Territory

ANTHONY DE LORENZO, proprietor of the Crown and Liberty theatres at Hartford, Conn., prominent in Southern New England motion picture trade circles, has bought the Tunxis theatre at Windsor, Conn.

For the purpose of acquiring and operating the Community theatre at Fairfield, Conn., recently built by the late Joseph I. Flint of that town, credited with being a model of a suburban territory playhouse, The Community Theatre, Inc., has been incorporated and the following officers elected: President and treasurer, Isador J. Goldman; vice-president, Benjamin B. Steiber; secretary, Joseph Saperstein.

The Forest Motion Picture Company of Waterbury, Conn., has been incorporated with an authorized capital stock of $30,000, business to be inaugurated with $1,000. The incorporators are George M. Waugh, Jr., Walter Engels and Henry Gemeinhardt, Jr., all of Waterbury.

A summary process proceeding has been instituted by the Russwin Lyceum Corporation to secure possession of the theatre located in the rear of the New Britain, Conn., city hall from the Lyceum Amusement Company. The papers are returnable in the New Britain City Court. It is specified that on January 24, 1920, the plaintiff leased the building to the Russwin Lyceum Company, with A. S. Andrelewicz, Frank E. Klosowski, Wladislaw Godleski and Walenty Lech. A few months after the transaction the Russwin Lyceum Company subleased the property to the Lyceum Amusement Company, which is composed of Walenty Lech, Joseph Bogdanski and Joseph Dzikzek. It was specified in the original agreement between the Russwin Lyceum Corporation and the Russwin Lyceum Company that all of the obligations, such as the payment on the heating, taxes and premiums on $50,000 were obligated to the Russwin Lyceum Company. The latter company then subleased the property to the Lyceum Amusement Company, with all the provisions contained in the original agreement between the Russwin Lyceum Corporation and the Russwin Lyceum Company taken over.

It is claimed that the Lyceum Amusement Company has failed to meet the payments on the taxes due to the city of New Britain on July 1, 1921, and July 1, 1922, and that the water rents due on July 1, 1923, have not been paid.

John Sanson, who has been manager of the Princess theatre at Bristol, Conn., has been named manager of the Bristol theatre and also of the Palace theatre on North Main street, in the same city. The two last named houses are under one ownership.

A deal has been consummated whereby Abraham Davidson, of Norwich, Conn., has acquired ownership of a centrally located Main street site at Willimantic, Conn., thereby paying the way for erection of a long contemplated motion picture playhouse in that city. The deal has been in progress for a number of months, it is reported. Plans for the theatre are now being rushed, work is expected to start soon and it is hoped to have the playhouse ready for opening by late fall, at least. The proposed building will be of brick construction with a frontage of 92 feet. It will contain four stores, each 40 feet deep, with a central lobby 20 feet in width. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,200 and be provided with a balcony.

Motion picture men who lease property occupied by their theatres are giving their approval to common council action at Norwich, Conn., whereby an ordinance was passed at the May session requiring that between October 1 and April 1 no entertainment can be given in a public amusement place where the temperature is less than 55 degrees. The penalty is a $50 fine for each violation. On numerous occasions during the past winter motion picture managers, who occupy leased playhouses, have complained they have experienced decreased patronage and resultant financial loss because owners of the property have neglected to provide sufficient heat for the comfort and health of theatre patrons.

Sylvester Z. Poli, of New Haven, Conn., proprietor of a string of vaudeville and motion picture houses bearing his name, has again shown his support of patriotic movements by donating the use of Poli's theatre at Bridgeport, Conn., for the Memorial Sunday Service, May 27, of the Bridgeport United Patriotic Societies. Vice President Calvin Coolidge will be speaker of the occasion. It was at first proposed to use the Bridgeport High School auditorium, far too small for the expected attendance. Mr. Poli solved the problem.

Albany Notes and Eastern New York Briefs

ONE of the handsomest exchange offices in Albany, N. Y., is that which has been occupied by Vitagraph from November, 1919, when that company decided to split up its Syracuse office, opening exchanges in Buffalo and Albany. At that time, Vitagraph was fortunate in leasing the old General Film offices, which were remodeled to some extent, and which have been continuously occupied by Vitagraph. Although the exchange is several blocks removed from the dozen or more other exchanges which are located in Albany and which constitute the city's Film Row, Vitagraph has been so long in the same location that it is regarded as one of the landmarks in the film circles of the Capital City.

When the exchange was opened in Albany, J. E. Beck, of Syracuse, became its manager. About two years ago Mr. Beck was transferred to the Cleveland office and Bert Gibbons, who had been covering the territory out of Albany as salesman, was promoted to manager. Thousands of exhibitors in Northern and Central New York always make it a point to visit the Vitagraph exchange when in Albany.

The Astor, in Troy, gave a song and dance contest last Thursday night that brought big business. The house intends to use singers from time to time, as it is believed that such will vary the program and attract patrons.

William Allen, who has been covering the Albany territory for Universal and who came here a year ago, has just been transferred to Buffalo, while Edgar Haines will come to Albany from the Bison City.

Mr. and Mrs. Judges, who run the Alpine, in Troy, work together in selecting pictures for their house. The one rarely comes to Film Row without the other. The combination appears to be working out well, for the house has been going ahead steadily for several months. Between May 6 and 12 the house ran a straight Universal week.

Harry Hellman, well-known exhibitor of Albany, never fails to take his daily exercise at the Y. M. C. A. and is one of the handball experts of the city.

Fred Perry, purchasing the Strand theatre, in Watertown, N. Y., announces a return to five-cent movies in that city during afternoons, with a change four times a week.

The Strand theatre, in Watertown, entertained the children of St. Patrick's orphanage this week at a showing of the "Man Without A Country."

Harry Lazarus, former owner of the Pine Hills theatre in Albany, has bought a house in Kingston and opened last Tuesday.

Grover Woodward, manager of the Fox exchange in Albany, was in Boston recently for a conference with Harry Campbell, the New England district manager.

Arthur Goldsmith, salesman for Fox out of Albany, is carrying off all honors in the spring sales drive, with a record of not having missed a day in turning in a contract since March 19. Mr. Goldsmith nailed a $250 bonus last year in a similar drive.

Robert Bendell, manager of the American Releasing exchange in Albany, wears a broad smile these days, having been successful for the first time in the history of the exchange in placing pictures with the Mark Strand, in Albany, and the new Troy, in Troy. These include "What Fools Men Are," "The Prince and the Pauper," "The Bohemian Girls" and "A Modern Marriage."

Fox has cut out the weekly screenings at its Albany exchange after ascertaining that exhibitors in the territory showed little or no inclination to visit Albany on the day and hour of the screening.

Jane Halloran, employed in the American Releasing office in Albany, made a trip to Pittsfield, Mass., and other places last week and landed several contracts.

The Hippodrome theatre in Carthage has been closed and it is understood that the house will not reopen before fall.

Employees in all the film exchanges of Albany were the guests of St. Vincent's orphanage in that city on May 17, when the boys and girls at the institution provided a very pleasing entertainment as a means of showing their appreciation for the films which had been furnished free by the exchanges during the year.

Dr. J. Victor Wilson, of Watertown, manager of the Olympic theatre in that city, was a speaker at the Watertown Zonta Club one night this week. During the course of his talk he declared that the motion picture business was purging itself of salacious pictures.

Spokane Film Row and Exhibitor Items

"DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS" will be shown at the Auditorium theatre here the week beginning May 31 under the auspices of the Lincoln Memorial Fund Association. All profits from the showing of the film will go toward the erection of a large bronze statue here of the martyr President, Abraham Lincoln.

The decision to show the film was made at a meeting here of George A. Phillips, ex-president of the chamber of commerce; E. Vaughan Klein, treasurer of the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company; Charles York, of Hood and York, Auditorium owners; Mrs. John Argall, of the Gold Star Mothers; Mrs. John Bruce Dodds, of the auxiliary to the G. A. R.; Mrs. Alice French, of the Service Star Legion, and Mrs. Dr. John Neeley, of the American Legion Auxiliary.

A pre-view of the picture was given the members of the committee at the Auditorium theatre, May 3, at which time the picture was enthusiastically praised by all who saw it. The city will be districted and local clubwomen and school girls will sell tickets. The committee hopes to fill the house every night of the week's engagement of the film.

Miss Lilian Rich, who has been working in the filming of "The Phantom Pack" and "White Fang" at the Trimble-Murfin Productions camp, near Banff, Canada, was a visitor in Spokane, May 6 and 7. With Miss Rich were Harold Austin, leading man of the company, Camerman Gano and several others of the company. Larry Trimble, director, spent several hours in Spokane the evening of May 7. The famous screen dog, Strongheart, accompanied Director Trimble.

Around Seattle's Photoplay Trade Circles

CHARLES NEWMAN, general theatre manager for the Universal Film Company in the Pacific Northwest, was a recent visitor in Seattle at the Columbia theatre. He has just replaced William Cutts in his new capacity and is making his general headquarters at the Columbia theatre in Portland. His territory includes the Universal houses in this city, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City and Denver.

Mr. Newman is a theatre man well known in this territory as well as in the East. For the last two years he has been the general manager of the Grauman theatres in Los Angeles, and before that time was manager of the Curran theatre in San Francisco. He will spend the greater part of his time in Portland, making trips to the other houses in the Universal circuit at regular intervals.

Harry Ficht, a doorman at the Liberty theatre for the last seven years, has just left the employ of Jensen-VonHerberg and has taken a position with the Shell Oil Company. William Preston, formerly doorman at the Strand theatre, has replaced Mr. Ficht at the Liberty. Mr. Preston has been in the service of the same organization for almost five years, having worked at both the Coliseum and Strand theatres. Mr. Preston's position as head doorman at the Strand has been taken by Robert Kincaid. Mr. Kincaid has been assistant doorman for several months and was formerly employed at the Paramount office.

Vic Gauntlett, publicity, advertising and exploitation manager for the Blue Mouse circuit, has just left the employ of John Hamrick, circuit owner, and at present has announced no definite plans for the future. Mr. Gauntlett has been in Mr. Hamrick's employ for the last year and a half. Before joining the Blue Mouse staff he was engaged in the newspaper game in Seattle and was also advertising and publicity manager for Levy's Orpheum, the Metropolitan theatre and other playhouses in Seattle and on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Hamrick has just instituted his lower admission plan at the Blue Mouse in Tacoma. Prices are now fifteen cents at matinees and twenty-five cents at night. Shows are changed twice a week. The first picture to open at the Tacoma house under the new policy was "The Tents of Allah." This plan was instituted at the Portland Blue Mouse several weeks ago and is meeting with pleasing success, according to advice from the general offices here. C. C. Struble, a former exhibitor from Red Lodge, Montana, has been engaged by Mr. Hamrick as house manager of the Portland theatre, succeeding Al Raleigh.

A reel of campus pictures which were shown recently at the Strand theatre in celebration of "University of Washington Week" at that playhouse were presented this week to the University by H. B. Wright, manager of the theatre, thus starting the University's first motion picture library.

The reel, which cost approximately $1,000, was made by Frank Jacobs, local photographer, for the Jensen-VonHerberg organization. It contained scenes of campus activities, faculty leaders, student leaders and views around the grounds. It will be incorporated with a shorter news reel showing the dedication of the University Stadium in 1920.

"The Land of Sunlit Nights," a new motion picture travel review showing scenes in Sweden, was presented last week in Seattle at the Masonic Temple, under the auspices of several Swedish organizations in the city. Prices for the attraction ranged from fifty cents to one dollar. The picture was made by the Swedish Biograph Company of Stockholm.

Announcement was made here this week that J. VonHerberg, president of the Jensen-VonHerberg circuit of theatres in the Northwest, had been re-elected as one of the five trustees of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., at the First National meeting in Wilmington, Del. The organization operates four theatres in Seattle, four in Portland, two in Tacoma, two in Yakima, and single houses in Bremerton, Wenatchee, Ellensburg and other Washington cities.

A. B. Metzger, manager of the local Film Booking Offices exchange, left the city this week for a two week's trip to San Francisco to attend a Pacific Coast sales meeting of the F. B. O. organization. At the meeting will be H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for F. B. O., and also Nat Rothstein, publicity director for the same organization.

H. A. Black, manager of the Vitagraph exchange, was expected to arrive in this city in a few days, after a ten day trip around the local territory. After a short tour of the smaller cities, Mr. Black arrived in Spokane and was there several days before beginning his return trip.

"Trifling with Honor," the latest Universal Jewel, reached the local exchange this week and was given a pre-view by Manager L. J. Schlaffer. The baseball picture was enthusiastically received by all those that saw it, especially because the teams involved are members of the Pacific Coast League that includes Seattle and other cities in this territory. It is thought that the title is only tentative, and that it will be changed before the production is given public presentation.

Fred Mercy, manager of the Liberty and Capitol theatres in Yakima was a visitor on Film Row during the last week, booking pictures for the next few months.

J. A. Gage, manager of the Educational exchange, and Louis Amacher, manager of the American Releasing exchange, were both out of the city on short trips to Portland last week. Mr. Amacher is working on bookings for "Quicksands" in the Oregon territory. Mr. Gage expected to meet Wallace Rucker, Educational salesman, in Portland, and cover a small part of the territory with him.

The Glen theatre, in Issaquah, Wash., has been taken over by J. P. Devlin, who will assume the active management of the house, according to reports received in this city recently.

Announcement has just been made in this city that J. Leroy Johnston, who left here about a month ago to fill a responsible position in the New York offices of First National Pictures has switched again, and is now in the publicity department of the Thomas H. Ince studios at Culver City. Mr. Johnston was publicity and exploitation manager of the local exchange for several seasons before his departure.

Buffalo Briefs and Western New York Notes

ARTHUR AMM, former manager of Shea's North Park and several other Buffalo houses, is now in charge of the Paramount theatre in Jacksonville, Fla.

Maurice Cohen, who recently resigned as manager of the local W. B. exchange, has been appointed manager of the Al Lichtman office in Albany, where he succeeds Bill Harris.

Lester Wolfe, a veteran Buffalo film salesman, who recently resigned from the Paramount staff, has returned from a motor tour to New York City with the job of manager at the Select exchange, succeeding G. E. Bromley, who goes to the American Releasing exchange in Chicago.

Ben Wallerstein, manager of the Broadway theatre, Buffalo, has the measles. Ben can't explain it.

Bob Smeltzer, former district manager for Pathe, including the Buffalo office in his territory, is now with First National in Washington, according to W. A. V. Mack, manager of the Buffalo Pathe exchange. Both Mr. Mack and Harry Thompson, Associated Exhibitors' representative, spent last week-end in the Southern Tier. A radio report has come through to Buffalo conveying the information that "Hub" Taylor, Southern Tier pilot for Pathe, recently had four of his auto tires blow on him at once. As a result he forgot to send flowers to his wife on their wedding anniversary. He has been forgiven. He should be. Four tires at present prices! Looks like "Hub" has got to work for life to pay for a bill like that.

Celeron Park on Lake Chautauqua will again show motion pictures this summer, but they will be discontinued at Eldridge Park, Elmira. Charlie Tarbox, who formerly managed the Fredonia, N. Y., Opera House, will be in charge of film activities at the Assembly Grounds, Chautauqua, this season.

The Border Amusement Company, which recently took over the General Theatres Corporation houses has elected these officers: President, C. J. Wolf; vice-president, R. J. Krotz; secretary, J. T. Gilbert; treasurer, James Cooban. Board of Directors: The officers and J. Wallingford, Charles Long, William A. Adams, H. Billhofer and W. A. Mahoney. James Wallingford will continue as general manager, a position he held when General was in control. The Border houses include the Ellen Terry, Alendale, Marlowe, Central Park and Star. Sol Myers, former manager of the Criterion, has taken over the Circle, formerly one of the General chain.

Manager Howard J. Smith, of the Palace, Buffalo, arranged with the Evening News to put on a newsboys' party last Saturday morning with "Westbound Limited" as the attraction. The result was an avalanche of front-page publicity in the News for the Palace.

Albert L. Sweet, of Buffalo, has purchased the Bent Opera House in Medina, N. Y. He will remodel the property, which was built in 1857.

W. B. Freer, of Williamson, N. Y., has bought the Opera House in Newark, N. Y., from Peter

R. and George Sleight for $80,000. Walter Muth will continue as manager of the house, which will be redecorated and renovated.

"North American citizens know far too little of the great nations of South America," said Clayton P. Sheehan, eastern division manager of the Fox Film Corporation, on his return to Buffalo from a six months' business trip, during which he visited most of the republics in South America. "American exporters have but scratched the surface of the South American market," said Mr. Sheehan, who, by the way, is a brother of Winnie Sheehan, Fox general manager. "There are millions of people on the southern continent, but only a few manufacturing concerns. With the proper promotion the manufacturers of the United States could get most of the business that is now going to Europe. The United States Shipping Board is to be congratulated on the friendly business relations it has established with our neighboring countries. Immigration that now is excluded from this country is now going to South America. These immigrants are going to the farms and within a few years their products will rival those of the northern continent." Mr. Sheehan received an enthusiastic welcome at the Buffalo exchange, where he makes his headquarters.

The Paramount boys returned from the New York sales convention all "pepped" up over the plans for the new season. Each had an elaborate embossed leather-covered booklet with his "map" on it telling of the "big ones" coming.

Theatre and Exchange Briefs from Canada

HER Excellency, Lady Byng of Vimy, wife of the Governor-General of Canada, is a regular patron of Loew's Ottawa theatre, Ottawa, Ontario. On various occasions recently, Lady Byng has attended the theatre informally, accompanied by official household representatives at Rideau Hall, the Vice-Regal residence at the Canadian Capital. Her Excellency showed keen interest in Martin Johnson's African Wild Animal feature which was presented at Loew's during the week of May 7 and also previously in Pola Negri's appearance in "Bella Donna."

It is now over seven weeks since Harry Brouse of Ottawa, Ontario, a prominent Canadian exhibitor, went suddenly blind while seated in the office of the Imperial theatre, Ottawa. Since that time he has been confined to his bed and has been under the constant care of specialists and nurses. He has regained just a very slight sense of sight in one eye but, so far, that is all. Through it all, however, Mr. Brouse has shown great patience and has also maintained optimistic fortitude. He has received countless messages and letters of encouragement and has been able to receive a considerable number of callers, including personal friends and representatives of the moving picture business.

Confusion prevails in the twin cities of Ottawa, Ontario, and Hull, Quebec, over the daylight saving feature as a result of the decision of the Ottawa City Council to adopt changed time, which started May 13, and the action of the Hull civic authorities in turning down the measure. The outcome is that the clocks on opposite sides of the Ottawa River are different, the situation being of special advantage to the various moving picture theatres in Hull.

An interesting development with regard to the daylight saving tangle in Eastern Canada came in the visit to the Federal Government authorities at Ottawa by Mayor Mederic Martin of Montreal to ask that a measure be enacted to prohibit stores, factories and other private enterprises from adopting summer time on their own account when daylight saving had been rejected by civic authorities. Such is the situation in Montreal where some 2,000 firms joined a Daylight Saving Association for the observance of clock changing after the Montreal Council voted against summer time. All but two of the Montreal theatres are being operated on standard time.

The Imperial theatre, Barrington street, Halifax, N. S., has been re-opened, after being dark for some little time, under new proprietorship with A. M. Crowell in charge as manager. The house, which is one of the best known in Halifax, has been acquired by H. R. Walker, who is the owner of four other moving pictures in the Maritime Provinces, three being located at Dartmouth, N. S., and the fourth at Imperoyal. Before it was again opened, the Imperial was remodelled and redecorated. William Packham is in charge of the projection at the theatre while Miss Duhanty officiates at the box office. The opening attraction was "Free Air."

T. H. Moorehead, Brampton, Ontario, who recently opened the new moving picture theatre in Brampton which cost $55,000 to build, disposed of his manufacturing business to J. H. Schneider on May 4 in order to devote his whole attention to the operation of the theatre. Last year Mr. Moorehead was the proprietor of retail stores in Brampton, Milton, Acton and Georgetown, but he sold these to undertake the erection of a moving picture theatre. The success of the theatre already being assured, he has also sold his local factory enterprise.

For the first time in the theatre history of Victoria, B. C., a moving picture production has played two weeks continuously at a local house. The record run was made in the presentation of "Robin Hood" at the Capitol theatre of which J. Robertson is the manager, the two weeks' engagement closing Saturday, May 5. This was the first time that any picture had been held over for a second week locally.

His Majesty's theatre, Montreal, Quebec, the one dramatic house in Montreal, was leased for the week of May 21 for the presentation of the authorized moving pictures of His Holiness, Pope Pius XII, and of the Eucharistic Congress in Rome last year. The feature is being presented by the National Exploitation Company.

Loew's theatre, Montreal, presented "The Card," the English picture starring Laddie Cliff, as its attraction for the week of May 13. The British release has been drawing big business at leading theatres in Ontario, unusual success attending its presentation at the Pantages theatre, Toronto, which, with its 3,700 seats, is the largest theatre in Canada. The Toronto Pantages had "The Card" during the first week in May.

James Adams has been appointed manager of the Capitol theatre, Calgary, Alberta.

Film Flashes from the Florida Territory

GEORGE HOFFMAN, the genial representative of the Fox Film Corporation in Florida, is the proud possessor of a fat check for $250, presented to him by his company as a prize in their selling drive, which ended in March. George has a host of friends among the Florida exhibitors. He looks out for their needs and gives them service. The fact that he is the winner of this nice check is pretty good evidence of his popularity.

W. A. Kraus has been appointed house manager of the Grand, Tampa, under General Manager R. C. (Jack) Frost, of the Strand and Grand. Mr. Kraus is an expert on building special lobbies and has turned out some corks for both these houses. He has an exceptionally fine one in preparation now on "Thelma."

The Maceo Amusement Company of Tampa are holding monthly meetings of the directors on the second Monday of each month. An invitation has been extended to all stockholders to attend. President Charles A. Sappal has been showing some fine profit statements at these meetings and the stockholders are looking forward to a nice dividend check at the close of the half year. Mr. Sappal has been going in strong for special lobby displays lately and the way the business is coming is pretty good evidence of their value.

A. Juran, manager of the Casino, Ybor City, has bought a new home and is putting in all his spare time dolling up the place. He has good reason to be proud of the new place, for on his large lot he has every variety of citrus fruit, avacados, guavas and other tropical fruits. Then about a little the best thing of all happened last Wednesday when we had the big storm. The rain poured down in sheets and most every house just had to spring some kind of a leak and let in some water, but the new home of Mr. Juran resisted all temptation and remained as dry as the constitution.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

"Double Dealing"

Universal—5105 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

LOOKING at this picture in the most sympathetic light possible we cannot offer many praises for it. Henry Lehrman, who wrote and directed the number, has made nothing else but a two-reel rural comedy, and had he kept to that length it would have passed muster as a good filler for any program. In making it a five-reeler, however, he has shown up its shortcomings, for it carries all the earmarks of exaggerated hokum as it is exposed in rural comedies.

"Double Dealing" takes Hoot Gibson out of the saddle and off the ranch and places him as a village boob in celluloid collar, ready-made tie, store clothes, et al.—a boob unable to make his drug store pay and who is hounded by the familiar skinflint with his equally familiar mortgage. Gibson is supported by Eddie Gribbon who is best in this type of story. It gives him a chance to exaggerate to the limit in his role of a city slicker who tries to double-cross the boob druggist and the skinflint as well. The star doesn't have any opportunity to show his stuff. He merely plays the grinning boob, but at least he plays it well.

The idea has been employed since the first slapstick comedy and, being so familiar in its scenes and gags, it contains very few laughs. In fact Lehrman goes the limit in piling on the hokum, so much so, that it appears as if he didn't take it very seriously. The piece is a reminder of his work when he made two-reel comedies. Of course the players could not express themselves except in terms of exaggeration. And Otto Hoffman as the skinflint overplayed to the point of burlesque. He accepts defeat in the end when he sells some valuable property to the hero—property he could have sold at a high figure.

The only laugh discernible is the scene which shows Hoot's horse being attached by the sheriff and the buggy sliding back into the stream. Otherwise it presents the overdone hokum of outwitting the loan shark.

The Cast

Ben Slowbell.....Hoot Gibson
The Slavey.....Helen Ferguson
Stella Fern.....Betty Francisco
Alonzo B. Keene.....Eddie Gribbon
Mother Slowbell.....Gertrude Claire
Uriah Jobson.....Otto Hoffman
The Sheriff.....Frank Hayes

By Henry Lehrman. Scenario by George C. Hull. Directed by Henry Lehrman. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Treats of village store-keeper whose mortgage is foreclosed. City crook advises him and works in collusion with village skinflint. They succeed in getting store-keeper's money away from him. But they work their own defeat in the end when they dispose of valuable property to the hero—who in turn sells it for a snug sum.

Classification—Rural comedy-drama concerning high finance.

Production Highlights—Gibson's good work as village boob. The scene when horse is attached by sheriff and the buggy slips back into the stream.

Exploitation Angles—Stills of Hoot Gibson in his village character will attract. Feature the cast. It comprises several well known players. Use catch lines and teasers. Put on your rube quartette for a prologue.

Drawing Power—Second and third class downtown houses may enjoy it. Should be run with clever short subjects.

William Irving in a scene from Christie's blackface comedy for Educational, "Roll Along."

"The Little Girl Next Door"

Blair Coan Productions—State Rights—6000 Feet

(Reviewed by L. H. Mason)

"THE LITTLE GIRL NEXT DOOR," while bearing the same name as the picture made several years ago, when white slavery was a popular theme, is an entirely new story with the dope angle used as a basis for the picture, a medium and spirit photography also adding interest.

This feature, which has considerable entertainment value, was made in Chicago and in many of the exteriors, busy scenes on that city's crowded streets add interest and novelty to the picture.

The story brings Jim Mannin, a country youth, to the city to make his fortune, where he falls into the clutches of a dope ring and is rescued after a series of adventures, including a rattling good man to man fight by his boyhood sweetheart, Mary Slocum, well played by Pauline Starke. Carmel Meyers, cast as Milly Amory, is the vamp of the picture and does some good work as a spirit medium, and wears some elaborate and beautiful costumes, which will interest the women.

Mitchell Lewis, as Lug Wilson, the underworld boss of the dope ring, is also worthy of special mention for his work in this picture.

While the story of "The Little Girl Next Door," is somewhat overdrawn and improbable, it is well cast, the settings are elaborate, and there is sufficient action and sustained interest to make it a desirable box office attraction.

The Cast

Mary Slocum.....Pauline Starke
Jim Mannin.....James Morrison
Milly Amory.....Carmel Meyers
Tug Wilson.....Mitchell Lewis
Hank Hall.....Edward Kennedy

Story by Louis Weabock. Directed by W. D. Van Dyke.

Classification—A melodrama of Chicago life.

Production Highlights—Fierce fight between youthful hero and dope gangsters, exposure of fake medium and spirit photography. Interesting exteriors on crowded Chicago locations, and Pauline Starke's work as "The Little Girl Next Door."

Exploitation Angles—Title; warning to country youths coming to city; exposure of medium and explanation of spirit photography, writing, etc. Anti-dope propaganda could also be tied up with showing of this feature if thought desirable.

Drawing Power—Cast includes some popular players and picture should go over in any neighborhood house of larger cities and all classes of theatres in smaller communities.

"The Snow Bride"

Paramount—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

ABOUT the only thing one can say in favor of this one is that it will make a good summer feature. Its snow covered background might help to make patrons feel cool. Otherwise it follows the much used Canadian Northwest formula with the story running along tragically for six reels. It is a story requiring the characters to wear long faces at all times. Twentieth century folks have enough to worry about without going to the theatre and worry through a film play.

There is a snow storm and a subsequent avalanche towards the end of the picture which is the thing to play up if you book this. But don't go too strong on the size of the avalanche, for it is quite a tame affair. Alice Brady has the leading role and works hard in an effort to make her role convincing, but she overdoes her characterization at times. The supporting cast is adequate, but Maurice B. Flynn is a much too sentimental sheriff. Mario Majeroni as the heroine's father does well and Jack Baston as Gerard, the villain, succeeds in making himself much disliked.

Photographically "The Snow Bride" is flawless. There are some excellent shots of the snow country and some artistic lighting effects on some of the interiors. The action could be speeded up if the film were cut down about a reel. As it is the plot is slow moving. The religious element is continually cropping out which may be displeasing to most folks. "The Snow Bride" is just another picture. However we can't have classics all the time. This one will do if you change your program three or four times a week.

The Cast

Annette Leroux.....Alice Brady
Andre Porel.....Maurice B. Flynn
Gaston Leroux.....Mario Majeroni
Indian Charlie.....Nick Thompson
Paul Gerard.....Jack Baston
Padre.....Stephen Gratton
Pierre.....W. M. Cavanaugh
Leonie.....Margaret Morgan

By Sonya Levien and Julie Herne. Directed by Henry Kolker. Scenario by Sonya Levien. Photographed by George Webber.

The Story—Annette Leroux loves Porel, the sheriff. Gerard, a wealthy, but dissolute man, is Porel's rival. Annette nurses Porel back to health following his encounter with an Indian trapper. Annette's father kills the trapper. Gerard witnesses the slaying. He promises to keep mum in return for Annette's hand. Annette learns the truth and meditates suicide. On her wedding day, Gerard mistakes some poison for wine. Annette is accused of his murder. However, on the way to the scaffold, an avalanche sweeps down the mountain, taking the scaffold and her father with it. Annette and Porel are reunited.

Classification—One of those ever-recurring Canadian Northwest tales.

Production Highlights—The convincing upper Canada atmosphere. The murder of Indian Charlie. The snow avalanche and the storm preceding it.

Exploitation Angles—The title. The star. Fur stores should offer excellent means of putting over window displays on furs, including photos from the film. Put a man on the street dressed like a Canadian trapper. Dress the lobby with evergreens, snow shoes, furs, etc.

Drawing Power—O. K. for program houses, neighborhood theatres and towns.

"The Little Red Schoolhouse"

Martin J. Heyl—Arrow—5760 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HAL REID'S melodramas of yesteryear haven't been entirely exhausted. Here is "The Little Red Schoolhouse" which in its title, at least, suggests a simplicity of theme and setting, but which in reality is so overcrowded with incident and action that little logic remains. In fact the idea seems to have been to pack every conceivable situation into the plot, but it is so burdened with coincidence and hectic sequences and episodes that it resembles nothing else but a wild "meller."

The schoolhouse is the base of operations here. Not only does the teacher use it to instruct the children in the three R's, but a gang of hooch smugglers use the basement to carry on their nefarious trade. The conflict revolves around a conscientious revenue man and his hirelings, and the chief bootlegger and his henchmen. And though this conflict should be sufficient to keep the action moving, there are several by-plots introduced for good measure.

It isn't a well constructed story. The characters walk on and off in a very convenient fashion—and many are superfluous. There is so much going on most of the time that the action is often confusing. But through the maze of sequences we learn that a villainous son is in conflict with his equally villainous father—that the revenue man tries to hide his identity from the schoolteacher which precipitated some more conflict—that the revenue men raid a hooch parlor and stir up quite a melee of fists, broken heads and staircases—that the schoolteacher's drunken father torments her in his efforts to get money from her—that the chief revenue man is imprisoned for murder, but is released upon his own recognizance—that the drunken derrick confesses and is immediately jailed—that the revenue men discover the evidence in the basement—that they give chase to the bootleggers and capture them after a struggle—that the girl is rescued—that the arch-villain is blamed for the murder—and last of all, that during a storm, lightning has engraved an exact likeness of the criminal on the window of the schoolhouse. That last touch out-hokums any slice of hokum seen in a long while.

Most of the players—a really good cast—overact with Sheldon Lewis winning the honors in this respect. Perhaps he thought he was in one of his oldtime serials. Yet despite its exaggeration and its lack of logic, there is an audience for this type of picture. Those who do not care how incoherent and far-fetched a story may be, just so long as it keeps moving, will doubtless find moments of interest in it. It's an old story and fails to impress us because it is over-crowded with incident, overacted, and not treated in a new way.

The Cast

Mercy Brent.....Martha Mansfield
Jeb Russell.....Harlan Knight
Dr. Matt Russell.....Sheldon Lewis
John Hale.....E. K. Lincoln
Brent.....Edmund Breeze
Hired Girl.....Florida Kingsley
Detective.....Paul Everton
By Hal Reid. Directed by John G. Adolphi.
Produced by Martin J. Heyl. Released by Arrow.

The Story—Treats of a gang of whisky smugglers who use a schoolhouse to secret their liquor. School teacher falls in love with young revenue man, who succeeds in breaking up their bootlegging activities. The ringleader is caught and convicted of the crime of killing his father.

Classification—Melodrama involving hooch smuggling, a murder and kidnapping.

Production Highlights—The fast action. The fairly good suspense. The good work of Lincoln and Breeze.

Exploitation Angles—Play up that Hal Reid, a well-known writer of melodramas, wrote the play. Use the title. Tie up with schools. Put over stunts with blackboards, slates and stage a prologue showing interior of schoolroom.

Drawing Power—Should please patrons of program houses.

A dark moment in "The Champeen," one of the "Our Gang" series, a Pathe two reel comedy.

"Sixty Cents an Hour"

Paramount—5500 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WALTER HIERS' second Paramount comedy, "Sixty Cents An Hour," does not carry the sparkle of his first, "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime." It lacks the spontaneity of incident and action and compressed into three reels—where it really belongs—it would have soared much higher as a laugh producer. The gags and incident are so light that they scarcely hold together. However, we wouldn't call it a wasted evening if the exhibitor presents it as the chief attraction of a well rounded bill of short subjects.

The huge bulk of Walter Hiers is very much in the foreground and the good things we said about him in his first effort may be continued here. For one thing he takes his scenes easily without relying upon a false exaggeration of his comedy style to put himself over. He doesn't employ a bit of slapstick, nor does he attach too much importance to facial expression. It won't be an easy task, however, making his name a household word, inasmuch as finding suitable material for a heavyweight comedian is not as simple as finding it for one who can hop into a haberdashery and emerge like a tailor's dummy.

It isn't a difficult picture to look at; there is nothing boring about it. And as a reader picks up a light fiction magazine to entertain himself for an hour, so the picture will be accepted in a similar spirit.

Hiers plays the role of a soda jerker who climbs to the heights partly through using his head, and partly through good luck. His salary is small and the girl he would win knows how to keep him guessing. The plot hinges upon a gang of crooks stealing money from the bank and Hiers renting the flivver in which the swag is hidden. Hence the title. What money is lost during the spin is deducted out of his reward. But he gets even with the banker (the heroine's father) when he makes him pay for extending his bank over the alley which our hero has leased.

Not much sparkle and very few laughs in this comedy. We must catalogue it as mildly pleasant.

The Cast

Jimmy Kirk, a soda-jerker.....Walter Hiers
Mamie Smith, his sweetheart.....Jacqueline Logan
William Davis, Jimmy's rival.....Ricardo Cortez
James Smith, a banker.....Charles Ogle
Mrs. Smith, Mamie's mother.....Lucille Ward
Three Crooks. Clarence Burton, Guy Oliver, Cullen Tate

By Frank Condon. Scenario by Grant Carpenter. Directed by Joseph Henegbery.

The Story—Treats of the frenzied finance methods of Jimmy Kirk, a soda clerk, who, despite his small salary, strikes it rich by renting a car in which is secreted the stolen money from the bank. The bank deducts a certain amount, inasmuch as most of it is spilled while Jimmy is driving the car. However, he gets revenge.

Production Highlights—The easy performance of the star. The comedy moments when the hero rides away in the car.

Exploitation Angles—Here is a snappy title which should be exploited for all you can get out of it. Tie up with banks and garages.

Drawing Power—Suitable for second class downtown houses.

"Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing"

Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

HERE is one of the most beautifully photographed film plays it has ever been our pleasure to view. We have seldom seen such crystal-clear work, while some of the sepia printing is highly artistic. The cameraman and printer deserve much praise for their part in turning out such a film as this.

The production marks the return to the screen of our old favorite, Mae Marsh, and her work as Paddy is a distinct achievement. As the vivacious, mischievous, fun-loving little Irish hoyden, Miss Marsh contributes to screen literature one of its most appealing characterizations. Donned in a large blonde wig and acting against some of the most beautiful scenic backgrounds we've seen in many moons, a new Mae Marsh comes to the screen. It is a thoroughly refreshing bit of acting. Miss Marsh went to London and Ireland to act in this one, so that the supporting company is 100 per cent. English. But in this case, this fact will not detract from the picture on this side of the pond, except perhaps in the case of the leading man, who does not come up to the American idea of a hero. Haidee and Marie Wright as the quaint old aunts are charming. Lillian Douglas is attractive as Paddy's sister. The rest of cast is good.

Miss Marsh undoubtedly gave the producers of this picture some American tips with the result that the acting in this English made picture is much more peppy than anything that as come from Great Britain. The interiors are all unusually artistic and show meticulous attention to detail.

The picture has its moments. There is a thrilling horse race, which shows Mae to be a regular jockey. The fog scenes toward the end of the picture have their thrill and offer some more of the above-mentioned wonderful camera work. There is an elaborate ballet scene introduced at a brilliant English house party that offers an opportunity for some fine musical setting. In fact the whole production will prove a real inspiration to the man who lays out the music.

"Paddy-The-Next-Best-Thing" will surely meet with the approval of mothers' clubs. It is the quintessence of cleanliness.

The Cast

Paddy Adair.....Mae Marsh
Lawrence Blake.....Darby Foster
Eileen Adair.....Lillian Douglas
Mrs. Blake.....Nina Boucicault
Miss Jane O'Hara.....Haidee Wright
Miss Mary O'Hara.....Marie Wright
Jack O'Hara.....George K. Arthur
General Adair.....Sir Simeon Stuart
Mickey Doolan.....Tom Coventry

By Gertrude Page. Directed by J. Graham Cutts.

The Story—Paddy Adair plays the part of a son to her father, who wanted to have a son, but accepted Paddy as the next-best-thing. Paddy is a tom-boy and helps Jack O'Hara make love to her sister, who, however, is in love with another, Lawrence Blake. Blake has only led the girl on, not being in love with her. Lawrence tells Paddy that he loves her, but she drives him away in anger. Paddy's father dies. Jack goes to South America to make his fortune. Paddy goes to London to live. Lawrence follows her and she eventually falls in love with him. Jack returns and Paddy goes to the old home to meet him. Wishing to be alone, Paddy wanders from the old home and is lost in a dense fog. Lawrence rescues her.

Classification—A picturization of stage success in which Peggy O'Neil, Eileen Huban and others have appeared.

Production Highlights—The crystal-clear photography. The artistic subtitles. The quaint old Ireland backgrounds. Mae Marsh's characterization of the title role.

Drawing Power—Should be acceptable in any house.

"The White Rose"

Griffith—About Ten Reels

(Reviewed by Oscar Cooper)

IN "The White Rose," Griffith steps aside from the spectacular and presents a straight heart interest drama, in a pastoral setting of great beauty. There are no crashing climaxes; the story moves steadily, with the usual Griffith elaborateness of detail, to a powerful, simple emotional finish. Reliance is placed upon characterization rather than storm or ice-jam or the marshaling of other physical forces which have appeared in recent Griffith productions.

After a prolonged absence from the screen, Mae Marsh registers a triumphant return. She is the central figure of the story and the picture. Into the familiar role of the wronged country girl, she puts all the emotional strength and the individual mannerisms—if you want to call them that—which brought her fame in the old days. It is a remarkable piece of acting.

And the story is familiar, too, but its treatment makes it distinctive. Mr. Griffith has contrived to show the effect of a misstep upon the later career of a young man, this time a minister, and show it in so natural a way that it strikes the spectator like the reading of a page from life itself. Just because the material is familiar—and made distinctive—it hits home to the audience, holds the audience under its spell, will hold any audience, for "The White Rose" is decidedly a picture for all types of patrons.

But if the picture is mainly tearful, it is not wholly so. There is plenty of comedy, and it, too, is native to the story. Given a Southern setting, Mr. Griffith introduces a wealth of by-play from pick-a-ninnies and other folk of color. Porter Strong and Lucille La Verne, in blackface parts, contribute humor as well as pronounced moments of pathos.

The other players, chiefly Ivor Novello, as the young minister who renounces the cloth in atonement; and Carol Dempster, who in turn surrenders him so that he may marry the other girl and give their child a name, are fully effective.

Taken along the Bayou Teche country in Louisiana, the picture has many superb shots of natural beauty.

Summed up, "The White Rose" will not amaze by big sets, mob scenes or a whirlwind denouement—for these it has not. But as a simple, impressive heart interest drama—or melodrama, if you wish—it will score decisively.

The Cast

Bessie Williams.....	Mae Marsh
Marie Carrington.....	Carol Dempster
Joseph Beaugardes.....	Ivor Novello
John White.....	Neil Hamilton
"Auntie" Easter.....	Lucille La Verne
"Apollo," a servant.....	Porter Strong
An Aunt.....	Kate Bruce
An Uncle.....	Erville Alderson
The Bishop.....	Herbert Sutch

The Story—A young man about to enter the ministry and a country girl fall in love and their child is born out of wedlock. After he enters the service of the church, the boy becomes engaged to a girl of his own social rank and confesses his sin. The country girl, ill from exposure and near starvation, is cared for by two old darkies and the young minister finds her, and they are married. He gives up the church, and they begin life over again.

Classification—A powerful heart interest drama.

Production Highlights—Scene in the church where the minister renounces the cloth. Remarkable emotional acting by Mae Marsh, particularly the sequences leading up to the reunion with the minister. There is a "near death-bed" scene, in which Miss Marsh surpasses anything she has previously done before. Comedy touches. Artistic exteriors.

Exploitation Angles—Should be played up as Griffith telling a simple, human story that will appeal to everybody.

Drawing Power—All classes of audiences.

Pier at New Bedford, Mass., just before "The Wandered" set sail for mid-Atlantic whaling grounds to film the Hodkinson super special "Down to the Sea in Ships."

"Riders of the Range"

Truart—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE formula of the strife between the cattlemen and the sheep raisers is employed for this western, adapted from an original story by Courtney Riley Cooper, an author having considerable experience in fashioning magazine fiction. There is little novelty in theme and characterization. Indeed what takes place has been used time and time again. But because it keeps moving at an adequate pace, carries a satisfactory background and is for the most part competently acted it should find a welcome place on the programs of the smaller houses which feature a daily change of bill.

The story doesn't waste any time getting started. The spectator is immediately thrust into the conflict precipitated between the president of the cattlemen's association and sheep raisers who are supposed to be back of the cattle raids. This president, incidentally, is the hero, and when he falls in love with the daughter of the leading sheep raiser, one can appreciate that the plot carries a romantic conflict as well. The unruly forces do some night riding to carry out their designs and the hero has a struggle on his hands in subduing them. But he comes through with complete success—as all heroes do, and before you know it the story is over.

The rodeo scene might have been employed to better advantage. Having made such mention of it the sponsors should have put on the show. But it is merely suggested. The night raid of the masked riders might also have been treated more extensively. The picture releases some effective long shots of the cattle and sheep ranges and there is an adequate amount of horsemanship exposed. In all, quite a spirited western. Edmund Cobb poses frequently as the hero, thus failing to keep in character.

The Cast

Martin Lethbridge.....	Edmund Cobb
Blunt Vanier.....	Frank Gallagher
Gregg Randall.....	Clare Hutton
Bob Randall.....	Roy Langdon
Red Morris.....	Harry Ascher
Soapweed Harris.....	E. Glendower
Roddy, the sheriff.....	B. Bonaventure
Wagner.....	Levi Simpson
Dolly.....	Dolly Vale
Inez.....	Helen Hayes

By Courtney Riley Cooper. Scenario by Otis B. Thayer. Directed by Otis B. Thayer.

The Story—Lethbridge, president of cattlemen's association, is called upon to investigate cattle raids supposed to have been inspired by sheep raisers. Principal sheep owner's daughter has romance with cattleman. This complicates matters, but Lethbridge finally conquers his enemies.

Classification—Western melodrama featuring conflict between cattlemen and sheep owners.

Production Highlights—The competent work of cast. The long shots. The effective horsemanship. The fairly swift action.

Exploitation Angles—This cast is unknown. Play up its swift action and bill it as western above the average. The customary ideas should be exploited—such as the cowboy quartette and ballyhoo the number with a rider or two attired as cowboys.

Drawing Power—Should please audiences in second and third class downtown houses.

"Stepping Fast"

Fox—1608 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS picture carries all the earmarks of being made per schedule. It is if the author didn't have any time to use his imagination so he hit upon the time-worn pattern of the treasure cave with the hero and the villains in mortal combat to reach it first. The only virtue this Tom Mix offering has is its speed, coupled with a fairly exciting climax in which the star shows his skill at driving his racing car. Otherwise it is made after the dime novel formula—with the good and evil characters carrying on the grand pursuit of one another. There is nothing lifelike about it. Indeed one can almost hear the director laughing as he cries, "Camera!" And so they're off, from one location to another.

The killings take place early. Mix stumbles upon a rich scientist who has hidden his treasure in a mountain cave instead of in the vaults of a trust company and the entire plot hinges upon his protecting it against the wild and hectic assaults of the villains. They follow him to Los Angeles and kill his mother and cause the scientist to die of a heart attack. And before Mix gets his R-E-V-E-N-G-E, he is tossed into the ocean and assaulted time and again. The hokum enters in shape of a ring on which is engraved the exact location of the cave. The rich man gives him the emblem, telling him that the duplicate is in the possession of his daughter in China. So it's a race across the Pacific between the rescued ranchman and the villains to reach the girl, the hero's object being to protect her, and the object of the bad men to get the duplicate since they believe the other is lost with the man they tossed overboard.

The action is wild but it steps right along. The trap doors and panels provide the properties for the Chinese hokum. And a healthy fight is enjoyed by all before they race back across the ocean. The finish shows Mix using a trigger finger, a Dempsey punch and his racing car in outwitting the bandits. A hackneyed story, this, but kept fairly sustaining through its speed. Mix resorts to trick clothes in most of his pictures of late—and he seems to have a penchant for wearing chamois gloves in a majority of his scenes. It can't be temperament, so it must be his flair for burlesque.

The Cast

Grant Malvern.....	Tom Mix
Helen Durant.....	Claire Adams
Fabian.....	Donald McDonald
Martinez.....	Hector Sarno
Sun Yat.....	Edward Peil
"Red" Pollock.....	George Seigmann
Quentin Durant.....	Tom S. Guise
Commodore Simpson.....	Edward Jobson
Miss Higgins.....	Ethel Wales
Mrs. Malvern.....	Minna Ferry Redman

By Bernard McConville. Directed by Joseph Franz. Photographed by Dan Clark. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Features young westerner who saves a rich scientist from attack. He goes to his mother's home in the city and learns that the enemies of the scientist have killed his mother. He resolves to punish them. Unable to cope with them single-handed, he is rescued from a watery grave and carried to China. There the villains pursue him because he has the secret of the treasure cave which belongs to the scientist. After many adventurous encounters he is successful against his oppressors.

Classification—Adventure melodrama based upon the pursuit.

Exploitation Angles—Play up Mix's ability to furnish an exciting hour in all of his stories. Feature the title for a catch line campaign advising your patrons they will have to step fast to see this picture.

Production Highlights—The fast stepping action. The climax when Mix captures the villains. The good atmosphere.

Drawing Power—Should please Mix's following. Suitable for program houses featuring daily change of bill.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"Roll Along"

(Educational—Two Reels)

HERE is a comedy which is decidedly above the average. The entire Christie cast, including Jimmie Adams, Sam Irving, Natalie Joyce, and Babe London, appear in blackface roles. Nor is the make-up the only unusual element in the subject. The action transpires on a genuine Mississippi River location in the South with dancing darkeys making merry on the levee, old black mummies, cotton-laden stern-wheelers, and all the other elements of the conventional Southern atmosphere in the background. The effective characterization of the loquacious and garish darkey of the Southland by both Adams and Irving deserve special mention though the rest of the cast do commendable work in their blackface roles.

And the comedy carries a story too—one with real situations, well sustained suspense and some very amusing incidents. Adams and Irving are rivals for the hand of Miss Joyce. It is decided that the first suitor back with a parson from the neighboring landing will be the winner. Two competing stern-wheelers are employed by the rivals in their race for the fair one's hand. The cotton steamers vieing for the lead with their smokestacks belching great black clouds of smoke and their propellers churning up the water at top speed will give a thrill, especially when one of them is operated by a crew of one, Jimmie Adams, who climbs from engine room to wheel-house and back again every few moments to keep his ship in the race. The finish is a whirlwind with an O. Henry twist that, we predict, will get a real howl of merriment from any audience. The sub-titles couched in Southern dialect, for the most part, are adequate and amusing. If you are looking for an out-of-the-ordinary comedy, be sure to book this one.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"The Unsuspecting Stranger"

(Pathe—Two Reels)

THIS is one of the Range Rider series of westerns with Leo Maloney in the featured role. Maloney is presented in the part of a stranger looking about for a ranch with a water supply on the property. Unscrupulous cowmen with a ranch devoid of water scheme to palm off the useless property on him. Their plan is to secure for the prospective buyer "a right of way" to the adjoining ranch which has water running through it. When the owner of the adjacent property refuses to become party to their deception they plot to have him jailed on the false charge of cattle rustling so as to get him out of the way temporarily until the sale is closed. An element of suspense is injected by the planting of a fraudulently branded hide in the barn of the intended victim and the arrival of the sheriff at the instigation of the crooked ranchmen to make a search of the property. The counter plot launched by Maloney, who has overheard the scheme to victimize himself and the owner of the adjoining ranch, makes an interesting story. The conventional western atmosphere is well carried out. There is a fight scene staged by Maloney and the leader of the crooked cowmen on the retaining wall of a dam that starts out rather poorly but registers effectively towards the close. A romance between the hero and the daughter of the owner of the adjoining ranch lends additional appeal to the subject.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Ain't Love Awful?"

(Universal—Two Reels)

AS comedy fare this will probably be found to rank as "good." Made up, to a considerable extent, of orthodox comedy situations and incident, there are nevertheless sufficient original touches injected from time to time to keep the action interesting and furnish some good laughs. Bob Dunn is first presented as a training partner of "One Round Ed." The pair are minus funds and are put to the task of securing their breakfast surreptitiously. By means of a movable dial revolved on the inside of the door they are able to change their apartment number and secure delivery of food supplies intended for their neighbors. The customary hard-boiled landlady is eventually introduced. She detects them in the act of cooking breakfast, discovers that their garden pictures are really made up smuggled fruit and vegetables and promptly throws them and their "kitchenette" out.

Dunn is then presented as a suitor whose prospective father-in-law does not think kindly of his matrimonial intentions. To discourage his courtship, father engages "One Round Ed" to trounce daughter's beau when he calls. Subsequently, a number of financiers interested in a promotion scheme of father's arrive for a conference. As they enter one by one "One Round Ed" promptly beats them up, determined on not letting daughter's expected caller get by through any mischance. Meanwhile, Bob outside notes that everybody admitted to the conference wears a beard; he disguises himself with a long pair of whiskers and makes his entry. "One Round Ed" promptly opens the attack but desists upon discovering that his victim is his old pal Bob. Later, a letter from Bob's rich pa announces his readiness to finance the scheme sponsored by daughter's parent on the condition that Bob be given the girl's hand in marriage. Bob's father has been an enthusiastic supporter of his son's suit from the start. Of course, with sure funds in sight for his scheme, father-in-law cancels his objections.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Pop Tuttle's Lost Nerve"

(Pop Tuttle Comedy-F. B. O.—Two Reels)

DAN MASON as the much "beavered" bus driver bobs up here in a dentist's chair—which certainly places him in a different type of comedy than that with which he has usually been identified. Any opus having to do with physical pain is not good material for entertainment. But this effort does not take itself too seriously and no one should take exception to it.

One of those much-advertised painless dentists opens up an office in Pop's town and invites the innocent onlookers (the dental surgery is practiced in the open air) to have their teeth pulled free of charge. He has the up-to-date methods of a picture director in that a two-piece orchestra is engaged to sooth the nerves of the patients. It has its effect in drowning the screams of the victims. Pop is having a tough time on his hands—and a tough drill on his teeth—'til Tillie, the big girl, rescues the peppery ol' bus driver and knocks the dentist for a row of false plates. A fairly amusing effort.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Three-Gunman"

(Fox—Two Reels)

HERE is a good fast comedy with some original touches and plenty of action. The story centers around studio life and the tribulations of a leading man who has to make a personal appearance before a hostile crowd at the premiere of his picture. There is plenty of hokum and much of it has been seen before in the way of comedy incident, but the "old stuff" is cleverly handled and, in addition, there are some original stunts that are bound to send the most hard-boiled audience into appreciative laughter.

The story opens with a casting office and the entry of candidates for the leading role in a Western thriller. There are dozens of applicants of all shapes and weights, but they have one thing in common—a Charlie Chaplin make-up and the well-known Chaplin hop and skid. They are unceremoniously ejected, one by one, on a hidden conveyor. Next the hero enters in conventional cowboy attire, stages a fake hold-up, and then, partially concealed behind a partition, does a rapid-change performance, assuming the double role of bandit and rescuer. This part is particularly good. The premiere of the hero's picture follows. His screen vehicle proves to be an exaggerated Western with trick gun-play and plenty of burlesque situations that are good for a laugh. The audience led by a deposed director, who is sore at the hero, "pan" the picture and the leading man's acting, and when, at the close of the performance, he appears before the house, he is greeted with the customary slapstick barrage of cabbages, rotten tomatoes, etc. The fade-out shows the crowd in pursuit of the hero. Some original touches are introduced into the chase.

The titles deserve special mention: they are original and appropriate.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Sold at Auction"

(Roach-Pathe—Two Reels)

THIS belongs among the best comedies that we have seen recently. The action sets a fast pace from the start and keeps going until the fade-out. There are novel situations and some clever original and very amusing gags. The story presents Snub Pollard in the role of an auctioneer who is given the job of selling the furnishings of a house whose owner is in need of ready cash. Everything in the house is disposed of; even a set of false teeth found on the premises is sold. Then it is discovered that the auctioneer has gotten into the wrong house and what is worse that the furnishings disposed of belong to the Chief of Police who has been on a vacation with his family. When the owner arrives and finds his home vacated of all his belongings he compels the auctioneer to go out and recover every article down even to the set of false teeth. The recovery of the property presents many difficulties, and some of the stunts resorted to to redeem the furniture will afford a wealth of amusement to the most hardboiled audience, we predict. There are thrills here too; a piano is sent hurling through the street across trolley and railroad tracks with Pollard atop directing its course; and the task of recovering the false teeth necessitates a wild flight in an aeroplane. There are some novelty effects introduced that are exceptionally well-handled. Pollard in the auctioneer's role proves highly amusing, and the rest of the cast give him adequate support.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"The Trail of No Return"

(Universal—Two Reels)

CONVENTIONAL story with faithful Western atmosphere and plenty of action. Ned Crosby, played by Neal Hart, pits his wits and courage against a band of outlaws from Hell's Morgue. The reason for this rash action on the part of Crosby is that the beautiful daughter (played by Eileen Sedgwick) of Mr. Carlton, an Easterner, is endangered by her father's determination to pass through Hell's Morgue, the bandits' mountain stronghold. Of course, there is the crafty Western prospector, in collusion with the outlaw band, who encourages the Easterner to visit Hell's Morgue against the hero's better advice. The matter of protecting Miss Carlton is made increasingly difficult for Crosby because he is wrongly suspected of the robbery of Carlton's bag of valuables and put under arrest. But the sheriff is Crosby's friend, and when the hero witnesses the departure of the Easterners for the mountains he is conveniently paroled, under oath to return, so that he may follow the party into the hills.

The party is betrayed by the villainous guide; Carlton is wounded; and his daughter made captive. But Crosby breaks into the outlaws' lair, whips the villain, and rescues the girl, while his friends, summoned by one of the Easterners who has escaped from the bandits, put the rest of the outlaws to flight. Crosby is proved innocent of the charge lodged against him, and Miss Carlton's faith in her Western hero is sustained.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"For Art's Sake"

(Pathe—One Reel)

THIS is a travesty on life in an art colony in which Paul Parrott and Marie Mosquini play the featured roles. Hokum and slapstick incident flourish from start to finish and will, we believe, furnish lots of real laughs where this type of comedy is popular. Parrott in the role of a cello player lives above a roughneck sculptor who does not take kindly to Parrott's brand of music. The sculptor promptly puts the objectionable cello to the axe and in chopping the last fragment of the instrument against the main prop of the stoop smashes the support and brings down the whole staircase down on his head. The cellist's method of securing his supplies from a vender's stand by the use of a trick shoe and his performances on the bass viol before the assemblage of musical critics are also good for a laugh. The transition from incident to incident is well carried out, and the sub-titles are reduced to a minimum. On the whole an entertaining one-reeler from the angle of slapstick comedy.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Clothes and Oil"

(Fox Comedy—Two Reels)

THERE is plenty of laughter contained in this little skit which concerns the get-rich efforts of a tramp, played by Chester Conklin, who poses as an efficiency expert. Conklin's exploits lead him into contact with a tailoring establishment, which he attempts to put over with his ideas of placing business on a paying basis, and he later enters into a scheme to sell phoney oil stock.

Success crowns his efforts until the law steps in its deadly, efficient way and makes him look like a piker. There is very little slapstick, the comedy relying upon its little thread of plot plus some very breezy incidents. It will hand out a hearty laugh anywhere.—LAURENCE REID.

"Giants vs. Yanks," which is another of the "Our Gang" series for Pathe release.

"The Crystal Ascension"

(Pathe—One Reel)

THIS travelogue shows a group of tourists ascending Mount Hood of the Oregon Cascade Range, which reaches an elevation of 11,255 feet above sea level. The camera in addition to revealing the difficulties confronted during the course of the long, arduous climb has caught all the beauty and grandeur of lofty white-capped peaks, great stretches of snow-covered mountain inclines, and curious glacial formations. The great banks of cloud and mist concealing the valley below from the gaze of the climbers on the heights are also a feature shot of the reel. Against this background of snow, cloud, and moraine are depicted the details of the ascent and return, the use of the life-line, the alpine stock, and the pick being portrayed. The use of the heliograph flashing its message over the miles of intervening country from the tavern in the valley below to those at the apex is also graphically shown.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Small Change"

(Educational—One Reel)

THIS is just another comedy without anything much to recommend it from the angle of humorous entertainment. Billy Eugene and Virginia Vance are in the featured roles, although a trick dog actor gets in some clever work towards the close of the subject. Most of the action transpires in a restaurant where Eugene officiates as a penurious host to Miss Vance in the role of a chorus girl with a costly appetite. The action and situations are of the orthodox type—business of chorus girl ordering "gold-tipped asparagus with radium sauce," etc., while her admirer vainly registers "no funds" and finally in desperation cancels her order and requests "a steak for two." The dog enlivens the subject a bit by getting into a scrap with the restaurant cat. The diners are given toy balloons which on being blown up reveal the image of a black cat with arched back, poised for battle. The dog attacks the balloons upsetting the guests and throwing the restaurant into an uproar. The sub-titles will probably afford a laugh or two.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Oh Nursie"

(Century Comedy—Universal—Two Reels)

JACK COOPER, the featured comedian of this new comic gesture of Century's, has his hands full in taking care of the "up and at 'em" slapstick which takes place in a hospital. Hot water bags supply many of the gags. They are tossed around with careless abandon and the doctors are struck by them as well as the patients. The insurance agent visits the hospital and he lives up to form by clambering all over the invalids with bandaged heads, feet, etc., in his desire to get treatment. The piece is fairly amusing.—LAURENCE REID.

"Heavyweight Fight Pictures"

(International—Universal—Three Reels)

THE International—Universal forces have scooped the field in collecting the pictures of the heavyweight elimination fights which took place in the Yankee Stadium, New York, May 12th. They were staged for the benefit of the Milk Fund and it is said that Charity profited highly—even after Jess Willard, Floyd Johnson, Luis Firpo, the pride of the pampas, and Jack Mc-Auliffe and their sponsors, seconds, rubbers, et al counted their receipts.

Fight fans will enjoy the pictures—and wherever men are men throughout New York State, they will crowd the box-office window to see them. So we advise the exhibitors to get them and make some noise about it. Since the interstate laws prevent the pictures leaving the Empire State, the fans outside its borders will have to depend upon the newspaper accounts.

They have been well edited so that the crucial moments are always at hand—such as the important rounds and the knock-out blows. Titles are given up in showing how the elderly Mr. Willard "came back" and beat a youth of twenty-two summers. We will agree with the sporting writers that young Mr. Johnson possesses a stout heart and should be heard from when he learns how to balance his gameness by using his head. The cave-man from the Argentine settled his adversary in short order.

The pictures are being shown at the Rialto and are creating real excitement. The slow motion process is used to show the knock-out punches.

The exhibitors along the Central, Lackawanna, Erie and D & H should book the pictures for a short subject program. We predict a good "gate."—LAURENCE REID.

"Don't Flirt"

(Pathe—One Reel)

THIS is the first of the new Hal Roach one-reelers with all-animal casts, which will be known under the general name of "Dippy Doo Dads." The subject presents geese, monkeys, hens and dogs in human roles and embodies some clever touches in the way of acting. The slender story has to do with Mr. Gander, who in the role of a "city slicker," trifles with the hearts of the "fair ones" in the poultry yard. The "village gossips," played by two hens, bring word of the scandal to "father" gander who promptly calls in the service of the local constable, a clever monkey, to rid the poultry yard of the nuisance. The rest of the action shows how Mr. Gander is pursued, captured, and properly disciplined. The reel as a whole is a decided novelty and ought to go well wherever clever all-animal casts are in favor. Each animal player is properly costumed for its role, the make-up of the town constable and "father" gander being especially amusing.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Amateur Night on the Ark"

(Pathe—One Reel)

HERE is a number in the series of Aesop's Fables that deserves special mention as a laugh provoker. The story centers around an amateur night performance staged on Noah's ark with all species of animals taking part as players and spectators. In depicting the arrival and entry of the various animals into the theatre and the subsequent antics of the players before the footlights the cartoonist has created some highly amusing effects. The subject ends in a riot with all the animals pursuing Noah around the deck and finally compelling him to jump overboard. If your audience likes cartoon comedies be sure you get this one for them.—E. F. SUPPLE.

Edna Murphy at Work as Serial Star

Pathe confirms published announcements of Hal Roach's engagement of Edna Murphy to star in a serial production entitled "Her Dangerous Path," and adds the information that the first episode is now nearing completion. The title, as above, has been definitely changed from the announced temporary title, "What Should a Girl Do?"

Special interest is said to attach to the new departure in serial production which calls upon the star to interpret several different types of heroine.

Pathe Review to Issue a Special Number

Pathe Review announces that it will shortly issue its "Perfect Twenty-two." This, it explains, will be a number which the editor and his staff have produced in the expectation, it is explained, "that it will set a new screen magazine pace in pictorial charm and diversity of entertainment values."

The "Perfect Twenty-two" contains five subjects, each declared to be a "little masterpiece of beauty and general attractiveness."

Says Short Subject Leads Way "Wilderness Tales" Praised by Editor as Showing Way in Screen Art

"By no means all the excellent photography which serves to leaven the weekly grist of films is discoverable in the much touted super features," writes the reviewer of the Stage and Screen columns of the Boston Transcript in a plea for more art in composition and photography in motion pictures.

"As a matter of record, the contrary is often true, and the shortcomings assume startling proportions in the great majority of 'programme' pictures. Not one in ten discloses a conscious attempt to better the pictorial technique of the summer motorist who 'kodaks as he goes.' Of course, there are exceptions—glorious exceptions."

After paying high tribute to the wonderful photography and composition in "Robin Hood" and "Knighthood," the writer continues:

"But such visions are few, bitterly few for those picture goers who look forward anxiously to the new day of the cinema when a photoplay shall be built according to a technique quite different from the technique of the speaking stage, or even of the pantomime. They might be tempted to be utterly down hearted sometimes, if it were not for frequent signs that lesser makers of films are leading the way to the future. Unanimous praise, and praise richly deserved, has showered upon Robert Bruce for his 'Wilderness Tales.' He is one director whose influence upon dramatic technique in the reels will not be immediately apparent, but who is, nevertheless, learning to make seashore and mountain crag, long grass and waves and clouds, and even the night winds truly actors in his pictures. These are things the stage will never compass."

Educational Signs White Again Contract with Producer-Director of Mermaid Comics Renewed for 3 Years

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces that Jack White, young producer-director of Mermaid Comedies, has been signed up for another three years and that he will produce, during the coming year, in addition to a new series of Mermaids, a group of three special comedy subjects to be known as Jack White Specials.

White, whose Mermaid Comedies of the current season, featuring Lige Conley, Jimmie Adams and Louise Fazenda, have set a new standard for broad situation comedies, left New York for the Pacific Coast a few days ago after several weeks of conferences with Mr. Hammons and E. H. Allen, Educational's production manager with the White and Hamilton units.

The 1923-1924 series of Mermaid Comedies, the first of which will go into production immediately after White's arrival in Los Angeles, will be twelve in number, the first being released early in the Fall.

The Jack White Specials, as well as the Mermaid Comedies, will be two-reel subjects.

There are still two subjects to be released in the 1922-23 series of Mermaid Comedies, "Three Strikes," a college-baseball picture, which is on Educational's June schedule, and "Backfire," which has just recently been completed. Both feature Lige Conley, who took the leading role in the majority of the pictures in the current group and who will probably be featured in many of the pictures next season.

Truart to Have Series Based on Art Works

ARTHUR MAUDE, who was responsible for the success of the recent Truart series, is now engaged in the preparation and production of a new and bigger list of productions based upon famous works of art.

M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of the Truart, signed a contract with Mr. Maude for six of the pictures which will be limited to two reels each. Studio work will shortly be started on the initial subject in New York, and arrangements call for the delivery of one finished negative a month.

All-Animal Pathe Comedies Score Hit

"Dippy Doo Dads," Hal Roach's latest comedy novelty series of 1-reelers with all-animal characters, have scored on both coasts. While audiences at the Strand Theatre, New York, were being shown the almost human antics of these Roach Studio "Zoo" actors in "Don't Flirt," Grauman in San Francisco was booking the series for houses of the best class on the West Coast.

Pathe reports that "Dippy Doo Dads" are being eagerly booked throughout the country, especially wherever Hal Roach comedies are regularly played.

New Earl Hurd Animated Subject Completed

"Their Love Grew Cold" is the latest of the Earl Hurd animated comedies to be produced by C. C. Burr. As is usual with these single reelers, real people, animals and inanimate objects are used, an original stunt of Mr. Hurd's. In "Their Love Grew Cold," Russell Griffin, C. C. Burr's five-year-old star, is master of ceremonies and puts the rest of the cast through its capers.

First of New Anchor Series Completed

"Cakes" is the title of the first two-reel situation Moranti Comedy which has just been completed under the direction of Tom Gibson. The cast includes Milburn Moranti, Helen Kessler, Eddie Barry, Russell Tizzard and Olga Gordon.

This is the first of a series of eighteen two reel comedies to be distributed by the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., under the brand name of Iris Comedies and the entire series will be edited and titled by Bob Hopkins the famous title writer. The company is now working on the second one and the working title is "A. W. O. L."

Denver Books Charley Murray Comedies

Harry T. Nolan, manager of the Associated First National Exchange of Denver and the proprietor of several theatres, has written C. C. Burr, the producer, as follows relative to the All-Star Comedies.

"I know you will be pleased to learn that we have booked the Charlie Murray Comedies in our houses and am glad to tell you that they are giving splendid satisfaction. With the exception possibly of comedies like Chaplin, Lloyd and Semon, I really think the Murray comedies are a better and more pleasing product to our patrons than anything I know of on the market. They are well produced, good photography, clean and humorous."

Noel Smith Directing Buddy Messenger

Noel Smith, having completed "His Master" with Pal, the clever dog, Henry Murdock, Otto Fries and Violet Sheldon, has had the Messenger unit turned over to him by Julius and Abe Stern.

The new Buddy Messenger story will concern itself with rural life. It will be called "Slide Kelly Slide" and the boy Century player will be supported by Ida McKenzie instead of little Sadie Campbell, who has appeared in all of Buddy's pictures heretofore.

Quick Work by Pathe News on Air Flight

Pathe News No. 38, shown on New York screens Wednesday afternoon, presented pictures of the exciting finish of the greatest airplane feat on record, when the Army monoplane T-2 dropped out of the sky at San Diego, landing for the first time since its start, 27 hours before, on the opposite side of the continent.

The Pathe News negatives were aboard a fast train for Chicago within a brief space after the aviators' landing. There they were dispatched aboard the 20th Century Limited which reached New York on Tuesday morning, about four and one half days from the hour of the landing of the T-2 at its transcontinental non-stop destination.

Julius Stern Sails For Europe on Vacation

Julius Stern, president of Century Film Corporation, sailed for Europe on the Rotterdam for a three months' vacation. Like others of Mr. Stern's vacations, this will be partly work. He is looking for a new comedian, preferably one who can do "stunts." The Century offices at 1600 Broadway have been full of applicants for the last week which Mr. Stern spent in New York before he sailed, but as none of them seemed to fill the bill, it is probable that he may engage some foreign talent.

Al Herman Completes Story for Century

Al Herman has just finished his house-moving story, the working title of which was "Taking His Degree." This has been changed to "Hold On."

Nine Pathe Releases for May 27

Snub Pollard Heads List in Original Comedy, "Sold at Auction"

PATHE'S program of nine releases for May 27 offers—Snub Pollard and Leo Maloney in new comedy subjects—while Ruth Roland's latest serial, "Haunted Valley," reaches its fourth thrilling episode.

Snub Pollard is seen in an original set of comic troubles for the hero, called "Sold at Auction." After stimulating an auctioneer's business in "First Aid Kits" by getting himself smashed up frequently in the regular way of business, he is entrusted with the responsibility of auctioning off a Mr. Goop's household goods on the premises. Getting into the Chief of Police's house by mistake, while the family is away, he sells everything that's loose—and then the chief arrives. The sudden necessity of hustling all over town and bringing everything back produces astonishing results, highly comic to all but the hero.

Leo Maloney is the hero of a close-knit drama of novel complications called "The Unsuspecting Stranger," in which he turns the tables on a bunch of cattle "rustlers" who try to sell him a waterless ranch, in a way that brings some startling effects and surprises.

In Episode Four of "Haunted

Valley," the heroine is involved in the perils of an earthquake, which stops her great industrial operations at a critical period. She is seen plunging in a care to the verge of a yawning chasm.

The single-reel Hal Roach comedy, for "Art's Sake," finds Paul Parrott in his element representing ecstatic musical genius assisted by a trick bull fiddle, while other geniuses in sculpture, painting and poetry assist him to get in bad with an enraged populace.

Aesop's Film Fables are represented by "Amateur Night on the Ark." Noah stands it as long as he can, then takes a header over the rail and swims away from there. Moral: "They who strive to please every one, please no one."

The big treat in Pathe Review No. 21 takes the audience "close up" into the presence of the famous sculptor, George Grey Barnard at work in his studio on "Art by the Ton"—a heroic statue of Abraham Lincoln. "Do Plants Feel?" is a question answered in the affirmative by the sensitive mimosa whenever a rude hand disturbs its foliage. The Pathecolor section pictures Cargese, Corsica—"The Town of the Brigands."

Arrow Starts Historical Serial

Neva Gerber to Star in "The Santa Fe Trail," Directed by Robt. Dillon

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week by W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, of the closing of a contract between Arrow Film Corporation and Miss Neva Gerber, the serial star, for the production of a serial written and directed by Robert Dillon, to be known as "The Santa Fe Trail."

Mr. Dillon will be remembered as the author of "Winners of the West," "The Oregon Trail" and "In the Days of Buffalo Bill." He is also an experienced director and supervised the direction of the Buffalo Bill serial. The action of "The Santa Fe Trail" takes place between Independence, Kansas, and California, and covers that romantic period of American History when the hardy pioneers, facing privations and dangers forged boldly forward and helped to win for America the glorious West. Dealing, as it does, with the days of prairie schooners, roving tribes of hostile Indians, Spanish Dons, and such romantic figures as the famous guide and scout, Kit Carson, Buffalo Bill, Generals Custer and Sheridan, as well as the notorious Indian Chiefs, Satanta, Kicking Bird, and Old Wolf, it is expected the serial will hold unusual interest from the standpoint of the spectator and have a distinct historical value.

Miss Gerber, in addition to being the producer of the serial, will play the stellar role and she will be supported by Jack Perrin. The

Seeking Effective Comedy Titles

Jack Cohn of C. B. C. Sending Out a Questionnaire to Decide Best Type

"MONKEYING Around" is the title that has been given the newest Hallroom Boys Comedy by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, which is releasing this series of two-reel laughmakers. With the announcement of this title Jack Cohn, of C. B. C., is sending out a questionnaire to determine which type title is most effective for comedies, these based on the more or less slangy slogans people use in everyday life or those which are satires on big feature productions or news items of the day.

"It is my belief that the effect of comedy must be instantaneous, or it does not accomplish its purpose," said Mr. Cohn in discussing the questionnaire he has sent out. "Most people will think out a serious film, or play but if comedy doesn't register its point at once, it is lost forever. If the name of a comedy strikes a responsive chord part of the battle is won, for word of mouth advertising is the most wonderful advertising you can get for a comedy."

Boxer Improves Form While Acting

During the time that H. C. Wither's "Fighting Blood" series of boxing picture has been filmed, George O'Hara, the fighting star, has developed into a boxer of high calibre. Now, with the filming of the twelfth round, or last of these two-reel series for F. B. O., he is prepared to meet the best in his particular class.

In real life George has gone through the same stages of development as the character he delineates upon the screen. He, like Galen, the hero of "Fighting Blood," started in the game only a fair boxer but with a desire to learn. Director St. Clair has constantly endeavored throughout the series to find for him opponents who would extend him to the limit.

First Intimate Views of Obregon Showing

With issue No. 64, Fox News presents the first intimate views of President of Mexico, General Alvaro Obregon, that have ever been shown in a news reel.

Gen. Obregon and the Mexican Government never before afforded to a news reel representative such privileges as were granted to James Seebach, Fox News cameraman, according to a statement from the Fox home office.

Obregon gave Mr. Seebach facilities for photographing him at dinner, walking in the beautiful gardens of the Chapultepec Castle, receiving a delegation of San Francisco business men and of other intimate household activities.

Well-Known Actors Are Cast by Christie

Max Davidson, the character actor, who has become famous in the film community at Hollywood for his portrayal of Hebrew character roles, plays one of these characterizations with Bobby Vernon in the Educational-Christie Comedy, "Plumb Crazy."

Christie also engaged Tommy O'Brien, who played opposite Bobby Vernon in "Pardon My Glove," as heavy man, to enact a similar role in this comedy. Duane Thompson, one of the new leading ladies who lately attached her name to a Christie contract, makes her bow with Vernon in this comedy.

Gene Sarazen Golf Special for Educational

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., will release as their next Short Subjects Special, the one-reel sport subject, "Golf, as played by Gene Sarazen."

The picture shows Sarazen, the United States open champion and United States Professional Golfers' Association champion, as he demonstrates the science of golf in a series of scenes taken both at normal speed, and by means of slow motion photography. The picture will be a June release.

Sarazen, the twenty-two-year-old champion, possesses a golfing technique that is a perfect blend of time tried principle with all the modern modification of the game as developed by its leading exponents. To see Sarazen in action is to have a golfing lesson of unsurpassed value to those who are either just taking up the sport or to those who are seeking to improve their own game. In slow motion photography the novice or expert can study Sarazen's methods.

Beauty Prize Winner in "Brass Bottle"

Hazel Keener, who was awarded, by a jury of artists selected by the Chicago Tribune, a prize of $1000 as the most beautiful woman in the state of Iowa, has a part in Maurice Tourneur's forthcoming production "The Brass Bottle."

As an Oriental princess of Solomon's day, Miss Keener has a magnificent opportunity to display the beauty which won her the Tribune prize and later the first prize of the International Photographic Fair in London, it is said.

New Universal Serial Under Way

"In the Days of Daniel Boone" Is Next of Historical Chapter Films

WORK is well under way at Universal City on Universal's new historical chapter picture, "In the Days of Daniel Boone." This is to be in 15 chapters of two reels each. It deals with the historically picturesque days of the American Colonies. The bigness of the production can be judged from the fact that the first chapter alone is reported to have cost as much or more than the average five reel feature production.

"In the Days of Daniel Boone" is to be the latest word in thrills-from-history screen entertainment," declares a statement from Universal's home-office. "This style of screen fare, first made a commercial success by Universal in its chapter picture, 'Winners of the West,' a continued feature dealing with the gold rush days of '49, has swept throughout the industry. Super-pictures now are being made along the lines historical-educational popularized by Universal with its chapter pictures."

Universal's contribution to this movement has been, besides "Winners of the West," and several other chapter pictures dealing with historical or literary characters, two other chapter pictures based on American history. One was "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," and the other "The Oregon Trail."

"In the Days of Daniel Boone" is characterized as an "all-star" serial. There are, however, two featured players. They are Eileen Sedgwick and Jack Mower. Miss Sedgwick has been starred in many Universal serials, the most popular of which have been "The Terror Trail" and "The Diamond Queen." Mower has played leading roles in many Universal pictures and also has had featured parts in other productions. The cast also includes Duke R. Lee, Charles Brinley, Albert J. Smith and Ruth Royce.

The story has been written directly from history by Jefferson Moffatt. It is being directed by William Craft, assisted by Frank Messinger and Jay Marchant. The picture, it is expected, will be available for the summer months.

Columbia Graphophone Co. Tie-up Arranged

The Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., have completed an exploitation tie-up with the Columbia Graphophone Company in connection with their two-reel special, "The Message of Emile Coue."

The Columbia record, "Self Mastery Through Conscious Auto Suggestion," has just been released to dealers throughout the United States and Canada. It consists of two records, four sides, and is a reproduction of M. Coue's lecture delivered in this country, recorded by M. Coue himself.

Columbia branches and dealers have been advised of the tie-up through the New York offices of the Columbia Company, and exhibitors will be notified through the Educational exchanges.

Charlie Murray Loaned to Bennie Zeidman

Charlie Murray having completed work in one of the C. C. Burr All-Star Comedies and waiting around for the next one to be filmed, Mr. Burr gave Bennie Zeidman permission to use the famous comedian in one of the scenes in "Bright Lights on Broadway," now being produced at the lendale studios. Murray plays a ballet dancer, tiger skin 'n' everything and follows on the screen the Tiller Girls, who are making their first screen appearance in this feature, which is to be distributed by Irving Lesser of Principal Pictures.

Urban Popular Classics Set For Release

Two Urban Popular Classics are ready for release by Vitaphone, "Roving Thomas in San Francisco" and "Modern Truths from Old Fables." Strange animals demonstrate the fable of the hare and the tortoise in "Modern Truths from Old Fables."

Having finished the first Gorham Folly Century Comedy, the title of which has been changed from "The Folly Girl" to "High Kickers," Archie Mayo is directing the second of the series which gives Jack Cooper the starring role. This subject is almost finished. Cooper has been signed for a long term by Abe Julius and Abe Stern.

"Wild and Wicked" Is Finished by Burr

"Wild and Wicked" is the latest of the C. C. Burr All-Star Comedies to be completed. Gregory La Cava directed, with a cast that includes Charlie Murray, Raymond McKee and Kathlene Martyn. It is a Western story in which Murray and McKee demonstrate their ability as rough riders.

Final Scenes of "Youth Triumphant" Shot

With the photographing of a giant cabaret scene in which nine hundred persons participated in a series of spectacular effects, the final scenes for "Youth Triumphant," Victor B. Fisher's initial independent production, has been completed.

The illness of little Virginia Lee Corbin held up the production for some days, necessitating a night and day program of production at the windup.

"Youth Triumphant" is an adaptation from George Gibbs' novel which recently appeared in serial form in the Green Book.

The story was adapted and directed by Miss Lillian Ducey, under the supervision of Mr. Fisher. Included in the cast are Virginia Lee Corbin, Anna Q. Nilsson, Raymond Hatton, Joseph Dowling, Kate Price, Claire McDowell, William Boyd, Ward Crane, Mary Anderson and others.

"Youth Triumphant" is now in its final cutting and editing under Miss Ducey's direction and will be ready for distribution within the next two weeks.

Preferred Picture Given Wide Publicity

The Al Lichtman Corporation is publicizing B. P. Schulberg's recent Preferred Picture, "The Girl Who Came Back," by offering to newspapers throughout the country a twenty thousand word fictionization of the film version written by Lewis Levenson, the well-known writer of stories and special articles. One hundred and seventeen papers are already publishing it as a serial feature with illustrations from the press book, it is said.

Its widespread publication in these papers is expected to arouse general interest in the picture.

Busy Summer at Goldwyn Studios

Greatest Activity in Organization's History, with Many New Productions

THE Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal., will experience their most active summer season this year. In addition to the several productions now under way, four new ones have just started, with preparations under way for still more.

Four feature pictures have just been completed, two new production units started work last week, two more are just beginning. One director is working on a new story which will soon go into production, and three others are seeking new stories. Two companies are in the midst of production.

The feature pictures just completed are: Marshall Neilan's "The Eternal Three," King Vidor's "Three Wise Fools," Clarence Badger's "Red Lights," and Jesse D. Hampton's production of "The Spoilers," directed by Lambert Hillyer.

The four new productions on which the cameras have started turning are Marshall Neilan's third Goldwyn picture, "The Rendezvous," in which Conrad Nagel, Lucille Ricksen, Emmett Corrigan, Elmo Lincoln and Sidney Chaplin have leading parts; Emmett J. Flynn's first Goldwyn picture, "In the Palace of the King," from F. Marion Crawford's novel, and with a cast including Blanche Sweet, Edmund Lowe, Hohart Bosworth, Pauline Starke, Aileen Pringle, Sam de Grasse and Charles Clary; Tod Browning's first Goldwyn picture, from the Arthur Somers Roche novel, "The Day of Faith," with Eleanor Boardman, Raymond Griffith, Tyrone Power, and Ford Sterling in the leading roles; and George D. Baker's production for Achievement Films, "The Magic Skin," a spectacular photoplay based upon Balzac's famous novel, with Bessie Love, Carmel Myers and Edward Connelly in the leading roles.

Victor Seastrom, noted Swedish actor-director, will soon start production on his first picture for Goldwyn, "The Master of Man," from Sir Hall Caine's latest novel. Mae Busch is cast for one of the leading parts in this film.

King Vidor, who recently completed "Three Wise Fools," is now writing an original scenario. Hugo Ballin whose latest picture is "Vanity Fair," starring Mabel Ballin, is now considering stories for his next production, and Rupert Hughes, whose latest picture was the sensational "Souls for Sale" is looking for a new story.

Charles J. Brabin is directing an Elinor Lyn story, "Six Days," with Corinne Griffith, Frank Mayo, Myrtle Stedman, Claude King, Maude George and Charles Clary.

Warner Bros. Studios Humming

Eighteen Special Productions for Coming Season to Be Under Way Shortly

WITH two producing units in full swing, filming two features, and sixteen more productions shortly to be placed in the hands of a number of directors, the Warner Brothers' Coast studio is rapidly gaining its stride in the picture production of eighteen "specials" for the coming season, according to a report from Sam and Jack Warner, production managers of the recently completed studios.

The entire series of pictures are being made from popular novels and stage plays. Johnny Hines who was secured by an arrangement with C. C. Burr, is being starred in "Little Johnny Jones," the George M. Cohan stage play, under the direction of Arthur Rosson; and Wesley Barry is working on the first of a number of features, "The Printer's Devil," under the direction of William Beaudine.

Several of the forthcoming features will be known as David Belasco productions, and Harry Rapt productions, while several units will complete the others. Sidney Franklin will direct Lenore Ulric in "Tiger Rose," which will be produced upon the arrival of Miss Ulric and Mr. Belasco on the coast the first week in June. Harry Beaumont has been assigned the direction of "The Gold Diggers."

The roster of screen players to be featured in the forthcoming series includes, in addition to Miss Ulric, Hines and Barry, John Barrymore, who will be featured in the Clyde Fitch play, "Beau Brummel," Marie Prevost, Hope Hampton, Irene Rich, Monte Blue, Harry Myers, and Baby Bruce Guerin, who will portray the juvenile roles.

The Warner scenario staff assigned to the adaptations of the novels and plays consists of Frank Dacey, head of the scenario department, Julien Josephson, Grant Carpenter, Agnes Christine Johnston, Mary O'Hara and Sada Cowan.

C. Graham Baker, editor-in-chief of Vitagraph, who is at Hollywood to confer with President A. E. Smith on coming super-features.

Savage Life Show in "Black Shadows"

Pathe reports that one expected result of its announcement of the release of its South Sea Islands feature, "Black Shadows," is the receipt of requests from many newspaper editors for descriptive articles and photographs on this little known type of savage life, particularly with regard to the women.

The "head hunting" drama in the Solomon Islands, reproduced in "Black Shadows" faithfully, except, of course, that there is no shedding of blood, has been vaguely represented in many Sunday Supplements, but heretofore realistic material in narrative and photographs has been lacking. Thanks to the foresight of the Salisbury Expedition, which returned with the "Black Shadows" film, this matter is now available in abundance.

It is being prepared for newspaper use, on application, in the form of articles with original photo-illustrations.

Some idea of the interesting nature of this material is presented in the "Black Shadows" campaign book, lately issued by Pathe.

Gingham Girl Chorus in Equity Feature.

Members of the chorus of the "Gingham Girl" show were used in the final scene Carson of the new Daniel Goodmans Equity picture, now getting its final cutting at the 48th street studios.

The working title of "You Get What You Give" will be changed before the release of the production which was directed by Kenneth Webb and carried a cast consisting of Mary Carr, Chas. Emmett Mack, Mildred Harris, Joe King, Tyrone Power, Helen Rowland, Joe Depew, Clara Bow, Sam Bidman and Jack Richardson.

Goldwyn Studio Boast Largest Stage

THE studios of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in California are now boasting of possessing the world's largest motion picture stage. The mammoth stage covers as much territory as an ordinary city block. It is approximately 300 feet long by 175 feet wide.

Fifty average motion picture sets can be built on it at the same time, and sets which hitherto were so large that it was necessary to build them out of doors can now be built in the shelter of the big stage, where the advantages of artistic lighting and shelter increase the efficiency and speed of production.

The new stage, which is known on the Goldwyn lot as No. 6, is one of the eight big stages at the studio. It covers more than an acre and a half of ground and contains 52,500 square feet of floor space.

Special Edition Issued on "Ragged Edge"

Grosset and Dunlap have issued a special motion picture edition of "The Ragged Edge," the Harold MacGrath novel of the South Seas, which Distinctive Pictures Corporation has produced for Goldwyn distribution. The edition is really a Mimi Palmeri Edition, as it features on its jacket a full length portrait of this newly discovered beauty of Distinctive.

Grosset and Dunlap, in conjunction with Distinctive, have already put out two teaser exploitation stunts for the book. Two hundred portraits of Miss Palmeri were sent to as many book stores throughout the country. These were placed in the display windows with only the name of the girl as identification. Later, cards were attached to the portraits explaining who Miss Palmeri is.

Schenck Promises Huge Production

Joseph M. Schenck is living up to his promise to make "Ashes of Vengeance" the greatest picture of Norma Talmadge's career as a star, according to reports which are received at the First National home office from the United Studios, where the production is now well under way with Frank Lloyd directing.

The biggest scene of the picture, the massacre of the Huguenots on St. Bartholomew's Day in 1572 will be filmed with 700 horsemen and 2,000 extras, the later playing the roles of the Huguenots.

Lloyd Brings Cheer to Prisoners

Convict Bulletin Voices Appreciation of Comedian in "Grandma's Boy"

A REMARKABLE tribute to Harold Lloyd and to the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors attraction, "Grandma's Boy," from the pen of a prison inmate, is contained in the April number of The Bulletin, which is published by the convicts in the California state penitentiary, at San Quentin. "Grandma's Boy" was shown to the prisoners March 18, and the article is signed "J. L. C., Reg. 32,398."

In the course of his comments he said:

"Beneath the surface of the ludicrous situations a helpful truth impressed us, namely, that we possess within ourselves far greater power than we are aware of. The seemingly weak-kneed Boy, so utterly dependent at first on the talisman Grandma jokingly gave him, threw it away when he finally realized he did not need it. We are greatly indebted to Harold Lloyd, not only for entertaining us so enjoyably, but for giving us in this picture a something of far greater value."

"Every actor in the film was judiciously chosen for the type of character he represented. There was the brow-beating young bully, a pest we have all encountered, and when the Boy at last dumped him into the well we had the comforting feeling that some of our own old scores were being settled."

"Harold Lloyd realizes that the name 'art' is derived from a word signifying 'work,' and, in consequence, his art is a growing thing, tireless work making each of his pictures an improvement on the preceding one."

"From one who knew him as a boy we learn something that seems to have been overlooked by his press agents, namely that, added to other qualities that make for success, he possessed particularly the faculty of being satisfied with little and of getting the most out of everything, however slight. If, for instance, he had no other plaything at hand than a piece of string, he would find numerous interesting ways of utilizing it. A pencil and a few pieces of blank paper were sufficient material to keep him interested and amused for hours. There may be a message in this bit of information for us, who perhaps have never been satisfied with any but luxuries and amusements, expensive, perhaps, beyond our means."

Hodkinson Feature Commended

"Affairs of Lady Hamilton" Praised at Successful Opening in Boston House

THE Boston newspapers were in one accord in their comments on the Richard Oswald Production, "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," distributed by Hodkinson, which had a successful opening at the Park theatre, Boston, Mass., recently. This success was achieved after a remarkable exploitation campaign conducted for several weeks preceding the showing of this production.

The Boston Daily Advertiser says, "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" is refreshingly different from most of the films vouchsafed to us. The hero of this film is a real hero, lifted out of history. He is none other than Lord Horatio Nelson, admiral extraordinary. His morals are not above reproach. He doesn't look as though he stepped from an advertisement for Kippy Klothes. In fact, in the latter part of the film, he appears minus an arm and an eye. Yet, thus handicapped, he proves a conquering lover."

The Boston Evening Transcript had this to say, "Costumes and settings create an atmosphere of reality and a thoroughly exceptional cast contributes a series of brilliant impersonations. The producers were fortunate in their choice of Liane Haid to play the adventuress.

"The picture is well worth seeing. What, with impassioned love scenes, soul stirring moments and thrilling episodes, there is not much more a picture could possess."

The Boston Telegram says, "A novel picture is 'The Affairs of Lady Hamilton,' and one which will linger long in the minds of those who are fortunate enough to see it."

These reviews, regarding the opening of "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" at the Park theatre, are just a sample of many favorable comments that are being made daily regarding this romantic story in the life of England's great naval hero.

"Ben Hur" Favorites Receiving Votes

The daily mail received by Robert McIntyre, casting director for Goldwyn, still bulges with votes cast in the "Ben Hur" voting contest. Valentino is still in the lead, with James Kirkwood running him a close second.

Song "If Winter Comes" in Music Houses

COPIES of the new "If Winter Comes" song, published by M. Witmark & Sons, New York, have been received by the music houses. This song is dedicated to the author of the story and commemorates the William Fox screen version of the novel.

On the title page is a personal letter from A. S. M. Hutchinson to William Lee Dickson and Frederick W. Vanderpool, the lyricist and the composer of the song.

"Hearts Aflame" Tie-up After Forest Fire

Leon Victor, Metro exploitation representative, consummated a timely tie-up last week which affected the entire state of Maryland and brought a great deal of attention to the Metro-Louis B. Mayer attraction, "Hearts Aflame."

Following a severe forest fire in Anne Arundel County, near Baltimore, last week, President Harding and Governor Ritchie of Maryland issued a proclamation establishing Forest Protection Week during April 22-28. The local Metro exchange was then booking "Hearts Aflame," and its exploitation man made immediate use of his opportunity.

W. B. Greeley, chief of the United States Forestry Board at Washington, had viewed "Hearts Aflame" in New York privately and had acclaimed it as having real value in the prevention of forest fires. This fact Victor brought to the attention of the local and state authorities, which, coupled with the Forest Prevention Week, gave the picture unusual standing and prestige in the state.

"Hearts Aflame," originally published as a Harold Titus novel under the title, "Timber," is a Reginald Barker production under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices. Percy Hilburn photographed the production.
